I am delighted to see the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) participating in the debate. It is the first occasion on which she has led a debate for the Opposition. I took part with her in the first World Service debate about the Tory green initiative.

I want to throw not a pebble but a pellet into the pool. I have been something of a financial agnostic in terms of waste-derived fuel. I have no argument with anything that has been said tonight about incineration, but I have serious doubts about the economy of first pelletising rubbish before it is burned.

Although I can appreciate the desire to find some use for the contents of our rubbish bins, as my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mr. Rost) mentioned, there is considerable concern about the problem of dioxins. I direct the attention of my hon. Friend the Minister to the Department of Energy's energy technology support unit, which views refuse-derived fuel primarily as an energy source rather than a method of waste disposal. It has written to the Department of the Environment and said that there should be a temporary exemption from the conditions of this EEC directive on emissions from combustion of waste to allow appropriate control measures to be assessed.

It has stated that refuse-derived fuel will be burned in industrial scale combusters, designed or modified for its properties, and set up to minimise emissions to levels equivalent to those generated by combustion of oil, gas or coal when conforming with existing pollution control requirements of member states for those fuels.

We have had to take considerable advice from the Warren Springs laboratory, and we have had to install some tall chimneys to allow waste-derived fuel pellets to be consumed in boilers, because of the problem of dioxins. It is extraordinary that we have an environmental initiative for the conversion of the contents of our rubbish bins to pellets for combustion purposes, but, at the same time, we are saying that we need some relaxation of emission controls to allow those pellets to be burned.

Surely that is an extraordinary state of affairs. Because of sulphur dioxide and nitrous oxide emissions from power stations, we are spending £170 million cleaning up the emissions from 12 of our major coal-fired power stations, but, to start on this method of converting rubbish, we are considering relaxing emission controls. That is contrary to our policy of cleaning up the environment. We ought to address that matter seriously before adopting the EC directive.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This has been a constructive, useful and wide-ranging debate. I hope that hon. Members will bear with me if I return to the subject of the draft directive before spreading more widely.

In her remarks, the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley), whom I too welcome to her position, suggested that the Government had not taken many steps on pollution, especially air pollution. But we are bringing forward a coherent and integrated series of measures to deal with waste. With regard to air pollution, many plans were in hand well before the draft directive was produced.

For some time we have been aware of the need to strengthen controls on incineration. We had already proposed domestic changes before the directives appeared. In December 1986, in the first major review of air pollution control policy for 30 years, we produced a consultation paper that proposed that municipal waste incinerators should be included with new processes to be brought under the control of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. This would involve their becoming subject to a system of prior authorisation and being required to use the best practical means to prevent or render harmless any noxious or offensive emissions.

The responses to this 1986 consultation paper generally welcome the proposal and are very much in line with these measures. We aim to lay regulations before the House shortly to implement the change. The requirements of the new plant directive are generally in line with those standards that Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution would have imposed on new plants in any case, through its well-established system of national consultation with industry on the best practical means of minimising air pollution from each category of scheduled plant.

Ms. Walley: I am grateful to the Minister for giving way on this point about air pollution.

In the light of her remarks about air pollution measures, is the Minister concerned about the letter that I have here from the National Society for Clean Air, which suggests that the reorganisation inside Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution might well lead to a further reduction in morale, and resignations? Can the Minister assure me that those concerned in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution with air pollution will continue at the same strength?

Mrs. Bottomley: Indeed I can, most robustly. The pollution inspectorate has been mentioned often during the debate. I want to make two things clear. First, when we are dealing with pollution that goes into the air, into the land or the water, it is essential to have an integrated approach. The purpose of the proposals planned for our green Bill is that we should have legislative backing for an integrated system of pollution control.

Secondly, there have recently been a further 13 appointments to the pollution inspectorate, many of which are to deal with wastes. I am convinced that I can reassure the hon. Lady robustly on those fronts.

There has been some discussion about the relative merits of landfill and incineration as means of waste disposal. My hon. Friend the Member for Erewash and many others have referred to that. Properly controlled and conducted, landfill is a safe and dependable means of disposal for most of our domestic waste, about 88 per cent. of which is disposed of in that manner. Some 10 per cent. of domestic waste is incinerated, but, as I have explained, all the municipal plants were built in the late 1960s and early 1970s and now need updating or replacing.

We expect to see landfill continue as the main disposal method, but we want improved operating standards, which means a concentration on larger sites and the disappearance of the small bad-neighbour sites. Unit costs for landfill are bound to rise, but that is a price that local authorities must be prepared to pay in the interests of the environment.

In some regions where there appears to be a prospective shortfall of landfill sites towards the end of the century, there are already suggestions that a new wave of municipal incinerators may come on stream, as well as those which will be required to replace plants in some areas as the new standards have to be met.

There is no doubt—I appreciate the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash who is particularly knowledgeable and experienced in this area—that the new plants will need to be planned on a large scale and developed to highly sophisticated standards to be economically and technically viable, which will require co-operation and planning between local authorities. There are many interesting and important prospects there for co-operation with the private sector.

One feature of the new plant is bound to be the inclusion of suitable methods of recovery of heat or the generation of power. At present that is a feature of only five of our municipal incinerators. In the rest of Europe 80 per cent. of domestic refuse incinerators have some form of heat recovery. We need to catch up on such possibilities for turning our refuse to good use when the opportunity arises, and I know that that will be greatly welcomed.

Many hon. Members have had a rather sterile debate about whether waste disposal should be undertaken by the private or the public sector. It is essential that, wherever waste is disposed of, and whichever sector is responsible, it must be regulated properly and the regulations must be properly enforced. Often, after a particular incident, proper steps are not taken and enforced.

The Government's proposed new legislation for waste generally proposes the establishment of waste regulation authorities to take over from the waste disposal authorities. We are not removing that duty from local authorities. Those who suggest that the Government want to see the end of local government should take heart from the fact that, as a result our consultation on which was the most appropriate authority to deal with waste regulation, we have decided that the local authority is the right and proper one.

It is essential that the site dealing with the waste, whether it is an incinerator, a landfill site or anything else, should be properly regulated. There is no question of turning a blind eye on the private sector any more than on the public sector. That is what the public expect, and that is what the Government will make sure they receive.

The hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) spoke about hospital incinerators, on which some hon. Members have questioned our intentions. They are, along with other specified waste schemes, specifically excluded from the remit of the directive, but we expect further proposals on that from Brussels. As part of the changes that we are making for domestic reasons, we intend to bring large clinical waste incinerators, those capable of burning more than 1 tonne of waste an hour, under HMIP control immediately. We further propose to strengthen control on all smaller clinical waste incinerators. I hope that that will reassure the hon. Gentleman.

The hon. Gentleman also referred to paper recycling. His remarks will be noted by many. We are particularly interested in paper recycling and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth), is currently organising a series of initiatives to draw attention to the increased prospects of that business and to develop it further.

The hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) made a series of remarks with not all of which I agree, although I hope that he will take confidence from the increased staffing at HMIP. With regard to his questions about emissions of motor vehicles, this is one of the few subjects about which I speak from time to time to the

[Mrs. Bottomley]

Under-Secretary of State for Transport. Indeed, I hope he will feel some hope that the campaign for unleaded petrol is now taking off and meeting with a great measure of success.

These two draft directives extend the useful work achieved by the Community through the air pollution framework directive in encouraging harmonisation of environmental controls on key sectors of industry. They offer significant benefits to the environment of Britain and to the Community and I have pleasure in commending them to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House takes note of European Community Documents No. 5142/88 and the Supplementary Explanatory Memorandum submitted by the Department of the Environment on 20th February 1989 on air pollution from municipal waste incineration plants; and calls upon the Government to support the introduction of appropriately stringent controls on air pollution from such plants.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS, &c.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith pursuant to Standing Order No. 101(5) (Standing Committees on Statutory Instruments, &c.)

INDUSTRIAL TRAINING

That the draft Industrial Training Levy (Construction Board) Order 1989, which was laid before this House on 30th January, be approved.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW

That the draft Grants to the Redundant Churches Fund Order 1988, which was laid before this House on 7th November 1988, in the last Session of Parliament, be approved.

NORTHERN IRELAND

That the draft Matrimonial and Family Proceedings (Northern Ireland Consequential Amendment) Order 1988, which was laid before this House on 1st December, be approved.

That the draft Matrimonial and Family Proceedings (Northern Ireland) Order 1988, which was laid before this House on 1st December, be approved.—[Mr. Dorrell.]

Question agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS (SERVICES)

Ordered,

That Mr. Barry Porter be discharged from the Select Committee on House of Commons (Services) and Mr. Tristan Garel-Jones be added to the Committee.—[Mr. David Hunt.]

Electrical Appliances (Plugs)

Motion made and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Dorrell.]

11.31 pm

Mr. David Sumberg (Bury, South): Most Adjournment debates are very specific—specific to a constituency, specific perhaps to an individual situation. Many of them involve complex issues where the hon. Member speaking requires a great deal of time, probably more than he gets, to marshal his case and advance his arguments. But my debate tonight raises a matter that vitally affects every household, every person, in the country and yet is a matter of the utmost simplicity. It concerns safety in the home.

The common myth is that, when we have shut our doors to the outside world, we have immediately entered a safe and secure environment. Nothing, I am afraid, could be further from the truth. Putting aside for one moment the dangers that come from criminality—the burglar, the housebreaker or perhaps even worse—the true position is that in terms of personal safety the home is one of the most dangerous places to be.

One of the most common forms of accident is that which occurs in the home itself. These home-based accidents arise from many causes, but a small though significant proportion involve electrically powered products. Some arise from the goods themselves, because of faulty manufacture. Others, though, are the result of faulty wiring of the appliance to the plug that connects the machine to the electricity circuit.

Every year in this country there are approximately 2,000 non-fatal accidents involving electric plugs, which necessitate medical treatment. The June 1988 edition of "Care in the Home", published by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents, illustrates some of the more tragic cases. A 55-year-old woman died when she touched a live washing machine because there was a loose wire in the plug. A boy of 14 died using an electric iron because the earth wire in the plug touched the live pin, making the iron live. These are tragedies that could possibly have been avoided, particularly where the cause was the faulty wiring of the plug to the electrical appliance.

Frankly, I am surprised that there are not more such accidents, because an estimated 75 million domestic household appliances are sold in the United Kingdom every year. I say this because some of the evidence of ignorance in these matters is a little startling.

A random survey of 45 homes carried out by the Consumers Association found that 43 had at least one that was incorrectly wired and 25 per cent. of those plugs also had wrongly fitted fuses. A larger and more independent survey involving 1,000 people found that 198 of those questioned—nearly 20 per cent.—did not know how to fit a plug to an electrical machine. It also showed that 761 of those people did not have a clue about the correct fuse rating required for the electrical appliance concerned.

To their credit, the Government have not stood idly by. They have recognised that they have a role to play and have acted to deal with part of the problem. The Plugs and Sockets Etc. (Safety) Regulations 1987—not exactly bedtime reading, but very important none the less—now require all 13 amp plugs supplied in Britain to be approved by an authorised body. That is a major advance. They deal with potentially lethal plugs which were previously allowed into this country from abroad. I welcome those regulations.

However, while those regulations are designed to ensure that plugs that are sold are safe, they do absolutely nothing to overcome the problems inherent in the faulty wiring of a plug by a consumer. No matter how good or safe the plug, it is of little use if the person who wires the plug to an electrical appliance does it badly or incorrectly.

I can do no better than quote the consumer safety unit at the Department of Trade and Industry, which noted in a report in 1984:

"The connection of a flexible cord to a mains plug by an unskilled user is fraught with danger."

Mr. Deputy Speaker, you may welcome the arrival of a new domestic appliance at home with the confidence that you can respond to your wife's request that the plug should be fitted with ease and safety. If that is so, you have my admiration. I am not in that happy position. The question of who is to fit the plug in my home is a matter of spirited debate, which I inevitably lose. I certainly fall into the category and the description of the "unskilled user" in the report from the Department of Trade and Industry.

The answer to the problem in my house and in thousands of houses around the country is very simple and there to be taken. We do not simply need safe plugs; we must have safe plugs and safe wiring of plugs to the appliances. That can be achieved very easily, quickly and simply by compelling the provision of moulded-on plugs by manufacturers of household electrical equipment. That would ensure that plugs are fitted correctly and safely, and are equipped with the correct fuse rating and that the purchaser is saved the time, effort and most importantly the potential danger, of having to fit the plug to the equipment himself.

Moulded on plugs are undoubtedly safer because all the internal wire connections are crimped. There are no internal terminal screws which can be worked lose and no cord grip screws to pull away. The only working part accessible to the consumer is the fuse, which is mounted externally and which can be changed in seconds in the event of a fault.

Faced with what I believe are those compelling facts, what are the arguments that have persuaded my hon. Friend the Minister, and in fairness his predecessor, to take no action to force manufacturers to fit moulded plugs to electrical equipment along the lines that I have suggested? The first argument which I know will have great appeal to my hon. Friend the Minister is that all this smacks of the nanny state and that we would be imposing a burden on the manufacturers to compensate for the sins of the purchasers who should be able to fit plugs properly to electrical appliances. Is it not such a simple job, runs that view, that it is no part of Government's function to ensure what people should, or more properly should not, leave off their products?

Such an argument, which has its place in certain circumstances and with which in some cases I would have sympathy, ignores the fact that the Government determined the standards that should apply to plugs. It ignores, too, the simple fact that those who purchase electrical products may not have the understanding, skill or competence to fit plugs to the appliances. They may be elderly, blind or physically or mentally disabled. They may have arthritis or similar diseases in their hands. What are they to do? They can rely on a friend, go to the expense of engaging an electrician or, worse, try to do the job themselves, perhaps inadequately or unsafely.

All that is unnecessary. The potential dangers are unnecessary when the requirement for the plug to be fitted before purchase could easily be done on the production line in the factory at no additional expense, for the plug would be paid for when the machine or appliance was purchased, rather than at a later stage.

The second argument against my proposal is similar to the first. It is that it imposes compulsion rather than encouragement on manufacturers to fit moulded plugs. The problem with merely encouraging them, rather than effectively telling them, to do so—leaving it to their discretion—is that manufacturers are unlikely to feel that they should do it if other manufacturers will offer a marginally cheaper product by not fitting the moulded plug.

By requiring all manufacturers to fit moulded plugs to their products, we would ensure a common cost base line, giving no advantage to any manufacturer and, above all, providing a service to all purchasers.

The argument which the Minister has already used against my proposal—he used it when replying to questions in the House in December—is that between 5 and 10 per cent. of households still use the old 15 amp round pin plug and socket. For those households, he said, there could be a problem of expense and inconvenience.

I understand that official statistics were last collected by the Electricity Council about 10 years ago, when figures similar to those mentioned by the Minister were found; 92 per cent. of homes, the council said, had 13 amp square pin plugs and 8 per cent. had round plugs. But those are old figures on which to base a view. Figures released in 1984, only five years ago, by the Electrical Installation Equipment Manufacturers' Association showed that only 3·6 per cent. of its sales were for the old 15 amp system, and that figure is likely to be considerably less five years on, in 1989.

I am sorry if my proposal would cause some inconvenience to a tiny proportion of households, but the Government have rightly acted in other areas of policy when it has been right to do so for the majority. And even for the small minority who would be adversely affected, the safety argument is overriding.

A number of manufacturers in this country on a voluntary basis now fit moulded plugs to their products, but they are a small proportion and, generally, we are at variance with the practice overseas. Moulded-on or pre-wired plugs are standard in most other parts of the world—in the United States, in Australasia and in the Common Market—but here in Britain we stick to the same old obstacle course for any consumer who buys an electrical product.

It is ironic that the Minister's Department is rightly proclaiming the need to get with it for 1992, to have common European standards and to follow EC directives, sometimes at considerable inconvenience to our people, yet here is a proposal which would be of tremendous advantage and where we should be following our European friends.

If I had suggested to the Minister before he bought his last motor car that it would come without tyres and that before he could use it he would have to buy the tyres in another shop, take them home and fit them himself, he would have regarded such a proposal as absolutely barmy.

[Mr. David Sumberg]

That is how I and the majority of people, particularly housewives—this affects them greatly—regard the present situation with electrical appliances and the need to fit plugs to them.

Tonight, my hon. Friend has a chance to act. He may recall a programme from years ago, when we were all much younger, called "Housewives' Choice". My hon. Friend has had a distinguished parliamentary and European parliamentary career. He has been given many names by the Press Gallery, some favourable, others less so. If he is determined to act positively tonight in the way that I have asked him to, he will for ever more be known in this place as the "Housewives' Choice".

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Eric Forth): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) on obtaining this Adjournment debate, and pay tribute to his commitment, and persistence in pursuing this matter. In view of his sincere interest and involvement in it, I hazard that he will continue to do so in future.

My hon. Friend has conceded that any proposal of the sort he has made would result in the introduction of new legislative burdens on industry and would fly in the face of one of the Government's prime vehicles for the creation of wealth—that is, deregulation. My hon. Friend recognised that difficulty. The objective is to stimulate enterprise and individual initiative to meet the demands of the market place by removing, when necessary, controls on the trading environment and in doing so giving the consumer the widest choice at the price he is prepared to pay.

It is only in exceptional circumstances that there can be any departure from this approach. Considerations of safety could be such a case, but only when the market does not provide sufficient protection for the consumer. The safety issue in this instance is that the provision of electrical appliances without plugs attached could lead to consumers placing themselves at risk from the wrong connection of the plug—a point that my hon. Friend covered in some detail.

The results of surveys of domestic households have not shown up any significant number of poor or incorrectly wired plugs. The important point is that, despite such instances, the evidence shows that a very small number of accidents which involve plugs occur. In the latest year for which home accident surveillance system figures are available—1986—of the total of about 100,000 accidents reported by the twenty participating hospitals, only about 82 are identified in which plugs or adaptors were specifically involved.

The general injury record has to be seen in the light of the growing number of electrical appliances used in domestic households over the past ten years and the consequent demand for plugs. The plug manufacturing industry acknowledges some growth in output over the period and estimates that, in the past year alone, approximately 50 million to 60 million plugs were manufactured. In addition, there is a large net import of a further 10 million to 15 million plugs. Twelve million of those were fitted to appliances before sale, leaving a balance of nearly 60 million plugs of the re-wirable type coming new on to the market.

A proportion of the total would be for industrial use, but there is no escaping the fact that of this large number of plugs, a substantial number must be connected to their appliances by domestic customers—and that only represents the plugs added in the year. I would hesitate to estimate the number actually in use and the number that have been switched from one appliance to another in the year, but given these vast numbers compared to the number of related injuries, it is difficult to conclude that the process of connecting a plug needs a code of practice to ensure its safety—in spite of my hon. Friend's figures. None the less, we are not complacent and want to continue to strive to improve the situation. But I must stress that the intrinsic safety of electrical products and particularly the aspects concerned with wiring the plugs are not a major source of concern compared with other hazards to users.

My hon. Friend asserted that this matter was a cause of major concern among housewives, but produced no evidence to support his assertion. It is not unreasonable to say that, in a matter as important as this, assertion is not enough—evidence is required.

This leads on to the issue of whether other factors may already be beginning to contribute to an overall improvement in safety in this area. My hon. Friend generously acknowledged the introduction of the Plugs and Sockets Etc. (Safety) Regulations 1987. We would claim that they effectively cleared the market of unsafe and poorly constructed plugs, certainly those of new purchase, which in the past have been considered to be a contributory factor in a number of accidents.

In addition, harmonisation of product safety in Europe has also led to technical developments which do not rely on the earth connection to provide protection against electric shock. Inadvertent contact between the earth and the live connection in the plug has featured frequently in accidents of this type. The most notable feature is that the flexible cord that connects the appliance to the supply has only two cores instead of three, so there is less potential for miswiring the plug. The use of non-metallic or plastic enclosures has has also provided more protection.

Finally, a substantial and growing number of consumer products is available on the market place with plugs fitted, if consumers wish to make that choice of product. It is true that most of these products tend to be at the higher cost end of the market, but the impetus is there to encourage this development towards the lower end. I shall return to that in a moment.

Apart from the safety aspects, the universal adoption of fitted or moulded on plugs for electrical appliances and goods would have adverse economic implications for some consumers. My hon. Friend touched on this. The most significantly disadvantaged group would be consumers whose mains electrical system is still on the old round pin standard. Here there is slight dissent between myself and my hon. Friend. I stick to the estimate of 5 to 10 per cent. of households. My hon. Friend produced new figures which we will want to consider in order to check which are more reliable.

My hon. Friend might concede that, even if the figure were as low as 3·5 per cent., that would still leave a large number of households with round pin plugs. Those would tend to be older houses, probably with occupiers in lower income groups. Therefore, we must give special consideration to the hardship which might be caused by the arbitrary introduction of fixed plugs which would not be suitable for round pin sockets. Although we may disagree slightly about the numbers, I still believe that we should pay close attention to the needs of these people, because they might be the most vulnerable if there were to be an arbitrary change.

Other arguments revolve around the inflexibility of the length of lead which might be introduced by my hon. Friend's proposals. It is noticeable that we are talking about the more expensive products, where the cost represents a smaller proportion of the total cost. That may be accompanied by a marketing promotion effort. The relative cost burden of my hon. Friend's proposal on the less expensive appliances would be even greater. Again, we must take that very much into consideration. The fact that consumers are perhaps more conscious of cost than convenience in that segment of the market and that the manufacturers' response to market behaviour is to provide what the consumer wants—a cheaper product with no attached plug—should also be borne in mind.

As I mentioned earlier, there are signs that manufacturing industry is moving in the direction of attaching plugs where it feels that there is a consumer demand that it can meet. That is very much in tune with what my Department and the Government feel should take place. I recognise that some sectors of the appliance industry will believe that they would be at a competitive disadvantage without the support of some kind of mandatory prescription. I do not consider that a mandatory approach would be justified at this stage, but this does not exclude the possibility of exploring other methods by which industry might, in collaboration with the distribution or retail sector, provide such a service to meet public demand. I am sure that the industry will take note of the points my hon. Friend has made in the debate.

I hope that the debate will allow further consideration to be given not just by the House but by the industry to the points which my hon. Friend has made and to the points which I have made in reply in the hope that there will be a voluntary move, not involving compulsion, towards a solution which will help consumers and the industry alike.

Question put and agreed to.

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITION

Motorway (Finsbury Park)

9.34 am

Sir Hugh Rossi (Hornsey and Wood Green): I beg to ask leave to present a petition to this House on behalf of my constituent Mr. Brian Simpson, which recites that he has suffered considerable and continuing hardship. In 1988 consultants employed by the Department of Transport published a London assessment study which, inter alia, involves the creation of a motorway running through my constituency between Highgate Wood and Finsbury Park. The publication of those proposals has caused widespread blight. In particular, the petitioner states that he owns two houses in the vicinity of the intended motorway, both of which now cannot be sold except at exceptional and substantial capital loss. Moreover, a bridging loan on one of the properties that he is unable to sell has already cost him some £14,000 and is continuing to increase at a high rate.

The Minister has refused to implement circular 15/69, which it is believed empowers him either to declare that he does not wish to proceed with the proposals or to pay compensation to those who have suffered hardship. The petition reads:

Wherefore your Petitioner prays that your honourable House request the Secretary of State for Transport to act urgently to end the aforementioned blight, and request him to submit immediate proposals to bring financial relief and compensation to your Petitioner and to all other people who are suffering financial loss or other hardship arising from the blighting effects of options in the London Assessment Studies.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will every pray, Etc.

That is signed by Brian Simpson of 36 Milton park, Highgate, London N6.

To lie upon the Table.

Orders of the Day

Control of Pollution (Amendment) Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

[Relevant document: First Report of the Environment Committee of Session 1988-89 on Registration of Carriers of Controlled Waste (HC 222).]

9.37 am

Ms. Joan Ruddock (Lewisham, Deptford): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

First, I would like to thank all of those who have helped me with the Bill, especially the officers of the London Waste Regulation Authority, who have played a major part in turning an idea into a substantial Bill. I would like to thank them and the chair of the authority for their help and support. I have had, too, the co-operation of the Department in this matter and the benefit of a consultation exercise that it carried out prior to the drafting of my Bill.

I thank, too, my sponsors, several of whom are long-standing campaigners against this environmental blight, and especially, the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi), who chairs the Select Committee on the Environment, which this week published a report commending my Bill. I am pleased that there is such strong agreement in the House on the need to tackle the growing menace of dumping waste, or fly tipping, as it is more commonly called.

I would like to thank, too, the Institution of Environmental Health Officers, the Royal Society of Chemistry and the Road Haulage Association Ltd. for their support.

For those hon. Members who may not be familiar with the term fly tipping, I shall provide a brief explanation. Fly tipping is the dumping of waste or rubbish on land without the landowner's consent. It is also usually taken to mean the dumping of waste on ground even where there is consent, but the site is unlicensed.

Different kinds of waste are fly tipped. At the lower end of the spectrum there is the domestic waste fly tipper. That is the person who takes black-bag waste, as it is known in the trade, not to a council site, but to be dumped on the nearest available space on the street corner. That dumping is not the subject of this Bill. It is irregular, the amounts are small and registration procedures would be inappropriate as a means of dealing with it. That does not mean that all hon. Members would not be pleased if we could end that littering of our environment. The Royal Commission on the environment recently reported on the management of waste and recommended that the problems of domestic fly tipping could be dealt with by more effective public information campaigns, by publicising the civic tips and through the provision of more community skips. We would all welcome those provisions.

The problems of fly tipping are far more serious than the occasional dumping of a three-piece suite or fridge. There are two types of fly-tipped waste; commercial or industrial waste which is collected by a waste disposal contractor who has been employed specifically to get rid of it, and demolition spoil, which is collected in tipper trucks. Most of us would know that as building rubble.

A contractor is paid by the producer of the waste, perhaps a building firm, to take waste from a site. Very often, the prime contractor sub-contracts and there may be a long chain of sub-contractors. It is extremely difficult at the point of production of the waste to know exactly where and how it will be disposed of. The two types of waste that I have described are creating major environmental and health hazards, particularly in our capital city, and on an increasing scale. This problem is costing the local authorities millions of pounds a year to clean up the mess.

In London, the boom in building works, in particular around docklands, has lead to fly tipping on an unprecedented scale. Up to 90 per cent. of the fly-tipped waste in London comes from construction sites. It may be dumped on roads, open spaces, car parks, industrial estates and even into people's back gardens or outside businesses.

Very often it is extremely difficult to discover who has dumped the waste. It is possible for anyone to obtain a vehicle and become a waste disposal contractor. Someone can engage in the business of removing waste from industrial or commercial sites without any insurance that the waste will be disposed of at a properly licensed disposal facility. It is therefore extremely difficult to monitor and control what is happening.

The problem is further exacerbated in the south-east by a shortage of landfill sites. In London in 1985, only 25 per cent. of hazardous waste could be disposed of within London's boundaries and 75 per cent. had to be taken outside. In some cases, that meant a journey as long as 60 miles to a landfill site in Oxford. The situation is worsening. The number of landfill sites is dwindling. The sites are becoming filled and we will need more sites to dispose of waste in that way. For many firms there is a great temptation to save costs and make more money by making more round trips and dumping rubble on street corners instead of taking it to the appropriate place.

The cost of disposing of waste in the proper manner is now about £200 a tonne. It is clear that the financial incentive to break the law is very strong. Hon. Members who represent south London constituencies and those from southern England as a whole will know that loads of docklands rubble is finding its way across the Thames on to our streets and open spaces.

In the preparation of this Bill, I had to ask whether this was simply a London problem. I needed to know just how widespread was the problem. Hon. Members may be surprised to learn of the scale of the problem and the costs involved. The London Waste Regulation Authority estimates that there are more than 1 million tonnes of fly-tipped waste on the streets of London at any one time. It would cost local authorities about £5 million to dispose of that waste. That is clearly an enormous burden on ratepayers.

In Lewisham last year, the council removed 10,230 tonnes of builders' rubble. The cost to the ratepayer was £68,540. For a rate-capped authority in London that is an expense which we can ill afford. some parts of my constituency—namely New Cross and Deptford—have been plagued by illicit dumping for years. That dumping often occurs at night and is often accompanied by threats and personal intimidation of local residents. The council is most concerned about dumping on the roads because it has a duty to keep the roads clear. In addition, it estimates that a large, but unquantifiable, amount is dumped on areas adjacent to the highway.

Other parts of London are suffering equally. The LWRA now has a hot line which allows people to telephone to inform the authority that an illegal act has been spotted. Fifty-four offences concerning tipper trucks occurred in Brent in the first quarter of last year; there were 17 in Ealing, and 15 in Havering. In all, there were 258 incidents in London involving trucks, and other incidents involving skips and vans.

A small number of hazardous waste deposits were reported in the same period. Generally speaking—I must stress this—I am not concerned with hazardous waste. However, because of the mixture of rubble that is deposited, there is clearly a risk that some of it is hazardous. The LWRA estimates that around 15 per cent. of fly-tipped material could be toxic, containing such things as asbestos. Clearly, the problem is very serious.

The problem is not confined to London. South-east England also suffers. Without this Bill I believe that we would experience a dramatic increase in fly tipping if the construction of the Channel tunnel fixed link goes ahead.

However, I must admit that I was surprised to discover the extent to which fly tipping occurs elsewhere in the country. There are regular reports of dumping in Birmingham. Asbestos, drugs and even a dump of animal spleens have been discovered in Birmingham. An estimated £300,000 per annum is spent in Birmingham clearing up after fly tippers.

Fly tipping is not unknown even in our rural areas. in some of the most scenic parts of mid-Wales, fly tippers have damaged the evironment. In Surrey, rubbish was dumped alongside the green belt to a height of 25 ft until it threatened the very life of a copse of mature elm trees.

Such waste is a hazard and a spoiler for everyone who wants to enjoy the countryside or the local urban environment. To deal with the problem of waste disposal, authorities can and do prosecute fly tippers under current legislation. However, the law is inadequate in several respects. In London, prosecutions are made under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, primarily using sections 3 and 93. Other waste disposal authorities in London boroughs also use the Refuse Disposal (Amenity) Act 1978. Under section 3 of the Control of Pollution Act it is an offence to "deposit controlled waste on any land or cause or knowingly permit controlled waste to be deposited".

Section 93 of that Act gives the waste regulation authorities the power to request information relevant to the carrying out of its duty. The London Waste Regulation Authority has made extensive use of section 93 in an attempt to obtain information from owners of vehicles about incidents of fly tipping. However, it is extremely difficult to track down who is responsible.

On numerous occasions, the LWRA has served section 93 notices on so-called owners of vehicles and then has discovered that the vehicles are registered in the name of companies which are not themselves registered. Even when the company is registered, it has proved impossible to trace the directors, so the officers of the authority are severely hampered in their ability to use section 93 to stop fly tipping.

There is no doubt in my mind and in the minds of those who operate the controls that more prosecutions could be brought if evidence were easier to obtain. At present, unless fly tippers are caught in the act by the police, the authority or a reliable witness, it is impossible to prosecute. If at the time of the offence the vehicle registration number is noted down and traced, the driver may not be caught. If the driver is apprehended but runs away, there is no proof that he is responsible, and the law is being evaded in many ways. Even when the responsible person is caught and prosecuted, those of us trying to deal with the menace of fly tipping are disappointed that the fines are often minimal and do not act as a sufficient deterrent because the money paid to the court is more than recouped in another day's illegal activity.

Mr. Robin Squire (Hornchurch): I fully support the Bill. Does the hon. Member agree that the responsible waste disposal contractors are among the first to be calling for tougher action through their organisations, because their reputations are on the line?

Ms. Ruddock: The hon. Gentleman is absolutely correct. I have received a number of letters from major contractors who support the Bill, are delighted that it has been introduced and have already consulted the Government about other proposed measures. They are quite clear that stronger regulation is in the interest of legitimate trade.

The number of prosecutions is disappointing. There were 66 in 1984, 53 in 1985 and 70 in 1986; therefore, there is a great deal of work to be done.

My purpose in promoting the Bill was to provide a more satisfactory framework within which officers attempting to curb the menace of fly tipping could act more effectively. I must stress that the Bill does not replace section 3 of the Control of Pollution Act as a means of prosecuting fly tippers. The Bill does not address the problem of catching fly tippers in action; it acts as a deterrent by enforcing registration procedures. Under the Bill, a fly tipper may be prosecuted for not being registered, although it might still be difficult to catch people in the act of fly tipping. If a person were caught fly tipping and found not to be registered, he would suffer the double penalty of being prosecuted for non-registration and for fly tipping. I hope that the Bill will bring the operators of illicit disposal trucks under much closer scrutiny and therefore reduce fly tipping which, as the hon. Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) said, brings the legitimate waste disposal industry into disrepute.

Part I of the Bill amends the Control of Pollution Act by introducing a system of registration for carriers of controlled waste. Part II authorisies the impounding of vehicles suspected of having committed an offence under section 3 of the Control of Pollution Act when it has proved impossible to trace the owner of the vehicle. The definition of controlled waste in the Bill is the same as in the Control of Pollution Act:

"household, industrial and commercial waste or any such waste".

I should emphasise that the Bill applies to individuals and companies who run a business or make a profit by the carrying and disposal of waste. Therefore, the Bill raises no issue of civil liberties. There is no question that somebody moving personal domestic waste would be affected by the Bill, which seeks to deal with people who profit from moving waste.

The system of registration set out in the Bill is relatively simple. It is not intended to be a deterrent to legitimate small or one-person businesses. It provides that the carrier will supply to the waste regulation authority information about the business, the directors, the managers and partners, the address of the principal place of business, details of any waste disposal licence and unspent convictions. The authority would charge a fee for registration—I am sure that it will be a small fee—which would be introduced by regulation, and in return the carrier will receive a certificate.

The registration system will allow any person who is convicted of an offence related to waste disposal to be removed from the register, and it would then be illegal for that person to carry waste. That should reduce the number of illicit operators. The Bill gives a police officer, on the advice of the officer of the regulation authority, the power to stop a vehicle and require the driver to produce his authority for the transportation of waste. The Bill makes it an offence to carry waste without being registered, to supply false information to the authority, or to fail to supply and update information as required. Hon. Members will acknowledge that the registration scheme is relatively straightforward.

Part II of the Bill may be a little more contentious. I must inform hon. Members that, had we more time, we would have wished to consult much more widely. We had some difficulty in drafting part II, and I am conscious that it might not be perfectly drafted, but I hope that hon. Members will accept that any drafting errors can be adjusted in Committee.

The registration scheme will greatly aid the identification of illegal carriers of waste; in time, and given the diligence of the authorities, it should reduce the numbers of illegal operators. As I have said, vast sums of money are involved in those illicit operations, and I believe that the huge profits to be made from fly tipping will still induce some criminals to continue the practice. Those who persist are likely to be the most unscrupulous operators.

The advice I have received from the London Waste Regulation Authority officers and from the police, who are currently attempting enforcement in my own constituency, is that new measures are required to deal with the residue of offenders. Such a provision is made in the second part of the Bill. Impounding a vehicle may sound draconian to some right hon. and hon. Members, but the Bill presents it as a measure of last resort against those who organise their affairs in such a way as to circumvent existing law on pollution control. A vehicle will be impounded only if the waste enforcement officers cannot trace its owners, have applied to the courts and obtained a warrant, and are accompanied by a police officer. Impounding is justified in view of the immense cost that society pays as a consequence of the fly tippers' activities.

There are precedents for taking such action. New York city operates a similar law for offending fly tippers. There, the vehicle is not released until the fine has been paid—which is rather more draconian than my proposal. That action is taken with up to 1,000 vehicles per year.

I introduce this Bill to try to improve the quality of life for the ordinary people of my constituency and for the constituents of all right hon. and hon. Members in areas where fly tipping is a problem. Soon after I came to the House, tenants living on the Silwood estate in my constituency approached me in despair about gross pollution of the environment, both from fly tipping and from constant violation of licence conditions at several local waste transfer stations. Ten thousand tonnes of waste have been illegally dumped in the vicinity of that housing estate—tonnes and tonnes of rubble, concrete, wood, metal, rubber, glass and other hazardous material. Roads have been blocked, a new industrial estate has been severely blighted, and residents' lives have been made utterly miserable by airborne litter, dust, dirt and mud underfoot.

That is the hazardous environment in which the elderly and disabled walk with trepidation. It is the environment in which children face real danger in everyday play, and in which the law-abiding resident is affronted by gross squalor and decay. It is time that we gave the responsible waste regulation authorities more powers for dealing with that menace to people's lives and to their environment. I believe that my Bill offers them those powers.

10.2 am

Sir Hugh Rossi (Hornsey and Wood Green): I congratulate the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) not only on introducing this important Bill and on seizing her good fortune in the ballot to do so and not wasting it on something else, but on the way in which she presented her Bill to the House, with complete clarity and conviction.

The Select Committee on the Environment recently concluded an inquiry into the problems associated with the disposal and management of toxic waste. The Committee hopes to report to the House on or about 8 March, and it would be improper of me to anticipate the contents of that report, as I would risk placing myself in breach of privilege if I did so. Nevertheless, when the hon. Lady's Bill came to the Committee's attention, its members immediately agreed to anticipate their main report by extracting certain conclusions and presenting them to the House immediately, as a report on the particular problem of fly tipping. It is on that first report of the Environment Select Committee for the current Session, "Registration of carriers of controlled wastes: Recommendation regarding the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Bill", that I address the House.

I begin by reading the Select Committee's recommendation:

> "We welcome the proposals contained in the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Bill, both as the first stage of a more general 'duty of care' in waste management, and as a major contribution to tackling the problems of the illegal dumping of waste. We commend it to the House, and trust that it will have the support of Her Majesty's Government."

The Committee reached that conclusion because, when receiving evidence relating to toxic waste, it was told by the London Waste Regulation Authority in particular of the enormous problems faced by waste disposal authorities throughout the land because of illegal fly tipping.

The hon. Lady, in her excellent speech, said that 1 million tonnes of waste are on sites in London at any one time. I can add to that, because the Committee received evidence from the London Waste Regulation Authority that a survey of its north area revealed 1 million tonnes of illegally dumped waste—not waiting to be dumped, but already dumped—in Tower Hamlets alone.

That shows the measure of the task confronting local authorities in having to clear up illegally tipped waste. The cost of doing so is paid not directly by the producer of the waste or by the cowboy carrier who dumps it, but by the general body of ratepayers who, through their council, must ensure that the nuisance is cleared up.

Illegally dumped waste is not merely a nuisance; as the hon. Lady said, there is also real risk attached to it. The Select Committee found that between 15 and 20 per cent. of illegally dumped waste contains toxic or dangerous matter. The hon. Lady referred to asbestos. I can add to that and suggest that cyanides from gasworks are also being found, together with refrigeration units, which are a source of chlorofluorocarbons. If CFCs are left in refrigeration units that rust and rot away, they will find their way into the atmosphere and add to a problem with which we are all concerned—the depletion of the earth's ozone layer, which is currently the subject of great public debate. Serious connotations are attached to illegal fly tipping.

The hon. Lady mentioned also the inadequacies of the existing law. First, there is the difficulty of mounting a prosecution, establishing who dumped the illegal waste in the first place, and taking that person to court—all at the great expense of collating sufficient evidence to satisfy the magistrates as to the identity of the particular individual who disappeared in the middle of the night after dumping his load, and who was responsible for that illegal act.

Finally, there is the insult to the waste authority of the derisory level of fines imposed by magistrates. The Select Committee found that in dealing with water pollution as well as with illegal waste, magistrates do not understand the environmental consequences of the offences upon which they are asked to adjudicate. They impose derisory fines, which the perpetrators willingly and readily pay as a minor overhead expense in their overall operations.

One piece of evidence that greatly struck us during the inquiry shows that it is not merely a London problem. Mr. Khan, of the South Yorkshire hazardous waste unit, described a case in which a farmer was paid by a waste producer to get rid of a load of rubbish. It would normally have cost about £300 to dispose of that load. The farmer came along with a trailer, picked it up and got rid of it for £150. The waste producer was £150 in pocket. He paid cash, no questions were asked, and away went the load to be dumped.

The Yorkshire waste authority then had the problem of trying to trace the man. A passer-by happened to see what was going on, and tried to take the registration number of the vehicle, but could take only the first three letters. Hon. Members can imagine the time, trouble and expense of tracing all vehicles in that area with those first three registration letters, and eliminating them one by one. Eventually, somebody was traced and there was a prosecution.

What did the magistrates do? They fined him £100. At the end of the day, the cowboy was still £50 in pocket. It was not as big a profit—no doubt, tax-free—as he would have hoped for, but nevertheless a profit. That activity must be brought to an end.

The difficulty is that hon. Members cannot interfere in magistrates' judicial discretion. We cannot tell them what penalty to impose. We can certainly suggest minimum and maximum fines, but, within that band, it is mostly a matter for them, and, in what they consider to be mitigating circumstances, perhaps even the minimum fine is not adhered to.

The word must go out from the House to the Magistrates Association: "Please, please, rethink your policy on the penalties you impose for perpetrations of this kind, because they are serious—much more serious than you realise. Please read the excellent reports that are produced from time to time by the Environment Select Committee, and you may appreciate the problems with which the community is faced."

We concluded that the phenomenon of fly tipping occurs for four major reasons. First, the high cost of waste disposal means that the rewards for unscrupulous operators are high. Secondly, waste producers have no responsibility for their wastes if they pay a contractor illegally to dispose of them. Thirdly, it is difficult to identify and prosecute illegal disposers of waste. Fourthly, fines for convicted offenders are derisory. My next point relates to a consequence of fly tipping. To prevent fly tipping, because prosecution is so inadequate, waste disposal authorities have been inclined to reduce the costs of disposing of material in their landfill sites.

That leads to another problem. The lower the cost of operating a landfill site, the less technologically advanced is the operation of that site. That affects not only publicly owned sites but privately owned sites, because they must compete with the low price base set by local waste authorities. The result is that, although facilities are cheap, they are not being run as they should be to make them totally safe to the public. That is a disastrous consequence of fly tipping.

For those reasons, the Environment Select Committee willingly and with alacrity produced a special report to support the hon. Lady's timely Bill. The Bill endorses what the Department of the Environment is suggesting it will do about the duty of care. Having heard all the evidence, my Committee decided that some things should be done that have not been done hitherto. One was to impose a duty of care. That duty of care is intended to place upon all people who handle waste, from cradle to grave—the producer, the carrier, the ultimate receiver or disposer—a duty to ensure that that waste is properly handled in the right scientific, chemical, biological and technical way so that it is rendered harmless and presents no hazard to the public.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): My hon. Friend is talking about waste carriers and local authorities. He will know that there is a distinction between the rules of negligence insofar as they apply to local authorities and ordinary commercial people. Has the duty as it is expressed in the Bill taken account of the significant difference that exists in law, which would have quite an impact on the way in which it would work?

Sir Hugh Rossi: My hon. Friend is trying to draw me into the major conclusions of the main report, which is to be published on 8 May. I should be at some risk if I were to say what is in my mind. No doubt I would be arraigned and placed before the Bar for being in contempt of the rules of the House. Therefore, I ask my hon. Friend to compose himself. All will be revealed about my Committee's views on the duty of care on or about 8 March—whether it should be strict liability or subject to reasonable care, whether it should be a statutory offence or dealt with as a tort in civil law. I hope that my hon. Friend will find our conclusions to be of some use.

Ms. Ruddock: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the duty of care is still in the Department's mind? It is not part of the Bill, and it might be worth clarifying that point.

Sir Hugh Rossi: I entirely accept that. The Bill should be read in the context of the Government's proposals, on which the Environment Select Committee has commented.

The hon. Lady is right. She wishes to impose a duty of registration on carriers, which is important to enforce the duty of care. Unless it is known who is carrying waste, it is not known who is responsible and who should be penalised if the law is broken. Registration is a sine qua non of any duty of care that may be imposed subsequently in law.

The Committee considering the Bill will have to decide whether, as part of a licence the name, address and telephone number of the carrier should be emblazoned in large characters on the sides of every licenced vehicle so that it is known who is carrying what. If the police saw waste being carried in an unmarked vehicle, that would enable them to stop it and ask questions. If the vehicle were marked, the contractor would know that he was at risk if he was spotted dumping waste by someone who had a bit more than a registration number to jot down. That suggestion should commend itself, without reservation, to all hon. Members.

The hon. Member for Deptford has not gone far enough in part II of the Bill. I should be far more draconian, but the hon. Lady has the gentleness of an hon. Lady and perhaps does not want to be too hard or harsh. Perhaps it will be possible to make the impounding of vehicles permanent.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): Confiscation.

Sir Hugh Rossi: Confiscation. The Standing Committee will have to decide whether it needs the imprimatur of a magistrates' court to say that the police can seize a vehicle and deprive the contractor of it. It will have to decide whether the police will be able to confiscate or whether there will be recourse to the courts.

It may be a deterrent if magistrates have the ultimate right of confiscation. If an offender appears before them for the first time, a significant fine may be sufficient, but they may say to a repeated offender, "You have been warned and now you will lose your livelihood; we shall keep your vehicle." There will be problems with the method of sale of the vehicle, because I am sure that the authorities will be disinclined to become involved in the storage and sale of vehicles. I hope that that suggestion will help to strengthen the Bill, which needs to receive the full acclaim and approbation of the House.

Mr. Paul Boateng (Brent, South): As the first Labour Member to follow my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock), I congratulate her not only on introducing this important measure but on the way in which she did so. It exhibited the combination of style and elegance for which she is justly famous and the content that one has come to expect from her. She should be congratulated by all hon. Members, and I know that we are united in our approval of her and this measure.

My hon. Friend the Member for Deptford was diffident and perhaps over-modest about part II, which deals with impounding vehicles. Many who must live with the consequences of the activities of these cowboys believe that they should lose an arm or a leg or even worse, never mind their lorries. They experience, day in and day out, what dumpers do to their environment and living conditions. Dumpers are potential horsemen of the Apocalypse because CFCs, cyanide and the like are found in the debris that they dump. They create hazards for children living nearby and health hazards, because all too often rats and vermin are found among the waste materials that they dump with such impunity. They make the lives of people living on estates surrounding dumps a living hell.

Residents of the Brentfield estate in my constituency have experience of illegal fly tipping. They have found—this is characteristic of the way in which these cowboys operate—that a dump need not be a large site. Dumpers comb our cities and major conurbations looking for any site that will enable them to offload their illegal waste. A relatively small site in my constituency became increasingly congested as waste was dumped, initially by commecial interests but later, in the wake of the small-time illegal operators, came the additional problem of domestic waste. Domestic waste is not within the ambit of the Bill, but is drawn like a magnet to other waste that has been deposited.

One of the attractive features of the Bill is that it goes to the heart of the problem by empowering the impounding of vehicles. I concur entirely with the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) in commending the suggestion that the Standing Committee should go further, to make that impounding permanent.

I am not sure that I would leave impounding to the discretion of magistrates. All too often, for some strange reason, magistrates are not prepared to be as robust as they might be in dealing with this sort of activity. It is to be hoped that, with the greening of the Prime Minister, we shall see the greening of the magistracy. We hope that they will become as concerned and engaged in environmental issues as they are in other law and order matters. Dumping is a law and order matter, relating to the safety and security of our community. It is important that that safety and security should encompass the environment as well as other matters that traditionally have fallen within magistrates' ambit.

The Bill is a welcome measure. It will be especially welcome in London, which bears the brunt of this problem. I am sure that it will be welcomed by local authorities. I have the honour of serving on the Environment Select Committee, the distinguished Chairman of which is present this morning—the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green.

When one heard and considered the evidence of the London Waste Regulation Authority, it was clear how great was the scale of the problem in our city. It would be wrong to believe that that problem was somehow limited to the immediate geographical area surrounding the docklands developments. In fact, the cowboys are operating all over London; at present, we have a particular spate of such operations in north-west London and in my constituency.

Mr. Cash: Can the hon. Gentleman tell me whether the Committee considered the question of those places and premises in respect of which planning permission has been given and where buildings have been constructed where waste has been placed? How can one deal with that problem? It seems that many of the difficulties about the way in which gases, for example, have been escaping have been precisely that toxic waste has been put on sites where it should not have been.

Mr. Boateng: The hon. Gentleman has strayed somewhat from the ambit of the Bill. Under the Bill, if an unlicensed and unregistered carrier were to dump waste illegally anywhere, he would be subject to the rigour of the law wherever the rubbish was dumped, whether there was planning permission for building or not. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will find amplification of the point he has raised when he reads the report to which the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green referred.

The particular concern of local authorities in London and the reason why they welcome the Bill so much—I know that my own local authority, Brent, welcomes it—is that those authorities are already hard pressed in their capacity to cope with the problem of waste and refuse disposal in any event. When the waste that is the stock in trade of the cowboys, whom the Bill seeks to bring to book, is dumped in the local authorities' area, in addition to their concerns about domestic waste, that imposes an additional burden on the resources of the council and stretches already over-stretched departments throughout London.

They already have to cope with rate support grant which is all too often inadequate to cover the needs of the local authorities. When the cowboys are inhibited in their action, the authorities will be able to concentrate where they ought to be concentrating—on ensuring that domestic waste and waste arising from legitimate commercial activities is properly, efficiently, and regularly collected in a way that it is sometimes not, much to the justifiable consternation of local residents and ratepayers who have to meet the cost of the activities of the cowboys.

The Bill will be broadly and warmly welcomed by all who are concerned about the issue. It will not cause concern to anybody—except, of course, the cowboys and the illegal dumpers, who come from outside the areas in which they dump their loads. They do not have to live with the consequences, as do the residents of Brentfield estate, Alperton, Wembley and Harlesden, with whom I recently looked specifically at local sites that had been the subject of illegal tipping.

Tenants and residents associations throughout my constituency have shared their concern about the issue and they will welcome the Bill. Already, as they hear reports of our proceedings, the cowboys will be wringing their hands in angst and consternation at the likely loss of their vehicles. If that does anything to deter them now, my hon. Friend the Member for Deptford in proposing this Bill will already have done a good service, not only for the people of London, but for people up and down the country who care, as we all do, about their environment.

10.35 am

Mr. Gerald Bowden (Dulwich): I want to add my words of congratulations to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on proposing the Bill, and I want to say a brief word in support. The Bill, is concerned with the environment, with law and order and with the quality of life. We have produced more waste in this country without providing a proper means of managing waste disposal. We have worked on an ad hoc basis and on procedures that may have been appropriate before we became a give-away throw-away society, but which are not now. The means we have for disposing of household waste, building waste and industrial waste are more adapted to the Victorian era than to the 21st century. In its modest way, the Bill is a first step forward.

All of us have articles at home and items in the garden of which we want to dispose and with which the local waste disposal arrangements of the borough council are inadequate to deal. There has been a development of civic tips, which provide an opportunity for those of us who are mobile and who have our own vehicles in which to carry and deliver the waste, but there is a real problem for those who have to get rid of old mattresses and sofas and who do not know what to do with them. Any of us who have engaged in our own building works and who have hired a skip to take away the rubbish will know that one has to ensure that the skip is delivered in the morning and then one has to mount guard over it. I have had a skip delivered to my home the night before. Darkness fell, and in the morning the skip was full. I was clearly providing a service for the locality, but not a service that I wanted to provide.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): The hon. Gentleman highlights the problem of getting rid of bulky refuse. Many councils have depots where such refuse is accepted, but some people do not have the wherewithal to carry it to the dump. When I was the chair of the public services committee on Lambeth borough council, I had a scheme for siting skips at strategic points around the borough and taking them away regularly. They never went away until they were overflowing and they were filled quickly. Perhaps other councils could continue such schemes.

Mr. Bowden: I remember when the hon. Gentleman was the chairman of the Greater London council and if he achieved one thing well on that council, it was the recycling of rubbish. If one issue predominated in the chamber when he was there, it was a preoccupation with rubbish. On the point about civic tips, the hon. Gentleman brings to mind a point that I was going to make as a matter of principle. What is rubbish for one person may be of value to another.

I recall that during one period when there was inadequate removal of garden and domestic rubbish, my neighbour loaded up his car one morning with black bag and garden rubbish and went off to the Southwark civic tip. He went with his car loaded and returned with his car loaded because when he was at the tip, discovered that someone—I know not who—had thrown away a number of collapsible garden chairs of the type found in parks in the past. He came back triumphantly with the chairs, and gave me one of them, saying that there were more there. I immediately went and packed up my car with such rubbish as I could find and returned with a number of chairs, which are now among my garden furniture in London. The other day, I was interested to discover that similar items are available in Heal's and Habitat at a price of £50 or more.

The words "rubbish" and "waste" can be offensive, because what is rubbish to one person is not necessarily valueless to another. Perhaps we should be discussing rubbish or waste recycling, and ensuring, for example, that builders rubble, which it is completely inappropriate to throw on farmers' land or into someone's front garden, is recognised as just the sort of hardcore material required for building work elsewhere. The Bill seeks to address precisely this aspect—waste recycling and management—and I hope that in Committee a way will be found to ensure that this positive approach is made the starting point for further measures.

I shall say something about part II of the Bill because we are talking not about theoretical wishes but about pragmatic proposals with real strength, and about sanctions to be applied in dealing with this difficult problem. I was interested in the macho alliance between my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) and the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng), who sought to incite the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford to give her Bill more teeth. I shall not follow their example in advocating the confiscation forever of the fly tippers' vehicles, but the impounding of vehicles is an important sanction. If our friend, who had made about £50 out of his transaction after paying his £100 court fine, found that his vehicle was not available to him for a week or more, he might think very much more seriously before undertaking another contract.

Those in the waste disposal and building contracting business ought to have a duty to display on the side of their vehicle the name of their operation and the telephone number on which they can be contacted. They ought also to keep their number plates clean of dust and mud, which frequently obscure the identity of a vehicle.

I hope that these points will be considered in Committee and that we shall introduce pragmatic provisions that will do much to alleviate the problem, which, although small in comparison with other national issues, is very real to those who suffer the difficulties created by fly tipping. This Bill is a modest proposal, but it is a modest proposal that deserves the full support of the House and the Government.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I add my name to the list of those who are grateful to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) for introducing the Bill. I will reveal a secret—like other hon. Members, no doubt, I keep a list of Bills that I should like to introduce if I came high enough in the ballot. I share a constituency boundary with the hon. Member for Deptford, we also share the Silwood estate, and for many years we have shared the problems created by fly tipping and the dumping of waste and refuse. For obvious reasons, therefore, I have pursued the matter myself although I have never had the opportunity to pursue it in legislation.

I am happy that the hon. Lady has taken the opportunity to introduce a Bill, for which she has invited and obtained all-party support, which is a directly practical and useful measure. Some hon. Members who introduce private Members' Bills bite off more than they can realistically chew, to put it generously, but in this instance a practical problem needs to be addressed and the hon. Lady has sought a practical answer to it. I hope that we shall be able to proceed in a practical way and get the Bill on to the statute book as soon as possible. It is extraordinary that hon. Members on both sides of the House should be asking for the Bill to be toughened rather than weakened. That is an unusual coalition. We are all calling for greater penalties—from confiscation to impounding and clamping—to deal with the vehicles which are the direct cause of the problem. I hope that we shall have an opportunity to discuss those penalties.

[Mr. Simon Hughes]

London Members—particularly those who represent south London boroughs—predominate today because the figures show that Lewisham, Southwark and Tower Hamlets are the worst affected local authority areas. I have been pursuing the matter with officers of my local authority and with Ministers for the past two years, and I note that councillors in my borough have been pursuing it since May 1966. An article in the South London Press last March, when the matter was again high on the political agenda in south London, stated:

"In May 1966, then Southwark Council planning committee chairman Charles Halford claimed the council was 'being held to ransom' by the strong-arm methods of fly-tippers. His comments came as he announced a new offensive against illegal dumping which at that time was costing the council 'thousands of pounds a year' . . . Cllr. Halford instanced cases where tippers had ignored fences and gates and just reversed through obstructions to make their dumpings. And he called for assurances that contractors employed only recognised firms to get rid of rubbish in authorised dumps."

By August 1966, all four Southwark Members—there are now three—were calling for legislation to make it compulsory for all vehicles using carriers' licences to display the name and address of the registered owner. Since then, the problem has worsened and further legislation is urgently needed.

Those of us who represent inner-London constituencies can cite many instances in which dumping has resulted in practical day-to-day problems for innumerable people—both residents and other users of the area. Certain sites are of specific concern to me. I know that the Under-Secretary of State has been visiting sites. I should therefore like to place on record the areas in the north part of Southwark and Bermondsey that are still of concern. The Silwood estate is one. We have had a setback as a result of the planning inquiry decision, which prevented us from blocking up a road which has served as a rat run through which offending vehicles have passed. To his credit, the chief executive of Lewisham has publicly expressed his disappointment at the failure of that attempt to deal with the problem.

Around the Bonamy estate, which has been rebuilt—the Verney road, Varcoe road and Bramcote road area—roads have had to be closed by temporary order sought in a magistrates court. It has been impossible to do anything other than close those roads because a mountain of rubbish has completely blocked them. People taking their children to school have either found no access at all, or have had to walk well away from the pavement, at great risk to themselves and their children.

In Surrey Docks, where the London Docklands Development Corporation is at its most active south of the river, one of the main thoroughfares—Rotherhithe street—has often been completely impassable. The residents of estates find that they cannot use many of the roads in their areas. In the Redriff estate downtown in Surrey docks—shortly, I hope, to be transferred to housing association ownership—streets have suddenly been completely blocked and residents have found themselves cut off. There is also the question of important tourist sites such as Southwark cathedral, which is very important in heritage terms and for visitors as well as residents. Substantial construction work is under way in the area and people have had the gall to dump on the doorsteps of the construction sites where the work is being carried out.

I have one complaint to make against the Government and I hope that it will be accepted as being honest and fairly made. It is that new legislation and improvements to the existing legislation have been a long time coming. The consultation document was produced in September 1986 and I pursued the matter with my local authority in 1987. The cause of the problem was clear. The director of engineering and public works in Southwark wrote to me in 1987 stating:

"Regrettably fly-tipping is on the increase due, I believe, to (a) the increase in site development in and around the City, and (b) the cost of transporting and disposing of unwanted materials to proper landfill sites in the home counties, (c) the mushroom of 'cowboy' haulage contractors . . . I feel that no significant improvement to the situation will be made until . . . tighter legislation is introduced which is more readily enforceable and involves punitive fines and/or imprisonment.

As the Minister knows, I pursued this matter with her predecessor the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan), who is now her fellow Under-Secretary of State for the Environment. I asked specifically whether there could be legislation to ensure that one need not have to identify the driver concerned but only the vehicle, for criminal proceedings to be initiated. I pursued that issue throughout last year, as I am sure that other hon. Members also did. I was encouraged by a reply from the hon. Member for Lewisham, East which suggested that the Government were considering that matter.

The Minister's colleague and husband, the Minister for Roads and Traffic also has an interest in this and has said that he would be happy to follow guidance given to the Department of Transport by the Department of the Environment, which is the lead Department to which we look for substantial interest and positive support for the Bill. Our hand should be strengthened, not least because the Minister is now personally convinced of the need for further tough action. The Select Committee on the Environment has done the House a good service by reporting pre-emptively so that it could contribute to the debate. The Minister has made it clear that further legislation on this matter is on her departmental agenda. She was good enough to state in reply to a question that I tabled on Wednesday of this week:

"Plans to legislate for the registration of waste carriers were announced in June last year. Further proposals for legislation to make the registered keepers of vehicles used in fly-tipping liable to prosecution in certain circumstances are being considered following public consultation."—[Official Report, 23 February 1989; Vol. 147, c. 705.]

Now that the hon. Member for Deptford has given us the opportunity to legislate on both those matters, I hope that there will be no equivocation but that, speedily and with all-party agreement, we can further extend the Bill to bring other matters within its scope as soon as possible.

I pay tribute to the good work of the London Waste Regulation Authority and to that of the local authority enforcement officers. They do not have an easy time. It is not just that they do not have an easy time administratively—some of them have not had an easy time personally in carrying out their task. Three London sources have made a helpful contribution to the debate in London and tribute should be paid to them also. First, London Weekend Television's "The London Programme" produced an effective documentary in December 1987. Secondly, Thames Television produced an effective item on "Reporting London" in January this year. Thirdly, our local paper in south London, the South London Press, has been persistent in its campaigning. Where such credit is due, it is right that we should give it.

Those organisations have produced the evidence for those who did not already know it, that in trying to combat the damage and pollution that the tipping of illegal waste regularly causes, people have had to risk their safety, their security and even their lives. Those who make a phenomenal profit from driving and depositing waste will stop at nothing. I will give an example later of how urgent it is that we give the public servants trying to deal with the problem the necessary protection to ensure that they can do their jobs properly.

The two substantial propositions in the Bill should be supported. Like hon. Members of all parties, I hope that we can strengthen part II. This is a matter of immediate and general environmental concern. At present, there is enormous financial benefit for those who get away with illegal dumping. The hon. Member for Deptford rightly referred to the percentages involved. Few contractors will make the 25 mile trip out of London, which means a round trip of 50 miles because of the financial disincentive of additional cost in fuel and time. I am advised that a legal waste disposer makes about £400 per week profit in normal business, on the basis of four runs per day to an official site, but that an illegal dumper, who can save fuel and time and make more runs, makes about £1,300 per week. It is appalling that some of the people appointed by councils to help to clear the waste have themselves been guilty of acting illegally. I know that that has happened in Southwark. Many firms have absolutely no scruples. When the matter has gone to court, the fines have usually been about £50 or £100. That is absolutely nothing to the culprits. Indeed, it is regarded as a normal risk of the job —almost as a disbursement—and does nothing to deter the practice.

It takes only about a minute to empty a truck. At night —or even in the day—it is possible to arrive at a site, dump the load and be away within the minute, with only a minimal chance of being caught because a witness would have to identify the driver of the vehicle. Illegal tippers squeeze legal tippers out of the market by charging a lower rate for the job. Such people are making a phenomenal profit with extraordinary business practices, and many people who have tried to track down those who run such operations have found great difficulty in doing so.

The hon. Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) and others have emphasised the importance of regarding this as an environmental pollution issue. As they have also said, we should think in terms of recycling rubbish and waste. What is known in the trade as "muckaway" is a mixture of concrete, clay, steel rods, brick, and glass of which, on average, 20 per cent. comprises hazardous materials such as broken sheets of corrugated asbestos. Dangerous chemicals have also been found. As the hon. Member for Deptford said, the dirt and dust are a hazard. Clouds of dust are not only scattered on the people standing by but spread into the homes of those living adjacent. Positive correlations have been identified between the level of fly tipping of "muck away" and the incidence of ear, chest, throat and other infections. As the hon. Lady said, rats are encouraged into areas because of the materials left lying around. We must address this issue——

Mr. Hughes: I see the Minister nodding positively. We must address this issue not only in the context of imposing regulations to deal with the problem and the menace but in terms of finding a method of recycling, as far as is possible, such building and construction waste. Only one or two firms in London do that, so there seems to be a great opportunity to do much more. It may need financial incentives or a much clearer strategy, but I am sure that, given a lead from the Government, the developers and the construction and demolition industries will be happy to co-operate.

I said earlier that I would end with an example of the urgency of the need for action. In doing so, I shall quote someone who has been willing to be quoted publicly in the past. I refer to the enforcement officer in my own borough of Southwark—a brave man called Danny Mannix. I shall quote from statements that he has made about three incidents which happened to him as he sought to go about his business of dealing with environmental pollution. He has said:

> "About eighteen months, two years ago, I was following a loaded HGV which was concerned in fly-tipping offences in Southwark, and followed it through the Rotherhithe Tunnell. It went—I turned into a side-street to find that it was reversing at me at speed and it rammed my vehicle and completely wrote it off. You know, I was very lucky to escape with my life . . .
> On two occasions when I had followed loaded tipper-lorries onto Docklands Development Corporation sites in Rotherhithe Street, sawn-off shotguns were produced and I was told to make myself scarce or I'd be getting some hospital treatment from the attention that was going to be imminent . . .
> I was on leave and two men visited my home address, in my absence spoke to my wife, produced a sawn-off shotgun and an automatic pistol, and made it quite clear that they would return to take care of me, and it was to do with my fly-tipping activities."

The number of Southwark officers has fallen to one because the others, for various reasons, felt that it was unsafe to continue doing their job.

This is a grave matter of law and public order in the capital city, as well as a matter of improving our environment. I hope that we can devise the strongest possible measure with the strongest possible Government support. I repeat my gratitude to the hon. Member for Deptford for giving us this opportunity to legislate with urgency.

Mr. Robin Squire (Hornchurch): I am pleased to speak after the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) whose concluding comments remind us that, although hon. Members often refer to cowboy operators, in this case—with the addition of shotguns—we are literally taking about cowboy operators. The need to crack down on them is obvious and immediate.

It is a pleasure to join the litany of praise that has been heaped on the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Miss Ruddock)—not just for the measure but for the way that she introduced it. She explained its provisions so clearly that she has made it easy for subsequent speakers to talk in greater detail about the problem instead of concerning themselves with the wording of individual clauses.

[Mr. Robin Squire]

It is appropriate that the Member of Parliament for Hornchurch should say something about rubbish. My constituency includes Rainham in Essex, one of the few parts of Greater London that takes some of London's rubbish. The hon. Member for Deptford referred to the fact that a fair chunk of London's rubbish is exported outside Greater London's boundaries. Rainham accepts domestic rubbish. It is brought down the Thames by one of the best companies in the waste disposal business, Cleanaway, which operates barges that do not run into London's bridges. That cannot be said of all the barges that go up and down the Thames. Cleanaway runs a properly supervised, legitimate operation, and I pay credit to it for doing so. In consequence, quite a large part of my constituency is literally built on rubbish.

The people we wish to control are illegal dumpers. They are the subject of today's debate. Within the last six months, a man has been convicted in Rainham and fined £1,000 for dumping building rubble. I am pleased that he was caught. I am particularly pleased that the fine he had to pay was considerably greater than that quoted by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi). It would be foolish to believe that that was the first time that that man had been involved in illegal dumping activities. For all I know, he—and many others like him—are still involved in illegal dumping. Even a £1,000 fine is an insufficient deterrent, compared with the money that can be made by engaging in that illegal activity.

Thurrock spends many thousands of pounds on clearing up unsightly lay-bys, a problem that is caused by the indiscriminate dumping of rubbish. I have asked council officers in my borough how much it costs to clear up fly tipping in Havering. They have explained that part of the cost can be attributed to the maintenance of vehicles and the employment of staff for that purpose, but they claim that the fly tipping itself costs £30,000.

I accept that the problem is greater in central London than in outer London, but it would be wrong to suggest that outer London does not have problems. The Association of Metropolitan Authorities, of which I am proud to be vice-president, says that it believes that 1 million tonnes of unsightly and dangerous waste is dumped each year in London's streets and that it costs London ratepayers and taxpayers £5 million a year to clean it up.

The problem affects other parts of the country. Recent cases in the midlands suggest that all the farmers in Herefordshire and Worcestershire would be well advised to lock their gates at night, lest they find in the morning that rubble or rubbish from Birmingham has been dumped smack in the middle of their fields. I should have thought that farmers had enough difficulties at the moment without having to deal with that additional hazard.

The Bill has received support from a number of quarters. I have in my hand a letter from the Royal Society of Chemistry. It says:

"The Society welcomes and strongly supports the principle of the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Bill and considers that the statutory registration of carriers of controlled waste —especially in relation to the movement of hazardous waste chemicals—represents a significant step forward in terms of health and safety in this country."

As a sponsor of the Bill, I welcome the society's support.

I have also heard in detail from the National Association of Waste Disposal Contractors. Members of the Select Committee on the Environment will be aware that that association has given evidence to the Committee on more than one occasion. I must be careful not to put myself in contempt of the House by referring to matters that are beyond the confines of this Bill—the Committee's wider inquiry. However, all the Committee members were impressed by the depth of the witnesses' knowledge and, above all, by their desire to raise standards in the industry.

The waste disposal industry has a somewhat spotty background, but it has made great efforts in recent years, led by the National Association of Waste Disposal Contractors, to put its house in order. The association strongly supports the Bill but believes that it is a minimum step forward. It wishes the Bill to go even further. It says:

"it is essential that any registration scheme is introduced on a national basis and differentiates between those companies who are able and those who are not able to carry different categories of waste."

The association splits the waste into three categories: first, hazardous waste; secondly, commercial and domestic non-hazardous wastes; and, thirdly, inert harmless wastes such as builders' rubble, household and garden clearances, and so on. It believes—I have some sympathy for its view —that

"the carriage of any waste by an unregistered company, or the carriage of a waste which the carrier is not registered to carry should be an offence. Furthermore, it is vital that a simple cover-note procedure for all waste movements is introduced in conjuction with a register."

The association also believes that

"the cover-note system would involve written documentation outlining the nature, quantity, source, carrier and destination of the waste. A copy of the note would be kept by each element in the chain from the producer to the disposal site. A final copy would be returned from the site to the producer thereby closing the loop and ensuring 'cradle to grave' control. A much needed statistical base could also be collected from the cover notes held at the disposal sites being returned the Waste Disposal Authorities."

The association then says:

"it would be an offence to carry any waste without a cover note and to accept waste at a site without a cover note."

I sympathise with that view. It underlines the fact that the major contractors want the cowboys to be outlawed and driven out of business.

Whispers have reached me that there may be some reluctance to proceed with the impounding of vehicles. There are many ways to skin a cat. I am convinced beyond any shadow of doubt that a deterrent needs to be built into the system that is greater than the one which we already have. The impounding of vehicles may not be the answer. I support that principle, but if impounding is impossible, we must find something else that is as much of a deterrent.

As has already been mentioned, we must increase the fines. We must make it so uncomfortable for people going about their nasty, dirty, criminal business late at night that they stop doing so. The Bill is an important first step in introducing better regulation. I warmly commend it. I wish it well in its remaining stages and I hope that we shall see it on the statute book in the near future.

Mr. Frank Cook (Stockton, North): I first took the oath from the Dispatch Box on 15 June 1983. From that moment I looked to a small handful of Members for example as to how to behave and conduct oneself here.

One member of that small handful was, at that time, the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar. He is probably more accurately described as the reliable Left-wing character, Ian Mikardo. He is referred to by us in a friendly way as "Mick". Mick was a Member of the House for more than 30 years and was never fortunate enough to win a place in the ballot.

People outside might be forgiven for thinking that a ballot is some form of election and might not realise that it is a form of raffle or lottery. Mick spent over 30 years trying to win that lottery and never achieved one of the leading places. Therefore, I must congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on her good luck in achieving one of those places so early in what will clearly be a glittering parliamentary career.

I wish to congratulate her not only on her luck but on her judgment. When she told me what subject she had chosen for her Bill, I was stunned. I said to her, "What on earth have you picked that for?" She then started to tell me about the scale of the problem and I was dumbfounded. I realised that it was a major problem in the metropolis and I thought I should find out more about the scale of things on my own patch. After having made inquiries, I was even more worried.

Thanks to Mr. Ken Lupton of Stockton borough council and Mr. Ray Maughan and Mr. Fred Willingham of Cleveland county, I now have more definitive knowledge about what happens on my patch.

Mr. Lupton told me that in Stockton borough, back street properties are a particular problem. Council employees have found wagon loads of garden waste containing soil and hedge trimmings and so on dumped in back lanes when there are no gardens within two miles of the site. Clearly, it has taken considerable effort to pick up the dross and transport it to the spot where it has been disposed of. Mr Lupton said:

"Who is doing the dumping? Probably the fly-by-night jobbing gardeners. Perhaps the fear of more severe punishments would prevent such abuse.

He goes on to quote the case of the "phantom market trader"

"who was dumping fruit and vegetable boxes late in the evening in a lay-by along the A66 between Stockton and Darlington. It transpired it was a market trader not prepared to pay the charge for commercial waste disposal."

All that is happening in a borough which offers free waste disposal. Skips are provided free of charge.

He asserts that

"Jobbing builders are the main culprits in this area."

He cites instances where they have literally breached perimeter walls of properties in order to gain access to dump their building spoil on someone else's territory.

The overall responsibility in the area for waste dispoal and waste disposal control rests with the county authority. Mr. Willingham has provided us with even more, almost humorous, examples. Apparently 32 fly tipping black spots have been identified across the county and the county has instituted a system of "reward for information" on the basis of successful prosecutions. Informants can receive a bonus of £50 a time. That does not seem to improve matters because the signs are constantly vandalised and removed. Vested interests are suspected of doing that—the commercial traders and fruiterers rather than the casual tipper. Therefore, it is an organised removal of signs and an organised deterrent of the passing of information. The cost of servicing and replacing the 41 signs last year in the 26 locations was in excess of £6,000.

One prosecution occurred 250 yards from an established fly tipping black spot it was almost a satellite fly tipping while county workers were erecting "No Tipping/Reward" signs within sight of the tippers.

Mr. Willingham said:

"At one former fly tipping black spot the 'Keep Britain Tidy group" spent £9,000 and some seven months clearing a deep ravine of rubbish. Within weeks of it being cleared a van was reported for tipping household and garden rubbish."

The driver worked for the 'community task force' on clear-up jobs. He had a supply of free tipping tickets for county facilities but he chose to tip on an illegal spot because it saved him a journey. He pleaded guilty but the magistrates gave him an absolute discharge, despite his having been abusive to the witness and refusing to take his waste away when invited to do so. The people from whom I have obtained my information have made suggestions about penalties but I shall come to that.

I have given examples of what happens within Cleveland county and Stockton borough. "Example" is probably the operative word because I should like the House to bear in mind that "example" is one of the principle things we should emphasise. If authorities had been more diligent in ensuring that waste-tipping licences had been properly regarded in the past and that people breaching those licences had not been allowed to go scot free, we might have been able to impose the regulations more forcefully on previous occasions.

I should like the House to bear in mind what may, at first glance, be considered an Irishism—a statement of the obvious. The whole concept of waste is wasteful. Waste can be divided into three basic groups—decomposable, combustible and non-destructible. Positive, constructive use can be found for all those types of waste. We must try to emphasise that and make progress on it.

Decomposable waste can be used as a source of clean, alternative energy. There are independent, commercially viable enterprises in Britain which, by using decomposable waste, make a profit by producing energy at a cost lower than the state-owned energy producers.

Many local authorities use compbustible waste. If we were to combine combustible waste disposal with combined heat and power units, we would rid ourselves of the waste and be able to put the heat gained to a positive use.

Non-destructible waste could be used for road construction rather than using some of our mineral sources of limestone and dolomite. All those methods are achievable and would be beneficial if they were encouraged by positive and constructive Government incentives.

Those matters could be discussed in greater detail and one could write a volume on each one. However, they could be discussed in Committee and provision made for them.

I conclude by once again commending my hon. Friend —as have so many other hon. Members—for the clarity with which she has expressed the case that she seized on so clearly when given the opportunity. I should like to commend the supporters of the Bill. For the life of me, I have been unable to find anyone—other than the cowboys referred to—who has been opposed to the proposals. Everyone—the police, local authorities, emergency services, which were concerned about access, and industry—supports the Bill. Doubtless, some attention to the detail of the Bill will be needed, but given the enthusiasm displayed and the support voiced in the Chamber today, there will be no shortage of that. Finally, I thank my hon. Friend for giving me the opportunity to be a sponsor of the Bill.

Mr. Ken Livingstone (Brent, East): I am delighted to associate myself with all the wonderfully nice things that everybody has said about everyone else in the debate. I, like everyone else, am totally committed to the Bill produced by my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock). It will result in a major improvement in the quality of life of people throughout the country, particularly, I hasten to say, in Brent, East.

A few weeks ago, I was appalled to receive correspondence from the Waterloo road business community group asking me to come to what was, effectively, an industrial site in Brent, East, adjacent to the north circular road. An entire street has been filled, from one end to the other, with vast quantities—about 20 lorry loads—of dumped soil and clay. It makes the road completely impassable so that pedestrians have to walk in the middle of the road. Streakes Field road is treated in this way because nobody lives there and, once the factories shut at night, there is nobody—except perhaps officers in a passing police vehicle—to prevent anyone from fly tipping. The fly tippers have got their activity down to an art. They do not stop, but turn off the north circular road into Streakes Field road, slow down and dump their load without even coming to a halt.

All sections of the business community, which operates almost exclusively in all the newer and more dynamic sections of society, got together and set up a camera so that there would be a record of any fly tipping. They hoped to zero in on the number plates of fly tipping vehicles. However it was obvious that mud had been smeared over the number plates so that they could not be seen. The fly tippers could not get to the camera that had been put on the top of one of the nearby factories but very rapidly the lamp standards in the road were smashed, making the road completely dark and thus even more dangerous.

I was appalled at what happened and was delighted that a meeting of the local business community was held, which the police attended. Like many others at the meeting, I assumed that fly tipping was merely a nuisance. It was only when I listened to the police that I realised the scale of organised crime that is now involved.

The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) underestimates the money to be made from fly tipping. The police estimate given to me about three weeks ago shows that one individual can make a clear profit of £2,000 per week on illegal fly tipping. In London, organised gangs take part. The lorries used are linked to each other by short-wave radio and there is often a motor cyclist to ensure that an area is clear and ready for tipping so that the convoy can come in and dump load after load. My tale is not as horrifying as that of the hon. Member of Southwark and Bermondsey. However, the police were well aware of the problem and warned members of the local business community not to take action themselves because they would be set about by thugs with iron bars.

This problem does not involve just a few cowboys. We know the engaging concept of the poor old character who is a bit down on his luck, has just about scraped together enough money to buy a lorry and is just keeping himself from starvation by taking the odd load somewhere. However, we are talking about pernicious organised crime that involves the same sort of people who are associated with some of the worst aspects of the London underworld —it needs to be stamped out ruthlessly.

I want to make my position clear. The only matter of contention—that is perhaps too strong a word—today is the nature and scale of the penalties. I have already told the promoter of the Bill, my hon. Friend the Member for Deptford, that I should be delighted to be appointed to the Committee. I want to do so to ensure that the maximum and most severe penalties are imposed. When dealing with organised crime, a slap on the wrist or a few hundred pounds fine is not worth while.

My hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) said that he hoped to see the greening of magistrates. For the magistrates in my own area, their only greening will be the prelude to their decomposition. They are completely unaware and unalive to the problem. Some of them impose fines of merely a few hundred pounds, which is absolutely no deterrent. They often seem to have sympathy for the fly tipper as though some poor, struggling entrepreneur is simply being harassed by an insensitive police force and irresponsible local government bureaucracy. We need good, strong powers to handle the problem.

I should be happy for the police to be able immediately to seize and impound the vehicle of anyone they suspect of fly tipping and put the onus on the owner to retrieve it. The vehicles should be impounded immediately. Police vehicles should carry a shovel so that if the police catch someone who has dumped a load, they can make him shovel the load back in and take it away. There is no point in leaving the stuff lying around on the streets.

Brent council deploys one vehicle to tackle the problem, but it has mushroomed with such speed that councils, irrespective of their political complexion, will not find it easy to assemble the capital investment to purchase the range of vehicles needed. Indeed, I do not see why they should.

I shall support giving the fullest possible powers to the police so that they can deal with the problem. That is why I particularly want to be involved in the Committee. If we are not prepared to be tough, all the fine sentiments that we have heard today will come to nothing. Organised crime can respond much more quickly to changes than can Parliament. We need to ensure that the powers given to the police are flexible enough to enable them to adapt as the thugs adapt.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): It is a pleasure to follow my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) and, as I sat here next to my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng), it almost took me back to the heady days of the Greater London council, when God was in his heaven and all was right with London and the world. How things have changed since 1986.

It is interesting to be here on an occasion of such rare unanimity within the House. Although I might be the last person to speak on this Bill from the Back Benches, I will not be denied my opportunity to congratulate my hon.

Friend the Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on introducing this singularly useful piece of legislation. We hope that it completes Committee stage and emerges on the statute book, so that she will have contributed something else to the politics of this country to add to her other achievements within other organisations and the House since she was elected.

I accept that the Bill is not the sexiest piece of legislation that we are likely to consider, but it is clearly required not only by all hon. Members but by all those authorities and responsible people—particularly responsible waste disposal contractors—outside the House.

We have received so many letters suggesting that we should support this legislation that it is very opportune that my hon. Friend should have introduced this Bill, using her opportunity—for which we all wish—of coming high in the ballot.

Fly tipping has obviously always been a problem not only in London, but elsewhere. It is certainly noticeable, however, that in recent years fly tipping has reached epidemic proportions in the capital city. As anyone who travels round London can clearly testify, there is much construction taking place, but most of it appears to be in the east end, especially in the London Docklands Development Corporation area, which involves the boroughs of Newham, Southwark and Tower Hamlets.

It is true that for generations the east end has been used as the engine room for London's wealth. The power-producing areas have been concentrated in the east end, as have the waste and sewage disposal areas. Of course, that has left us a legacy that is only now becoming obvious, as more and more construction takes place. Because of the especially obnoxious processes that have been used in the past, much of the land in the east end is poisoned and blighted. It cannot be left just to the east end boroughs to deal with the problem, but will require considerable Government support if we are to deal with the problems we have inherited.

That is the matter historically. Obviously, the problems we have inherited are being exacerbated by the anti-social behaviour of the cowboy waste tippers.

I must confess that the London borough of Newham is not the most picturesque part of London, which might have something to do with the fact that it has 110 tower blocks and that the A11 and the A13 dissect the borough. However, we have our compensations, too. Anyone who wants a good walk through semi-rural conditions in London could do far worse than spend a Sunday strolling along the Embankment of the northern outfall sewer. That does not sound very attractive, but it is quite an attractive walk on a Sunday.

There is also the opportunity for people to practise skiing down the Beckton alps, which is just off the A13. The Beckton alps were created by the waste soil which came from the development in the docklands area. As my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook) said, not all waste generated by construction needs to be dumped unproductively and uselessly; some can be used to provide some valuable facilities. Anyone who knows the Beckton alps will know that they provide a major addition to the leisure facilities of the East end.

Fly tipping is a serious problem in Newham. I would suggest that it is probably as bad there as anywhere else in London. Clearing the rubbish, and indeed repairing the damage caused by the dumping of the rubbish, is costing the London borough of Newham ratepayers about £150,000 a year. That is money the Newham ratepayers can scarcely afford, as my borough is the second most deprived local authority in the country. We need all the money we can get from central Government and all the money that we can generate to improve our facilities. We do not want to spend so much money on clearing up the rubbish that is being dumped by the anti-social people who infest our borough.

From what I have been told by the local borough council, it is clear that current penalties are entirely inadequate. Indeed, as we have heard from my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South and others, the courts do not appear to treat these matters seriously enough. They do not share the concern of hon. Members on all sides of the House. I hope that this will change when this Bill moves to the statute book.

The borough of Newham and its officers have experienced considerable difficulties in taking out prosecutions, for the various reasons mentioned by hon. Members. As the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) and my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, East said, a great deal of organised crime is behind fly tipping. Honest, decent council officers do not like having sawn-off shotguns stuffed up their noses when they are trying to enforce the law. It is not surprising, therefore, that there is less enthusiasm to pursue as rigorously as one would some of those nasty and loutish people who drive the lorries and are involved in this organised crime. It is difficult to take out prosecutions, and the threats to council operatives have made it much more difficult to secure witnesses and to push cases through the courts.

A great majority of the fly tipping in my borough emanates from waste coming from the docklands area. We have recurring problems in Plaistow and in Customs house in the Newham, South constituency. For example, in First avenue in Plaistow and in Marshgate road and Burford road in Stratford, those problems have reached almost farcical levels—except that it is not that funny for people living in the area. Not only have operators come into the area, broken down fences and dumped their waste on council-owned land; they have then set up signs inviting other lorry drivers—for a fee—to dump there as well. I know that Conservative Members believe in the enterprise culture, but surely that goes beyond even their desire to see someone making a few bob. I am delighted to hear that the Government will be giving this Bill a fair wind today.

Fly tipping does not only cause problems to the residents. Close to where I live in the constituency, there is an area called Sprowston mews. "Mews", of course, always conjures up the image of those rather twee little places in Hampstead where arty people live and which are sold for vast sums of money. I assure the House that Sprowston mews does not fit that description. It is a series of old stables that are now used for small businesses. People have complained to me as the local Member of Parliament, that they have turned up to open their businesses only to find that, because it is an unadopted road, a lorry has gone down there during the night and dumped a huge pile of waste right outside their doors. They cannot even get into their premises to open their businesses.

They contacted the council for it to arrange for the rubbish to be cleared. Of course, the council has so many other things to do in regard to other fly tippers that sometimes people lose days of business because they are physically unable to enter their premises. Such things are intolerable and must stop. The sooner that the Bill gets on to the statute book and stops such practices the better it will be not only for people in my constituency, but for people throughout London.

Again, I warmly welcome the Bill. I have heard a number of proposals from hon. Members on both sides of the House for ways in which it could be strengthened in Committee. I am especially attracted by the proposal to tighten up the penalties. The idea of confiscation of lorries is certainly a good one. I believe that those who are convicted of fly tipping should not only lose the wherewithal to continue to do so, but should have to pay the full cost of the removal of the rubbish and the restoration of the area and, indeed, pay compensation. On this occasion, I believe that in Committee we will be vying one with another to see who can impose the strongest and most stringent penalties on fly tippers.

I know that the Minister will welcome the Bill, but I ask her to tell the House what will happen to the London Waste Regulation Authority, which is based in county hall, if the hideous, absurd and obscene proposals go ahead for the conversion of county hall into a hotel. That authority does an excellent job, under difficult circumstances, and its future should be clearly spelt out by the Minister.

Ms. Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North): It gives me great pleasure to be the last but one speaker in this debate to offer my congratulations to my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on bringing forward the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Bill. No one was more pleased than me when I heard that my hon. Friend had drawn No. 7 in the private Member's ballot, lottery or raffle, as it has been called, but—like the hon. Member for Southwark, Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes)—I had a tiny tinge of regret that I had not had the opportunity to bring forward such a Bill. When I heard that my hon. Friend had chosen this subject, I was delighted, and I was even more delighted to know that I would be at the Dispatch Box to ensure that the Bill gets on to the statute book.

It is quite strange that this Bill has the full support of all hon. Members who have spoken today. Perhaps the only item of contention was the point raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) about what will happen to the office premises of the London Waste Regulation Authority when other proposals are put forward for county hall. I hope that the Government's new-found commitment to environmental and green issues will ensure that only the best office space is available to the LWRA so that it can carry out its valuable work in the capital city.

The Bill does not simply have the support of all hon. Members who have spoken this morning. It also has the support of waste regulation authorities and the Institution of Environmental Health Officers. I hope that the Minister will be able to assure us that she has been able to persuade the Secretary of State for the Environment that every clause in the Bill should receive the Government's full support.

I also welcome this debate because it follows the most important debate in the House yesterday. I want to relate my comments to the important issue of waste management and disposal and the much-needed duty of care, for which we have been waiting for some considerable time. It is no coincidence that the first step towards getting that urgent legislation, the need for which has been shown clearly by all hon. Members today, has been taken by the Opposition.

During this debate we have heard many details about the implications in the Bill for local government. I was grateful for the comments from the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) who spoke in his capacity as the Chairman of the Select Committee on the Environment. He referred to new information and told us that in one London borough there is 1 million tonnes of dumped waste. The LWRA and the local authorities must find the resources to clean up that great public health problem. It is not simply a problem for every inner and outer London borough, it affects the whole of the country.

When the Government address the many wider issues which lead on from our narrow discussions this morning, I hope that they will pay proper attention to the way in which we dispose of refrigerants and CFCs. I hope that we shall learn how the Government will deal with the 13 per cent. vacancy rate among funded posts for environmental health officers. Instead of simply rate capping local authorities which are trying desperately to deal with these vital public health issues, the Government should seriously consider how local authorities and environmental health officers can be properly resourced to carry out their vital work.

I remind the House that we are considering controlled waste. Such waste is defined in the Control of Pollution Act 1974 as:

"Household, industrial and commercial waste."

The 1974 Act states that:

"All such wastes may only be deposited on licensed waste disposal sites."

Although the full report from the Select Committee on the Environment will not be published until 8 March, I was grateful for the fact that the Select Committee has made its comments as they affect this Bill available now. However, we do not need those comments for us to understand the real need to take urgent action in the Bill. All conscientious Members, and all hon. Members who have spoken today are conscientious Members, are only too well aware of the real dangers to public health which arise fom waste problems.

We all feel despair when we see large amounts of rubbish and building rubble dumped indiscriminately. Nowhere is safe. Local beauty spots, children's play areas and even main arterial roads have been used and are used as opportunistic dumping grounds by unscrupulous operators who are anxious to make fast money and a fast getaway.

Large contractors evade their duty of care principles by subcontracting responsibility for building rubble removal to smaller firms which, in turn, offer attractive rates to cowboys to get rid of the rubbish without too many questions being asked.

When I was a local councillor I watched a wagon full of rubble being dumped onto a site which had just been acquired by a local authority for new house building. I had called out the police and local environmental health officers in my capacity as a councillor, but I could do nothing to stop that lorry which in the process of dumping its rubble broke a main gas main which was just below the surface of the water. Everyone must be aware of how serious is the problem and how urgent is the need for action.

Rather than incur costs at waste disposal sites and the costs for fuel to get there, it is far more remunerative for people to dump rubbish. There is a pattern of fly tipping in inner London boroughs which ring large development sites in the City and in Docklands. Even the Secretary of State's backyard may not be immune from the fly tippers and I am sure that he appreciates that.

Once established, a pile of builder's rubble often proves to be an attractive magnet for other unscrupulous tippers of more hazardous wastes. In Lambeth, blood-contaminated hypodermic syringes, drugs and dangerous medical and toxic wastes have been found partially hidden on such sites. Apart from the general eyesore and public health hazard, the sites may become a dangerous play space for children. We must bear the public health implications in mind.

Regrettably, some local householders may add to the rubble by dumping old furniture, bedding and domestic waste. That combination of harbourage and food supply attracts colonies of rats, which are found in increasing numbers all over the country. I urge the Government to be consistent in their policies on waste and the prevention of pollution. It is our experience that the lack of maintenance of the whole infrastructure of public sewers is causing rats to leave the sewers to go to these sites, where there are huge problems with accumulated rubbish caused by fly tipping and cowboy operators.

The unscrupulous practice of fly tipping with its chilling lack of concern for the environment and the health and safety of the community leads to justifiable public outrage. It has been estimated that there are 1 million tonnes of fly-tipped rubbish in one borough alone. The information available before this debate, before we had the advantage of the information from the Select Committee, was that 1 million tonnes were dumped in the whole of inner London. The real figure is 1 million tonnes for one borough. That problem must be addressed.

The cost to London for removing the accumulated dumped rubbish is at least £5 million per annum. Faced with those facts and the way in which they have been highlighted in recent television reports, people are rightly demanding action to deal with the scandal. The Bill will introduce major new powers to provide the strength of purpose to combat what has become a national disgrace.

Every hon. Member, regardless of political party, has a duty to constituents and the country as a whole to combat this anti-social practice of tipping. The problem was outlined so well by my hon. Friend the Member for Deptford and it has been well documented. The Government should have closed the loophole in the Control of Pollution Act 1974 long ago. But at least they have an opportunity to do that now.

The Bill is in two parts. The first part contains new enforcement conditions to register carriers of controlled waste together with the power to stop vehicles to determine whether the registration details are in order. If guilty of an offence, a fine of up to £2,000 may be payable. That new initiative, while useful, is not the sole answer to the problem.

Experience has shown that there may be difficulties in bringing a successful prosecution, and as hon. Members have pointed out today, magistrates impose inadequate fines. I agree that we should all do what we can to influence magistrates and stop them handing out derisory fines, as they have in so many cases. Stricter supportive measures are required, which are set out in part II of the Bill which authorises the stopping, removal and detention of the vehicle involved in the illegal dumping of controlled waste.

Although he is not in his place at the moment, I was very pleased to hear the comments of the hon. Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire). I hope that when the Minister replies to the debate, she will tell the House that she is in favour of the impounding of vehicles—which is crucial—and say that in Committee she and the Secretary of State are prepared to go further. The Opposition would have produced stronger proposals had we been sure of the full support of the Government. The Bill is constructive and positive and we wanted to ensure that everyone would support it. I hope that it will reach the statute book.

The justification for the most stringent punitive action is that the crime of illegal dumping, with its heavy emphasis on quick profit risking damage to the environment and to public health, necessitates immediate and positive sanction. Without the horsepower of their wagons the cowboys will be unable to operate.

Last year, New York city council introduced such measures as part of a package to improve the city's image and boost civic pride. As a result, 175 vehicles were impounded. Together with other action such as the removal of graffiti from New York subways, the city is beginning to improve its environment and reverse the downward spiral of inner-city decay. The adoption of a similar positive action here will lead to a cleaner city and a firm commitment to putting environmental issues back on the agenda—an objective which the Government claim to share with the Opposition, although the proof of the pudding will be in the eating. I hope that the Minister will agree that if part II of the Bill is not perfect, any adjustment can be made in Committee. It is clear from the speeches we have heard this morning that many competent hon. Members will contribute to dicussion in Committee.

The Bill will receive virtually unanimous support from the public and from all responsible sectors of industry and commerce. It will counteract public concern about the inability of the authority to get to grips with the increasing problem of fly tipping. Good publicity about the Bill's intentions will ensure co-operation throughout the country. I have no doubt that lorry drivers in London and throughout the country who engage in such illegal activities will hear our proposals on their citizens' band radio and will be quaking in their seats, alarmed at what will be in store for them if they continue their anti-social behaviour. However, as has been pointed out, responsible contractors who accept their obligations will benefit if the Bill eliminates irresponsible cowboy operators. The House will be aware that the chairman of the Road Haulage Association's environmental and waste management committee is greatly in favour of such measures. Last year he called for more punitive measures to deal with the problem and counteract the feeling of inadequacy among enforcement officers in using existing legislation.

I hope that in Committee the Government will take note of the need to impound vehicles and the need for the regulations to be as stringent as possible. I hope that the Government will also take note of the implications for local authority services. Mention has been made of local authorities providing city amenity sites, and we have heard about the excellent public protection committee services provided by the former Greater London council. However many London boroughs and local authorities provide free collection of household waste and there is no reason why those services should not continue as they will not be affected by the Bill.

I urge support for the Bill. It gives us the opportunity to give public servants, constituents and honest contractors the legislative support that they need to stamp out fly tipping. The Opposition put care for the environment at the heart of all our policies, and it is not a coincidence that we have introduced the Bill. I look forward to hearing an undertaking from the Minister that we can proceed with all provisions in the Bill without further delay.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mrs. Virginia Bottomley): I add my congratulations to those of other hon. Members to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) not only on her good fortune in the private Member's ballot —hon. Members have been truthful in acknowledging that they have been tinged with envy at that—but in her excellent judgment in selecting the problem of fly tipping as the area where she hopes to leave her mark on the statute book.

The Bill has been promoted by a woman and the spokespersons for the Government and the Opposition are women and you, Madam Deputy Speaker are present. Perhaps there is so much enthusiasm for the subject because of our desire to do things in a practical and effective way. However, I shall leave such sexist remarks for the time being.

With an increasingly industrialised economy, with economic growth, inevitably wastes are produced which are costly to deal with. The Government are committed to ensuring that all wastes, whether toxic and difficult, industrial, domestic, or really relatively inoffensive, are properly catered for in our communities. It is the Government's intention to undertake a major reform of our waste disposal law. That Bill will be introduced as early as possible during this Parliament.

The groundwork for reform has been thoroughly prepared by a series of announcements and consultation papers on waste disposal law over the past three years. As a result, we are now bringing together a clear, coherent package of measures. We believe that that package should command the general support of industry, local authorities and, above all, the public. It is essential that the general public should have full confidence that our arrangements for dealing with wastes of all kinds are properly and professionally regulated and enforced.

Clearly such matters take time and consultation is important. Often an initial solution to such offensive and appalling problems is discovered to be wrong when all the various interests have been consulted. It is absolutely clear that many hon. Members who have spoken today, many of them representing London constituencies, have given evidence of the offensive nature of fly tipping, which is an absolute scourge on the environment. It is not an innocent matter; it is a complex, sophisticated crime in which very large amounts of money change hands. None of us should underestimate the seriousness of the problem.

Many hon. Members involved in the former Greater London council have spoken, clearly resurrecting a long standing concern. The hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) was concerned about the accommodation of the London Waste Regulation Authority—perhaps that was a legacy from his previous responsibility. He will be pleased to know that discussions as to its future accommodation are progressing well and there should be an announcement about its alternative accommodation. I know that the LWRA will appreciate his concern on its behalf.

Mr. Tony Banks: Will it definitely be booted out of county hall to make room for the people who will stay in the hotel?

Mrs. Bottomley: I am sure that the LWRA has no wish to prolong the long, drawn-out battle that the hon. Gentleman has waged for many years. The officers of the LWRA have a responsible, difficult and taxing job and we want to see them settled and established in a place where they can do that job properly and effectively. I pay tribute, with other hon. Members, to the work of the LWRA and to its professional approach and dedicated attitude, particularly to fly tipping. Recently, I spent a day visiting a number of sites with members of the authority and with its distinguished chairman. I was enormously impressed by the efforts made by the LWRA to co-ordinate a plan of action with the police, local authorities and public. The establishment of the hot line is an important ingredient because, when it comes to enforcement, adequate evidence is vitally important.

The illegal dumping of waste is a costly matter. It is estimated that in London, about 1 million tonnes of waste have been illegally dumped, costing the London waste regulation authority and London boroughs up to £35 million a year to remove. The Government strongly share the hon. Lady's wish to tackle that problem.

Before going on to discuss this Bill within the context of the Government's overall strategy of waste management, I shall make clear where the Government stand in relation to those proposals. We are able to give an unequivocal endorsement to the earlier parts of the Bill covering the registration of carriers. It forms part of the package of measures the Government hope to implement. It has been supported by the Select Committee on Environment and many others. I appreciate the remarks made by the Committee's Chairman, and his consideration in making a preliminary report.

As to part II of the Bill, while wishing to see greater, more effective enforcement, the Government have considerable reservations about the suggested means of achieving that desirable end, and feel that they are not the most effective means of dealing with the problem. We believe that the proposed powers in relation to stopping, removing and detaining vehicles require further detailed consideration in Committee. I appreciate the efforts made by the hon. Lady to establish co-operation, and the consideration that she has shown. We are all united in our commitment to getting the legislation right, so that it is effective and fair.

Ms. Walley: Will the Minister give an assurance that she will not rule out the impounding of vehicles, and that that aspect will be further considered in Committee? Judging from the comments of many hon. Members, they feel that the Bill will be unworkable if the most stringent sanctions possible cannot be brought against those responsible for illegal dumping.

Mrs. Bottomley: It is our intention to bring forward comprehensive proposals for dealing with waste regulation generally. Our intention is that they will meet with support and co-operation from all parties, not only in the House but in the waste disposal industry and local authorities. Any system of regulation requires enforcement, and it is our intention to consider that aspect carefully and in detail. Later, I shall say more about the difficulties that arise. Enforcement raises broad questions of our whole system of criminal justice, police powers, and the procedures available in relation to matters such as road traffic offences. It is a detailed and complex subject requiring proper consideration.

Mr. Boateng: I see the dead hand of the Home Office dampening the Minister's environmental zeal. I do not doubt that her heart is in the right place, but I have heard those words before. We know that once the Home Office gets its hand on any issue, things suddenly become very difficult.

Mr. Tony Banks: They become Hogg-tied.

Mr. Boateng: Will the Minister do everying in her power to ensure that the punishment fits the crime? Does she acknowledge that, until now, the penalties imposed on the cowboys concerned have been derisory by comparison with the gains they make from their illegal activities? Will the Minister give an undertaking that such penalties as ultimately emerge will be of a stringent financial nature?

Mrs. Bottomley: If I can get a word in edgeways, I will give the House many assurances. I shall say more about penalties later, but particular aspects of impounding are not the same as penalties. Provided that the House gives the Bill a Second Reading, which I am sure it will, we shall be able to spend longer considering every aspect in Committee.

Within our own proposals, we believe that measures can be taken that will effectively ensure that the increasingly criminal and sophisticated crime of fly tipping is properly dealt with and that some of the worst perpetrators of that deplorable activity are no longer able to escape without redress.

Today's debate gives a useful opportunity to set out the Government's policies on waste disposal, and to discuss fly tipping in that context. I shall explain what the Government will do to improve the law and to reform the authorities that enforce it. Part I of the Bill effectively forms an advance piece of that main legislation. In making proposals, it is essential that environmental controls command public confidence. The existing waste regulation system has too frequently failed that test, and evidence of that has been given by hon. Members today. Sometimes, public impressions are unfair and too readily affected by a few isolated but well-publicised waste disposal incidents. When the waste disposal industry is good, it is often very very good. But when it is bad, it is horrid. The public is right to demand that the worst should be brought up to the standard of the best. Only then will public confidence be fully restored—and that is the Government's objective.

We must carry the industry with us. Enthusiasm for tough environmental laws preoccupied with bashing the industry is no substitute for a system that works. No system of legal controls will work in practice unless it has the consent and co-operation of most of those who have to abide by it. That means that we must take into account the contribution of industry when deciding how to safeguard and improve the environment. Responsible industry—and that is most of industry—welcomes high environmental standards. As has been said today by many hon. Members, responsible contractors have nothing to fear from a proper system of registration and enforcement. It is often the criminal element that undermines the efforts of the responsible element and makes its cost margins almost untenable.

Mr. Frank Cook: The Minister countermands her own statement. The responsible sector of the industry does not need the measures in the Bill. It welcomes them, and penalties are unnecessary for it. Responsible operators will gladly conform to whatever requirements are made, and it is in their interest to do so. Penalties are required only in respect of the criminal element.

Mrs. Bottomley: The hon. Gentleman surely appreciates that the Bill is not only about penalties but registration. We are anxious to ensure that the registration system does not make life so difficult for responsible contractors that they feel alienated by it. It is important to have an effective registration system that is tolerable and manageable. I reiterate that the responsible sector of the industry has everything to gain. Responsible operators, who behave in a law-abiding and effective way, are among those most outraged by abuses of the present arrangement.

When I spent a day with the LWRA, I visited Docklands, which is the biggest building site in Europe. I had the opportunity of talking to an official there responsible for waste removal. On that site, an embryonic system of waste regulation has been introduced, by which chits are issued and must be returned as evidence that waste has been taken to a legitimate and licensed site. That is one example of the way in which responsible contractors are on our side. We are anxious to continue consultations and to behave in a way that meets with general agreement.

Mr. Simon Hughes: The general view of residents in Docklands is that the combination of the local authority and the Docklands corporation is not dealing with the problems caused by the construction industry. Pollution often spills into the roadways and pavements. There are complaints about noise pollution. Enforcement and self-regulation are not working. I hope that the hon. Lady does not hold the view that people are generally happy and that things are satisfactory; they are not. There are great problems associated with construction, particularly in an area such as Docklands.

Mrs. Bottomley: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his intervention. That is why we support the registration of carriers on a statutory basis. I hope that I can manage to talk about some of the other measures that we are considering to improve and update waste management generally. We believe that there is a firm and proper place for regulation which is enhanced, more comprehensive, and deals with more of the loopholes. I hope that it will meet with the hon. Gentleman's approval.

[Mrs. Bottomley]

Many firms are taking a lead on environmental improvements. Industry, local authorities and Government together must work out a legal framework that ensures the highest practicable environmental standards without imposing excessive costs for overly bureaucratic burdens. That objective underlies our package of waste reforms.

The Government's reform of waste disposal law will build on the present system laid down in the Control of Pollution Act 1974, which was a pioneering measure at the time. The principles in that Act have stood the test of time, in particular the idea of disposal site licensing by local authorities. The Government plan legislation on two fronts: first, to tighten and extend the existing controls and, secondly, to reform regulatory authorities.

I hope that the hon. Member for Deptford will agree that fly tipping is a manifestation of a system of waste disposal regulations and supervision that has gone wrong. The act of fly tipping must be seen within the chain of waste production and disposal. That is why I should like to examine some of the proposals in more detail.

Last June, the Government announced the main elements of tightening and extending controls. Controls and legal responsibility over waste should extend throughout the life of the waste. From the original producer to the ultimate disposer, all who handle or treat waste should share a responsibility for its safe and proper disposal.

As the Chairman of the Select Committee said, the key measure will be the duty of care. Anyone who produces or holds waste will be under a statutory duty to take reasonable steps to ensure the safe and proper disposal of waste when consigning it to someone else. No longer will a producer be able to give waste to the first person appearing with a tipper truck at the factory gate. If he does, and that waste turns up illegally dumped, the producer will be liable to prosecution.

In regard to some of the sites that I visited in the east end, the London Waste Regulation Authority knew precisely where the waste came from, but, unless the fly tipper could be seen in the act of fly tipping, it was not possible to take action against the producer. When we introduce a duty of care on the producer of waste, he will be liable when waste can be traced back to him, which is sometimes a much easier job than catching somebody in the act of fly tipping, which may take all of two minutes, with an effective band of supporters with car telephones or radios keeping guard.

Expert waste firms, large waste producers and those producing difficult waste will be expected to check rigorously on what happens to their waste after it leaves their hands. That will mean selecting the best means of disposal, appointing a reputable contractor and ensuring that all the waste reaches its intended destination. They will be burdens on industry, but they amount to no more than many responsible firms already undertake.

The Government do not intend the duty of care to be inflexible or onerous. The steps which it is reasonable to expect will depend on the size and expertise of the firm and the danger posed by its waste. My hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) referred to the various types of waste and the way in which the duty of care will work. It will be set out in a code of practice to accompany legislation. Domestic householder's waste will be exempt altogether. For ordinary small-scale producers of waste from commerce or industry, the code of practice will require little more than that the waste should be consigned to a responsible destination. Such a destination might be the local authority or a properly licensed disposal site. It might also be a middle man—someone who will transport and, possibly, sort the waste before consigning it for ultimate disposal or for reclamation.

It is essential that producers have some means of knowing to whom they may give their waste to discharge their duty of care. That is why we welcome the establishment of the register of waste carriers ahead of the rest of the legislation. The hon. Lady is rightly and properly bringing forward the measure as a way of dealing with fly tipping, but it has a broader significance so that the duty of care can be introduced with all possible speed when the legislation reaches the statute book. It will provide a control over all those involved with waste between the producer and the ultimate disposal site. Carriers on the register will be identifiable and traceable by the producer who gives them waste and by the waste regulation authorities trying to stamp out illegal disposal. That is the context of the proposal which forms part I of the Bill.

As well as putting new controls on producers, holders and carriers of waste, the Government's intended legislative package will tighten the existing controls at the disposal end. We believe that the existing system for local authority licensing of waste disposal sites is the right one. Local authorities already have wide powers to set conditions on these licences and to enforce the conditions. The Government have recently issued updated detailed advice on site licensing. I hope that authorities will use their licensing powers in the future more thoroughly and vigorously than some have in the past. The council is the licensing authority, and it is up to it to write comprehensive licences and then to enforce them.

Many of the individual cases that come to my attention about certain incidents are a result of the waste disposal authority not exercising its present powers. We recognise that there are a few gaps and weaknesses in licensing powers. We are acting to fill them.

It will be made more straightforward to prosecute waste disposers who breach the conditions attached to their licences. Authorities will be able to vet applicants for disposal licences. Only those with a clean criminal record in respect of pollution offences, with sufficient funds to operate and complete a site and with the appropriate professional qualifications will qualify for future disposal licences. Hon. Members have referred to some of the more complex materials that may be included in waste. It is essential that people appreciate that dealing with a site is not just a matter of digging a hole in the ground and throwing everything in. We need proper professional qualifications, scientific analysis and study, and a sophisticated approach.

We shall also be giving local authorities more power to enforce the long-term safety of waste disposal sites. There has been justifiable concern about the threat of gas building up or leachate pollution at completed landfill sites. Once again, good practice and modern technology are essential in waste management.

Local authorities and Government are working closely together to tackle these problems and make sure that existing sites are safe. Beyond that, we need to ensure that future sites do not pose a hazard. We shall empower authorities to impose conditions on waste disposers which require continued monitoring and care of sites for many years after completion until the site is safe. Licence holders will not be permitted to surrender or evade these obligations, and local authorities will be under a clear duty to police them.

We are proposing also to take fresh powers to deal with another matter of public concern, and that is the international trade in waste. It is not particularly material to the hon. Lady's Bill, but it is another——

Sir Hugh Rossi: The Minister's remarks are extremely interesting and important, but they have little relationship to the narrow point of the Bill, which is fly tipping. My hon. Friend is anticipating my Select Committee's report, which I am not allowed to discuss, as to do so would be in breach of the privilege of the House. She is able to declare the Government's position on my paper before the House has had an opportunity to read it.

Mrs. Bottomley: I am saddened and disappointed to hear my hon. Friend—for whom I have had long-standing and high regard—so cynically interpret my remarks. I have held my present office for about seven months, and have been longing for an opportunity to discuss waste. Unlike some of my hon. Friend's constituents, I do not regard this subject as a load of old rubbish. It is fundamentally important and extremely interesting. It is extremely important to tackle fly tipping and rubbish, which is of much concern to people even in Eastbourne and other parts of the country. I hope that my hon. Friend will bear with me. I will not say any more about the Government's proposals to ban the imports of waste.

Mr. John Home Robertson (East Lothian): The Minister referred to Eastbourne and other parts of the country. I note that the Bill does not extend to Northern Ireland. Given that the Government intend to support the Bill, will the Minister say whether the legislation will apply to Scotland? If she is unable to respond, do her hon. Friends at the Scottish Office intend to say something about the Bill?

Mrs. Bottomley: I am happy to inform the hon. Gentleman that the Bill will apply in Scotland, where some of the waste disposal issues are different. The hon. Gentleman spoke last night about municipal waste incinerators, and we had an opportunity to discuss the Scottish position from a slightly different angle.

The Government intend to reform the regulatory authorities so that they can properly enforce the steps that need to be taken. Too often, the waste disposal officer has little status and is little known. Most hon. Members are aware of the indentity of the person in charge of their police forces, hospitals, schools and roads, but insufficient hon. Members are aware of the difficult task of the waste disposal authorities.

Local authorities have no excuse for setting a bad example. At present, most waste disposal authorities are poachers and gamekeepers. They regulate and police waste disposal in their areas but also undertake much disposal directly. There should be no suggestion that an authority favours its operations compared with its policing of the private sector. Public and private waste disposal have their good and bad practitioners. Waste disposal must be properly and effectively supervised and enforced.

Part I of the Bill effectively provides an opportunity to put in place, in advance, a piece of the jigsaw that we anticipate. Part I will introduce the registration of waste carriers. If the proposals are implemented at an early stage, the register will be up and running before the Government's main legislation on waste takes effect. It will enable the duty of care to come into effect speedily, which will benefit the new waste regulation authorities, the waste industry and, above all, the environment, about which the hon. Member for Deptford is concerned.

One of the strengths of the proposed registration system is its simplicity of operation. The carrier will present information to the waste disposal authority and, on payment of a fee, will be registered. The only reason he can be refused registration is if he has been convicted of a waste-related offence in the past five years. There is no barrier to someone of good repute starting to make their way in waste collection. We are not creating obstacles to legitimate trade, but if at any time he commits an offence and is convicted he may be removed from the register. If he continues to carry waste when unregistered, he will be guilty of an offence. The authorities will no longer have to catch him red-handed in the act of fly-tipping. This, together with other proposals, will be an important break-through.

When the Government's legislation is tabled, the producers and holders of waste will become liable to prosecution if they use an unregistered carrier for their waste. The intention is quite clear—to starve criminal carriers of business.

The hon. Member for Deptford, explained at length the thinking behind part II of the Bill. Many hon. Members added their concern that steps should be taken to enforce the regulations and prevent the perpetrators of fly tipping being able to continue their foul trade. Part II deals with the stopping and confiscation of vehicles. Although at first sight it seems an attractive proposition, there are some serious difficulties and wider implications that will have to be ironed out fully. There are a number of problems and complex issues, which I have already mentioned. We are not convinced that this is not the most effective way of achieving this goal, but we are most sympathetic to the objectives that the hon. Lady has in mind. It must be considered within the context of the criminal justice system, police powers generally and the treatment of other offences.

The Government have recently consulted on proposals to make the owner of a vehicle directly liable for prosecution unless he can show that he took reasonable steps to ensure that the use of the vehicle was legitimate. This might be a useful step forward, but practical difficulties are arising from those proposals. We hope to explore them further and will have full regard to points made by hon. Members—especially the hon. Member for Deptford—when further considering them.

Fly tipping is an offensive matter. We are all appalled by it and determined to tackle it.

Mr. Simon Hughes: I sense that the Government are not willing, at this stage, to deal with the owner of the vehicle or the vehicle itself. The consensus is that hon. Members want urgent action to deal with the owner of the vehicle and the vehicle. It would be better if the Committee legislated to deal with those problems rather than waiting for another period of consultation and consideration, which one can never guarantee will produce a Bill in the next Session or the one after that. Will the Minister support hon. Members in making the Bill as strong as possible?

Mrs. Bottomley: The Government are committed to introducing measures that will effectively and responsibly deal with the problem.

Hon. Members have spoken of penalties. I share the view that many fines imposed by magistrates are inadquate compared with the great damage caused and the cost of cleaning waste sites. Magistrates have powers to impose much stiffer penalties. The maximum for ordinary fly tipping, if any fly tipping is ordinary, is £2,000. If the waste is poisonous, such as asbestos, there is an unlimited fine. Imprisonment of up to five years is available in the case of poisonous waste.

The real problem is to inform the magistrates of the nature of the offence. Magistrates must deal with the facts of the case as presented to them and it is incumbent on the prosecuting authority to provide magistrates with chapter and verse on the environmental consequences of the offence and, most importantly, the costs of cleaning the rubbish away. Magistrates will then be in a better position to judge the seriousness of the offence and will be able to apply the appropriate penalties. It is important for the prosecuting authority to ensure that that information is before the court.

We have heard today that many hon. Members were not aware of the scale and effects of fly tipping until they made inquiries for the debate today. Perhaps waste disposal authorities should remember that magistrates are often in no better position. Penalties are available to magistrates, but better information will help them to apply those penalties. There are signs that that is beginning to happen and in the last year, the first custodial sentence was given for the illegal deposit of waste.

The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) and my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) raised the question of recycling waste, and that is part and parcel of Government thinking. When proper costs are charged for waste disposal, it makes the economics involved in recycling more probable. We are promoting partnerships between industry, the Government, local authorities and other groups to help promote and enhance recycling.

I look forward to studying the Select Committee's report on toxic waste and I appreciate the contribution of its Chairman, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green. The Committee, with others, has given a great deal of thought to this vital subject over the years. We are committed to take powers to control and regulate waste and to ensure that that gains the confidence of the public and the co-operation of local authorities and industry. The Government's main waste disposal legislation will be brought forward as early as possible during this Parliament. Meanwhile, we welcome the opportunity the Bill gives not only to discuss these vital questions of great importance, but to put in place the register of carriers. I hope that the House will give this helpful and constructive Bill a Second Reading, so that it can be appraised in further detail and improved in Committee. I hope sincerely that we shall see an Act on the statute book this summer.

Ms. Ruddock: I want to take a few minutes of the House's time to respond to the debate. On the question of penalties, I have been extremely encouraged by the way in which hon. Members of all parties have spoken in terms of strengthening the Bill. No one could be more delighted because I have formed a strong view that we need the penalties proposed in the Bill. If they went further, from taking the vehicles to confiscating them permanently, no one would be more pleased.

A message has gone out from the House today about the way in which magistrates already enforce the law. We are asking that, in this most serious offence which causes such distress to ordinary people, magistrates should look to the top of the scale, which allows them to impose a penalty of £2,000, and not at the bottom of the scale, as they do now.

I welcome the Government's plans as the Minister outlined them. I was aware of the consultation exercise and of the Department's interest in trying to bring forward a package of measures to deal with all aspects of waste. However, it is clear that the Government have had the opportunity to hold such consultations, draw up such reports and make such proposals for many years past. The reason I have brought forward my private Member's Bill today is that the Government have not acted. We are impatient and the people who are suffering from this manace are extremely impatient. Although I appreciate the sincerity of what the Minister said, we still do not know when the other measures will be brought to the House for debate.

I make no apology for wanting to push ahead with the serious measures contained within the Bill. I welcome the Minister's willingness to have those matters discussed in detail in Committee, but I am disappointed by the Government's reluctance to give wholehearted support to part II, although I am not surprised. I remind the House of all the comments that hon. Members have made today, which suggest that my thinking and advice that I have been given on the subject are pertinent to the task in hand.

Mr. Boateng: It is a modest proposal.

Ms. Ruddock: As my hon. Friend says, it is modest. I could have come to the House with far more draconian measures.

Like the Minister, I want to comment on the presence of women as the promoter and sponsors of the Bill and the Front Bench spokespersons. Until a moment ago, we also had Madam Deputy Speaker in the Chair. Many Lady Members of the House believe that the conduct of debates and concern for the environment might be much improved if the number of women in the House were to be increased.

Mr. Frank Cook: It has been.

Mr. Simon Hughes: The hon. Lady was about to make an important point—not only are three women in charge of the Bill; there was a woman in the Chair for much of the debate.

Ms. Ruddock: I was endeavouring to make precisely that point.

Mr. Tony Banks: Before my hon. Friend leaves that point, I wish to associate myself with all her comments. This has been a most auspicious debate, which has been made that much more interesting and intriguing by the fact that the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) has been acting as PPS to the Minister. One can only assume that it is the long road back to the top again for him.

Ms. Ruddock: I conclude my remarks by thanking yet again the sponsors of my Bill, most of whom have been present throughout the debate and many of whom have spoken.

The speeches today have been important. All too often, it is thought that only speeches on contentious issues really mater, but today's speeches have brought to the attention of the House, and of the wider listening public, matters that are of concern to many ordinary people and to many of our constituents.

Green matters are often thought to be the province of those who are already enjoying a good standard of living and who have become bothered by inconvenience or by the deterioration of the environment, but the people affected by the problem that we have discussed today are, in the main, members of poorer communities who live on council estates in our inner cities. They have not had the benefit of the voice of the green pressure groups; they have had to find their own voice. They have had to batle with the authorities in an attempt to get redress for their grievances. We in London are often thought to be green yuppies, and it is a timely development that people who cannot so easily be described in that way should have found a voice for their concerns in the House.

We end this debate on a note of optimism, with the feeling that measures will be brought forward, and in the hope that the Bill will succeed in Committee and that the problems will be solved. Meanwhile, I remind the House of the suffering of people who live in neighbourhoods where tens of thousands of tons of rubble have been dumped. We cannot act quickly enough for them. A great deal of effort will be needed, and in this regard I want to acknowledge the support and efforts of my staff who, like the staff of any hon. Member who introduces a private Member's Bill, have had to work extremely hard. I thank all those who have assisted us and I promise them that if the House should now decide accordingly, much more work will be in hand—in a very good cause and, I hope, to a very positive end.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read a Second time, and committed to a Standing Committee pursuant to Standing Order No. 61 (Committal of Bills).

Road Traffic (Breath Tests) Bill

Mr. John Home Robertson (East Lothian): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

I am a little puzzled that the Home Office Minister whom I understood to be responsible for the Bill is not with us, although I am grateful to the Minister for Roads and Traffic for coming to the House to respond on behalf of the Government. We all know of his deep interest in this subject. I fondly recall the previous occasion on which I moved a private Member's Bill—now the Protection of Children (Tobacco) Act 1986. One of the prominent supporters of that Bill was none other than the hon. Member for Surrey, South West (Mrs. Bottomley), the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment. I sincerely hope that this Minister will do me a similar favour.

The Bill has two straightforward provisions. The first is to clarify existing legislation to remove the popular misconception that drivers may not be stopped and breathalysed unless they are committing another traffic offence.

Clause 1 would establish a clear and specific link between sections 6 and 163 of the Road Traffic Act 1988. It represents no real change in the substance of the law, but clarifies the statutory basis of measures that are already being practised by several police forces throughout the land. I should like such action to be better co-ordinated among police forces in various parts of the country to achieve more effective deterrence of the menace of drinking and driving.

Clause 2 would create new powers under which the police could conduct spot checks at the roadside and randomly breathalyse motorists, subject to clear safeguards to prevent any possible abuse of police power. The detailed powers and code of practice on implementation would be established by regulations made by the Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Scotland. The objective of that provision is to deter the reckless minority of motorists who are still drinking and driving, regardless of the risk to themselves and others, and regardless of the now overwhelming public disapproval of that vicious conduct.

I emphasise that I have absolutely no objection to responsible social drinking. I very much enjoy occasional invigorating refreshment myself, both in the restaurants and bars in this House and in the excellent pubs and clubs in various parts of my constituency. I strongly recommend to all hon. Members the excellent products of Glenkinchie distillery and Belhaven brewery in my constituency of East Lothian——

Mr. Frank Cook (Stockton, North): That's the spirit.

Mr. Home Robertson: However, having taken a few drinks, we should travel in cars only as passengers. There are now no excuses for doing otherwise because any social pressure to drink and drive is long gone and an excellent selection of low-alcohol drinks is now available in virtually all bars. Therefore, there is now no excuse for failing to be self-disciplined.

I suspect that the Minister will tell us that all is comparatively well and that the situation is far better in Britain than it is in some other countries——

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Peter Bottomley) indicated dissent——

Mr. Home Robertson: I am glad that the Minister is shaking his head because I was a little worried——

Mr. Bottomley: Things may be better elsewhere but the position is still appalling.

Mr. Home Robertson: I am grateful to the Minister for acknowledging that important and relevant point. It is not good enough to say that we are better than various other countries because, as I shall illustrate, the situation is still alarming.

Complacency would be cruelly inappropriate because there are still 950 deaths and 25,000 injuries each year in this country from alcohol-related road accidents. That represents an continuing disaster of truly tragic proportions. That figure of 950 deaths a year is 73 per cent. more than the number of lives lost in the recent disasters at Piper Alpha, King's Cross, Clapham junction, the M1 and Lockerbie put together. Britain's drink-driving death toll is equivalent to more than three Lockerbie jets and three Clapham train disasters put together. Clearly, there is no room for complacency and I am grateful to the Minister for acknowledging that.

I am convinced that the nation and the House are now ready for further action to deal with the continuing menace of drinking and driving. Up to a point, the legislative framework already exists. Drinking and driving is a criminal offence which is already subject to appropriate penalties. However, the trouble is that there is still a hard core of reckless morons who do not care about the risk of butchering themselves and others and who do not believe that there is any risk of being caught. That is the problem that the Bill aims to address.

Seasonal campaigns by the Department of Transport and the police do quite a lot of good. People can be routinely breathalysed following an accident or the commission of some driving offence. However, an offence cannot be deterred if it has already taken place so surely it would be better to deter drinking drivers before they take to the road in the first place.

In many cases these offenders can be deterred. For the most part, we are dealing with normal, law-abiding citizens. Half the culprits are upper middle-class businessmen between the ages of 40 and 50. The term "dumbo" has been used to describe these drunken, upper and middle-class business men over 40. By definition, these people are difficult for the police to target under the existing legislation, so they just drive on until the almost inevitable disaster, sooner or later.

If the Minister wants to target groups of drivers who pose a particular threat, clause 1 and the existing legislation make it possible for the police to do so. The second clause is designed to introduce a random aspect into the legislation so as to deter those drivers who are difficult to target. Poll evidence suggests that 77 per cent. of drivers who drink support random testing. If that is not a cry for help, I do not know what is, and it ought to receive a positive response from the House and the Government.

Human nature is very strange. Many of us cheerfully ran for years the risk of terrible injuries by not wearing seat belts, but when Parliament created the prospect of being ticked off by a policeman for not doing so, all of us buckled up pretty damn quick, and we have been doing so ever since. Legislation of this kind can therefore work, and in so doing can save lives.

Mr. Gary Waller (Keighley): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that many of those who responded to the question about random testing do not appreciate that they can already be stopped in a way that many of them would regard as random? If a police officer has any reason to believe that a person may have been drinking, which should be fairly easy to ascertain, that person can be tested. A fairly large proportion of the drinking and driving public do not understand what the law is at present. If we need a campaign, it should be to ensure that people appreciate that the risks of drinking and driving are already grave, because they can be stopped at random now.

Mr. Home Robertson: Some chief constables apply the legislation, but the difficulty is that they have to do so under two separate provisions. The first is a general power that enables a police constable to stop a driver. If he suspects that the driver may have been drinking, he can then go ahead and breathalyse that person. The problem is that the drivers I have been talking about do not know that they risk being caught, otherwise they would not drink and drive. The two provisions are designed to overcome that problem and I have sought to demonstrate that legislation of this kind can work and can save lives.

Evidence from New South Wales suggests that spot checks that increase the perceived risk of detection have a dramatic impact on the behaviour of drivers. There was a 37 per cent. fall in alcohol-related accidents in New South Wales over four years, following the implementation of legislation such as this. If we in Britain could achieve such a fall in alcohol-related accidents, we should save 300 lives and thousands of injuries every year. If the Bill became law, we could prevent the equivalent of a Lockerbie air disaster death toll in the coming year and in every year thereafter. That is a goal worth pursuing.

Public opinion is ready for the legislation and is demanding it. There is support for the key principle in the Bill from the widest imaginable spectrum of opinion, with a few eccentric exceptions, such as Mr. Max Hastings, who earlier this week suggested in The Daily Telegraph that legislation of this kind is unnecessary and that to cramp the style of drinking drivers was a monstrous imposition on civil liberties. I suspect that that journalist must have used up a great deal of printing ink in protesting about the death toll at Clapham and elsewhere. Why is he not prepared to do something about this infinitely worse death toll?

Mr. Peter Bottomley: For the avoidance of doubt by those who have not read the article on the feature page of The Daily Telegraph on Tuesday 21 February, Max Hastings—who must have been writing in jest—said that for those of his guests who were driving he was only offering small glasses of orange juice. If he had come across some of the other attractive drinks for drivers, his guests may have stayed longer and enjoyed themselves more.

Mr. Home Robertson: I cannot imagine that they would have enjoyed themselves much in that eccentric company. I think that Mr. Max Hastings is on his own when it comes to that particular argument.

To turn to a few examples of those who are clamouring for a change in the law, the police want to be given increased powers because the existing legislation is unsatisfactory. That covers the point raised by the hon. Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller). The National Council for Civil Liberties has withdrawn its earlier objections to random breath testing on the reasonable grounds that freedom to travel without running the gauntlet of drinking drivers must be more important than the liberty to drink and drive without fear of detection. The Casualty Surgeons Association, representing those who have to stitch up the pieces after the road accidents, supports the Bill wholeheartedly. A total of 9,200 women's institutes throughout the country strongly supports the Bill. The Royal Automobile Club and the Guild of Experienced Motorists support the principles of the Bill. The British Medical Association actively helped me with the detailed drafting of the Bill and the parliamentary advisory council on transport safety—PACTS—is closely involved with the initiative. I am grateful to Jeanne Breen, the co-ordinator of PACTS, for her great help in dealing with the Bill.

No doubt the most powerful advocates of the legislation must be the campaign against drinking and driving and the Scottish campaign against irresponsible drivers. They represent those who have lost relatives as a consequence of this murderous conduct. They want action and are entitled to demand it from the House.

The public opinion survey commissioned by Haig scotch whisky in December 1988 produced results which are anything but vague—93 per cent. of respondents thought that random breath tests were "a good idea". No fewer than 127 hon. Members from all parties and every part of the country signed early-day motion 382 supporting the Bill. Perhaps even more significantly, no hon. Member has yet voiced opposition for the measure although I am filled with trepidation at the sight of the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) in his place. We look forward to hearing from him—perhaps.

Even the Minister acknowledged that this is "one of the few occasions during the past three years when an hon. Member has introduced a Bill that is designed to improve adult safety."—[Official Report, 23 January 1989; Vol. 145, c. 848.]

We know that the Leader of the House is chairing an important ministerial committee to address the range of problems caused by alcohol abuse and we now have the White Paper, published last month entitled "The Road User and the Law" which arises from the North report. All that is positive and I welcome it as far as it goes. Nevertheless, I am sure the Minister would acknowledge that the Bill would save more lives than all the proposals in the White Paper put together.

I recognise that progress on the Bill is likely to be complicated by the fact that the Home Secretary produced a consultation document on the same subject six weeks after the introduction of my Bill. That is rather like being gazumped in reverse. However, if my initiative has helped to goad the Home Office into some action at last, I am happy about that.

I welcome the fact that the Home Office has taken an initiative on the vital issue of deterring drinking drivers by police action. However, the alternatives put forward by the Home Secretary do not include one of the most attractive options—that outlined in my Bill. The Home Secretary offers just three possibilities in his consultation document. The first is to do nothing. The second is to clarify the existing law on the same basis as clause 1 of my Bill is intended to do and the third is simply totally unfettered discretion for any policeman to stop and breathalyse any motorist, anywhere, as often as he likes.

I fear that such blanket powers could give rise to serious abuses. They would certainly damage the relationship between the police and the public and, as such, would probably do more harm than good. They would certainly run into strong opposition from both sides of the House. I would have the greatest difficulty in supporting legis[illegible]n that basis. There is a potential consensus arc[illegible]rinciple of random breath tests covered by pro[illegible]guards as outlined in my Bill. It deserves posi[illegible]consideration by the House. The Home Secretary has omitted that acceptable and effective alternative of properly regulated spot checks to deter and detect drinking drivers as proposed in clause 2 of my Bill.

I sincerely hope that the Minister will not reject the Bill out of hand. It would certainly save lives and I have introduced it with all-party support in a spirit of co-operation. If necessary, I would be willing to defer further consideration of the Bill until the Home Office consultation process has been completed at the end of April. I would be willing to accept constructive amendments and would even agree to running the spot check element of the Bill on an experimental basis if that is what the House and the Government prefer. Having presented the Bill in that spirit, I sincerely hope that the House and the Minister will allow the measure to make progress.

Mr. Ian Gow (Eastbourne): Forty-three weeks ago today, an hon. Member said:

"Our debate takes place on the 87th birthday of the Emperor of Japan."—[Official Report, 29 April 1988; Vol. 132, c. 629.]

It is a strange irony that our proceedings today take place not on the birthday but on date of the funeral of the late Emperor of Japan.

I congratulate the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on having secured his place in the ballot and on his excellent speech commending the Bill to the House. I entirely agree with what he said at the start of his speech about the appalling casualties and the great human suffering and misery caused on our roads because of drink driving.

It so happens that I am a member of the Select Committee on Public Accounts, which recently considered a report of the Comptroller and Auditor General that was presented to Parliament on 14 June last year. The findings of the Comptroller and Auditor General were in exact conformity with what the hon. Gentleman said. The report stated:

"Drinking and driving is a major cause of road accidents costing at least £360 million and involving some 20 per cent. of road deaths in Great Britain each year."

I would have put it the other way round and said that drinking and driving cost about 1,000 lives a year, just in England, Scotland and Wales. I would have put the cost after the human tragedy.

The Comptroller and Auditor General and the Committee on Public Accounts also note that an extraordinary and deeply regrettable feature of our criminal law is how widely it is believed—we cannot be certain about it—that the law is flouted. As statistics clearly show, the prospect of a driver who is over the limit actually being caught is very remote. Therefore, the hon. Gentleman was perfectly correct to lay stress on the human tragedy. The Comptroller and Auditor General referred also to the enormous cost in monetary terms, though that is less important.

It is also relevant to point out that in other countries so-called random breath testing is increasingly becoming the norm. As the years go by, I should expect that practice, which is growing in other countries, to accelerate here.

If I have a doubt about the hon. Gentleman's Bill, it is not about purpose, because we share a common purpose, which is to diminish this appalling suffering. I am afraid that I shall not be able to stay to hear my hon. Friend the Minister but I shall be interested to read his comments. I believe that the law is already clear on this subject. Under section 159 of the Road Traffic Act 1972, the police have the power to stop any vehicle at random. Under section 7 of the same Act the police may require a motorist, once stopped, to provide a sample of breath if the policeman has reasonable grounds for believing that the motorist has alcohol in his body. Or even if the policeman does not suspect that, he can, if he thinks that a traffic offence has been committed while the vehicle has been moving, ask for a breath test. The courts have held that the police may use the power under section 159 to stop vehicles at random in order to decide whether there are grounds for administering a breath test.

If, therefore, there is in effect already in existence under the present law power to stop any motor vehicle—that includes, of course, a motor bicycle—at random and if, having suspected that an offence has been committed while the vehicle has been moving or that the driver has alcohol in his body, that gives a police officer the opportunity to administer a breath test, I ask the House, my hon. Friend the Minister and the hon. Member for East Lothian whether his Bill is really necessary.

In a sense, this is a matter for the lawyers, but the view of the police is also relevant. As I understand it—my hon. Friend the Minister will correct me if I am wrong—the police are not asking for the law to be changed.

Mr. Home Robertson rose——

Mr. Peter Bottomley rose——

Mr. Gow: My hon. Friend will understand if I first give way to the hon. Gentleman who introduced the Bill.

Mr. Home Robertson: Perhaps the Minister could give us chapter and verse on this matter, but my understanding from my meetings with the Association of Chief Police Officers' traffic representatives in this House about the Bill is that it now believes that the existing legislative framework is not satisfactory and requires clarification to help the police to enforce the law.

Mr. Gow: I give way to my hon. Friend the Minister, whose wife answered an earlier debate and, if I may say so, answered it extremely well.

Mr. Bottomley: That is probably because my wife has had plenty of opportunity to listen to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow).

The position is rather more than that stated by the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson). First, ACPO Scotland suggested to the Scottish Office that the removal of some restrictions might be useful. I believe that ACPO was suggesting that it would not want mass random testing. The ACPO General, which takes in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, had a discussion in May on this matter at its conference in Eastbourne. I regret it if it did not ask my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne to attend.

Mr. Gow: It did not.

Mr. Bottomley: At its May conference, it was evenly balanced between whether there was a need for reinstatement of the law, restatement of the law or the removal of some of the restrictions on police powers. Subsequently, it came to a majority decision that it would welcome unfettered discretion, but it was not talking about mass random testing.

The issue is rather in the air and is there to be grabbed by any hon. Member who is interested in taking hold of it.

Mr. Gow: I am grateful to the hon. Member for East Lothian and, of course, to my hon. Friend the Minister for those helpful interventions.

In the Public Accounts Committee—under the distinguished chairmanship of the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon), who is also a distinguished former Treasury Minister—close attention was paid to the evidence presented by the Comptroller and Auditor General.

The Department of Transport—in which the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office my right hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker) used to serve—explained that in May 1988—which by common consent is only nine months ago—that English law gave the police powers to stop vehicles at random. Having stopped the vehicle, police could then administer a roadside breath test.

The Association of Chief Police Officers, to which the hon. Member for East Lothian referred, considered that the powers that I have just described were adequate to allow police forces to deploy resources effectively and efficiently to deal with those who seem likely to be driving while over the limit.

It is clear that the present law about the limit of alcohol that we are allowed to have in our blood, is being widely flouted. My hon. Friend the Minister and the hon. Member for East Lothian would agree with that. Unfortunately, there is no representative from the Social Democratic or the Liberal parties here today.

Mr. Paul Boateng (Brent, South): Why not?

Mr. Gow: As it is a Friday and the day on which the funeral of the Emperor of Japan is taking place, I think that I am allowed to call the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) my hon. Friend. He has asked a relevant question to which we both know the answer. We are discussing a matter of the highest importance, but representatives of the so-called centre parties are absent.

Mr. Boateng: That is very kind of the hon. Gentleman. He will recall when he and I were members of the Housing Bill Committee that time and again hon. Members on both sides of the Committee felt compelled to draw attention to the absence of members of what I believe at the time were still called the Liberal and the Social Democratic parties. That was before the great sea change. However, it was necessary for us to point out to the public that those right hon. and hon. Members are absent. Where are they now? It really is not good enough, is it?

Mr. Gow: I believe that it was my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South who with characteristic eloquence described the Liberal party as being composed of a band of visionary missionaries with neither vision nor mission. I do not want to quarrel with those sentiments which, if my memory serves me correct, he expressed. We continue this debate as best we can without the assistance of any representatives from the Social Democratic party and the Liberal party.

I have already apologised to the hon. Member for East Lothian and to my hon. Friend the Minister, but it is a matter of deep regret to me that I must make a journey, mercifully in a railway train, to Eastbourne. I would like to take my hon. Friend the Minister with me, but I apologise to him and to the House for the fact that I will not be able to stay and hear my hon. Friend the Minister's reply. However, I will study the Official Report with great care on Monday. I repeat my congratulations to the hon. Member for East Lothian. He knows that we share a common purpose. My only question is whether this legislation is necessary now. Perhaps in future we may decide that it is important to clarify the law. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister can answer my point and I assure him that no discourtesy is intended for the journey that I must make to Eastbourne.

1.8 pm

Mr. Frank Cook (Stockton, North): I will detain the House only briefly because I had not intended to speak in this debate. However, perhaps there are one or two observations that I can make. I shall not speak for too long because I have an uneasy suspicion that other hon. Members may want to talk out this business and I should not like to spoil their opportunity to prove their prowess in such an ignoble exercise.

I shall make brief reference to my own experience. Until the middle of 1988, I was opposed to such proposals. Then I started to think more deeply and carefully about the issue and realised that I had probably been afraid of offending those of my colleagues who choose to combine drinking and driving. Indeed, I had done it myself. I confess to the House, not in any spirit of frivolity, nor with any wish to flaunt my past record, that on two occasions in the past I have been done for drinking and driving. On the first occasion, I was seeking to retrieve documents from the back seat of my car which was parked in my drive at 3.40 on a Saturday morning. I was apprehended by a police officer who requested me to undergo a breath test and did me for being in charge of a vehicle. I was guilty under the letter of the law. On the second occasion I had no such defence, so I have been convicted twice for that offence.

Perhaps that created a vestige of resentment to any intervention by the police in what I considered to be a fairly impeccable standard of driving. However, on 10 November 1985, for reasons totally unconnected with my medical condition or my driving ability, I decided to forsake the booze and the baccy on the same day.

Mr. Tony Favell (Stockport): Did the hon. Gentleman have all his hair cut off on the same day?

Mr. Cook: I can assure the hon. Gentleman that it was some years before that. I recall vividly that it was 10 November 1985, which was Remembrance Sunday. I was drunk at the time when I made the decision, and I argued with myself for two and a half hours before I convinced myself that the move was necessary. However, the hon. Gentleman has diverted me. I must get back to the thread that I was hanging on to before he intervened.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The House will be awed by the hon. Gentleman talking about his past. He has made sure that we realise that the problem is an "us" problem rather than a "them" problem and involves people such as politicians, journalists, police officers, doctors, nurses, social workers, parents and drink-driving campaigners. We are looking for a combination of effective enforcement, deterrence and, above all, greater public understanding and the change of attitude which underlies the successful conversion. The hon. Gentleman will agree that we need more recent converts, although I do not know why he gave up tobacco and drinking on the same day.

Mr. Cook: I am grateful to the Minister for his declaration of understanding, which is not uncharacteristic, though it is not frequently directed at me.

To reinforce what the Minister said, on my second conviction my solicitor pointed out that if justice had been done on each and every occasion when the law had been transgressed he would probably have suffered 400 prosecutions in one year—that was his opinion, not a legal judgment.

In the middle of last year, I thought a great deal more clearly about the matter. I know that alcohol addles the brain temporarily, and if it is taken too consistently in too great a quantity it addles the brain permanently. Perhaps it took from 10 November 1985 until the middle of 1988 to clear from my brain completely. Certainly I had consumed sufficient alcohol in previous years to create such problems.

So much crime and law breaking is drink related. I refer not just to driving but to violence, theft, drug abuse, wife beating and child abuse. Probably 95 per cent. of crime is drink related. It was recognition of that influence that drove me to think more carefully, and to draw the conclusion that is clear to me now—I only wonder how it took 52 years for me to realise it. If we allow ourselves to be in control of a weapon as deadly as a vehicle which can move at speeds in excess of 25 mph—I say 25 rather than 125 advisedly—we must place upon ourselves the responsibility for being in full control of our faculties.

Alcohol consumption is designed to blunt our faculties and to obscure their acuity. That is an element in drinking about which people boast the morning after, when they talk of having had a good "bender" or, as they say in the north-east, "I had a black 'un". My realisation of responsibility drove me to adopt my present point of view and to support unreservedly the case put by my hon. Friend the promoter of the Bill. I am not a sponsor of the Bill, but I am a fervent supporter of the move. I shall not detain the House longer, because I wish to see from which direction the filibustering prowess will come which will deny the passage of the Bill at 2.30 pm.

1.16 pm

Sir. Hugh Rossi (Hornsey and Wood Green): I join my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) in congratulating the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on presenting his Bill today. I believe that my hon. Friend and I are the only two people in the Chamber today who were present when breathalysing was first enacted in 1967. The argument that then ranged right across the House concerned interference in the individual's rights and freedom—whether, in the absence of evidence that an offence had been committed, it was right for a policeman to stop and detain a member of the public and obtain such evidence thereafter.

If my memory serves me right, that question was resolved by the then Minister of Transport Mrs. Barbara Castle, who said that the right to breathalyse could be operated only when the police suspected that a road traffic offence had been committed. It was said that shooting traffic lights, not having lights, indicating that one was turning in the wrong direction, and other actions that might attract a police officer's attention provided sufficient justification to breathalyse the driver. Although the law is by no means clear and has been interpreted differently by different police forces, the general trend has been to follow that practice. However, in recent months there has been something of a departure and some rethinking by the police as to whether or not the law should be more strictly interpreted and enforced.

The great merit of the Bill is not that it seeks to impose a blanket right on the part of the police to stop and breathalyse, but that it seeks to clarify the law and indicate circumstances in which breathalysing is permissible, as well as introducing the deterrent of organised spot checks. Although I generally support any argument in favour of the rights and freedom of the individual, there are times when, and circumstances in which, in the general interests of the community, a measure of restraint or delimitation must be imposed.

What brought that matter to mind is the unhappy case of one of my constituents, a woman who still writes to me today, whose 17-year-old son was killed in a road accident some years ago. He was a passenger in a motor car. He was an outgoing young man of attractive personality and was well beloved, not only by his mother but by all who had contact with him. What a tragic waste of life. For reasons that I have not yet comprehended, the police decided not to prosecute, and the mother had to bring a private prosecution. The driver was found guilty, and the judge expressed his concern that she had been put to the expense of bringing the prosecution and that the public authorities had failed her to that extent.

That story, which comes back to me at regular intervals, has left me with two thoughts. First, until a tragedy occurs—please God that it does not happen—we do not realise the extent of a bereaved parent's grief. One can say, "If something happens to my child, I shall feel terrible about it," but one does not realise the depth of that grief and how long it lasts. It is easy to utter platitudes such as "Time will be a great healer" or "One must learn to forgive". It is almost impossible to eradicate deep bitterness. One would rather not have to contemplate the pain that is seen to be suffered.

Young, hopeful lives are suddenly wasted on our roads every day because of some carelessness or foolishness on the part of a driver who has drunk too much—certainly more than entitles him to be in control of the lethal weapon that a motor car can be.

The other thought was that perhaps we are too lax on drinking and driving and that we should take steps to increase the deterrence within our legal system. Some young people do not need it—they are sensible. When they go to parties, my young but adult children and their group of friends always ensure that one of them has only soft drinks. They take it in turns to have soft drinks. That is a sensible practice, but not every group behaves in that way. Hon. Members should devise ways and means of encouraging young people to adopt that practice. They can enjoy themselves and have a good evening without consistently rendering themselves silly through the consumption of alcohol.

Because of the experience of that one constituent, I hope that the hon. Gentleman's Bill is successful. No doubt, the Minister will rely upon the fact that, through Home Office consultation, the Government are considering the matter and will say that the Bill is premature. But the hon. Gentleman has made a good offer. He is prepared to defer consideration of the Bill until consultations with the Home Office are complete. He is prepared to consider any reasonable amendments that the police authorities consider necessary for practical reason. One does not often hear a fairer offer, and on that ground alone the Bill is entitled to be given a Second Reading.

Mr. Gary Waller (Keighley): Hon. Members will have listened with care to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) and with sadness to the case that he mentioned.

We are all aware of cases in which innocent people have had their lives destroyed through injury and paralysis because of the actions of a driver who should not have been driving because he or she was intoxicated. Relatives of those who have lost their lives have told us that the law should be strengthened to deter drivers from drinking and taking to the roads. We are all sympathetic to that objective, because far too high a proportion of the 4,000 or 5,000 deaths and the even greater number of serious injuries that occur on our roads each year could have been avoided.

We welcome the steps that my hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic has taken to prevent drinking and driving. He is right to say that there has been a sea change in people's attitudes to this unsociable and unacceptable activity. Much of that success is undoubtedly due to the discussions that he has had with brewers and others to encourage those who frequent pubs and other establishments to drink something else. Many people feel that it is a sign of lack of virility or strange social behaviour if they do not enter into the spirit of things and take alcoholic drink. However, people are increasingly appreciating that one can have a soft or low-alcohol drink without anyone thinking the worse of them. There has been much success in the development of low-alcohol drinks and my hon. Friend should take credit for the encouragement that he has given to speed up that development. We should like it to extend further.

Hon. Members wre impressed by the sincerity and honesty with which the hon. Member for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook) spoke. Few hon. Members would be prepared to speak as he did about their culpability and to say to others, "do not act in the way that I did in the past, which I now regret." We admire him for making those remarks.

Now is not the time to introduce legislation, however, because at the beginning of the month my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department published a consultation document and it would be precipitate to introduce legislation when people are being asked to give their views. If the law is to be changed, the way to gain public acceptability is not by pressing ahead at the very moment when there are consultations and apparently taking little notice of the responses to those consultations.

Mr. Home Robertson: That is a point with which I tried to deal earlier. I welcome the fact that the Home Office has begun to move on the subject, albeit six weeks after the Bill was introduced. I made it clear that I would be prepared to defer further consideration of the Bill until after the end of the consultation process that the Home Secretary has started. I should be happy if the House could give the Bill a Second Reading at the beginning of May and for it to go into Committee after that. That would enable us to make progress with the benefit of the information gleaned by the Home Office in the course of the consultations. There is a prospect of partnership on that basis.

Mr. Waller: I welcome an approach that involves partnership, as the hon. Gentleman said. Nevertheless, I believe that the changes needed—if there are to be changes—are not so simple as he may believe. I would argue that there need to be safeguards which must be thought about carefully. I hope and believe that before long my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will introduce legislation to improve the road traffic law. That would be a more suitable opportunity to consider any legislation which may be desirable on this aspect, in the context of other legislation which may be introduced and may be of some relevance, following the Government's response to the North report.

Mr. Home Robertson: That was not in the White Paper.

Mr. Waller: It is correct to say that it did not fall within the ambit of the work of Dr. North to consider the law as it relates to drink driving, but clearly there is a relationship between this and much other traffic law. It is not right to consider drink driving in isolation without taking account of other aspects of road traffic law and also of police powers.

I want to discuss police powers because there is considerable misunderstanding about what they are. At present, the police powers to stop vehicles and to require roadside breath tests are contained in two separate provisions of the Road Traffic Act 1972. Under section 159, a police officer may stop any vehicle at any time. It is not understood that the police have those powers and it is important that the public should appreciate that those powers exist. Of course, the powers are used in different ways by different chief constables and police forces.

Under section 7 of the same Act, breath tests may be required:

"where there is reasonable cause to suspect that the driver has alcohol in his body."

A police officer may be able to assess that simply by moving close to the driver to detect any smell of alcohol that there may be on the driver.

Mr. Home Robertson: The hon. Gentleman seems to be acknowledging the case for the principle of random breath tests and suggesting that they are possible under present legislation. Can he not see that the procedure whereby a motorist must be stopped under the general power in section 163 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 and then the constable has to go through the charade of deciding whether he suspects that the motorist has been drinking, and subsequently administering the breath test under section 6, is tailor made to create confrontation and misunderstanding? Has the hon. Gentleman not already acknowledged that the situation is widely misunderstood and that people do not recognise that they are at risk of being caught? There is a great need at least to clarify the existing law and, I hope, to go beyond targeted breath tests to the general principle of random breath tests.

Mr. Waller: I have already said that there is a misunderstanding, and I, for one, would not be averse to a change in the law to avoid that misunderstanding in future.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been trying to avoid intervening, although I am fascinated by everything that has been said. As some hon. Members may not be present for the whole debate, I should make it clear that many motorists do not regard it as a charade if they are stopped and checked. For example, when the chief constable of Warwickshire made safety checks, he found more fault with the cars than with the drivers. People leaving Twickenham and Henley were stopped by the police, who found that of perhaps 700 people they needed to test about 70 and to arrest only five or seven at Henley and none at Twickenham. Such checks are not a charade, nor are they offensive to many motorists. The evidence does not support that claim.

Mr. Waller: What my hon. Friend says is right. I do not believe that there is enormous public dissatisfaction or outrage at the present law, although many people feel that it could work better. We do not receive daily or even weekly or monthly letters from our constituents saying that the mechanics and operation of the present law are unsatisfactory. Many people would prefer there to be a better deterrent, and many do not appreciate what the present law is.

I was explaining the circumstances in which a police officer may require a breath test. He may require a test if he has reasonable cause to suspect that a driver has alcohol in his body. That is a very wide power indeed, He may also require a breath test where he has reasonable cause to suspect that a driver has committed a moving traffic offence. That, too, is a very wide power. It means that if one of the lights on a car is not working or if a person is driving somewhat abrubtly, a police officer has reasonable cause to administer a breath test.

Mr. Home Robertson: I know that the hon. Gentleman is making a serious point, but does he not acknowledge that it would be infinitely better if we could deter people effectively before they get behind the wheel of a car? It is too late to catch people when they are driving erratically or, as happens in many tragic cases, when they have already killed someone else or injured themselves. One way or another the House should get it across to people that there is a risk of being caught. We should pass the legislation required to deter people from engaging in this vicious, murderous conduct in the first place. We are catching people far too late if we catch them only when they have committed a moving traffic offence.

Mr. Waller: We are all interested in deterrence. This debate is essentially about deterrence, and we are interested in deterring not only the small minority of people who may be detected committing a moving traffic offence, but a much greater number of people than that. However, if more people appreciated what the present law is, they might be deterred. They might also be deterred if they appreciated the wide powers that police officers already have. Of course we are interested in deterrence, but it is a question of assessing how the deterrent effect can be applied most effectively. Many people believe—in my view mistakenly—in the abstract that a random power would be the most effective way of deterring people. As I develop my speech, I hope to show that there are different views as to the most sensible way of deterring people from drinking and driving.

A police officer may also require a breath test if there is reasonable cause to believe that the driver has been involved in an accident. The courts have held that it is lawful for the two powers contained in sections 7 and 159 of the Road Traffic Act 1972 to be used together. The question that we must ask is whether there would be benefits in clarifying the position and in bringing together the two powers in one section. That is one of the options that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has laid before the public. I maintain that consolidating the existing powers would be a sensible move forward. By bringing together in one section the separate powers of sections 7 and 159 of the 1972 Act, and by seeking to express parliamentary endorsement of their use in combination, there would be better public understanding of the powers that enable the police to stop and test within clearly stated legislative provisions.

It would not be sensible, however, to introduce unrestricted powers to require a breath test or to give police officers untramelled powers to set up road blocks and to stop every fifth or tenth car and ask the driver to give a breath test. That would not be a sensible use of police resources which, after all, are one of the main problems in achieving better deterrence. The police have many other demands on their time.

At Christmas 1987, when the police tested 37,050 drivers and found that 10 per cent. were over the limit, that was the average of the country as a whole but there were enormous differences from one police force to another. At one extreme, in Norfolk 1,800 people were tested and only 30 were found positive—in other words, 2 per cent. of those tested produced a positive test. In Northumbria, far fewer motorists were tested but out of the 290 who were tested 100 were found positive—that is, 34 per cent. of the total.

Mr. Home Robertson rose——

Mr. Waller: I think I know what the hon. Gentleman is going to say. I suspect that he will say that in Norfolk more people were deterred from drinking and driving.

Mr. Home Robertson: Yes.

Mr. Waller: I do not think that the evidence shows that. We can assess the effectiveness of deterrence only by reference to accident, injury and fatality rates. I submit that there is no evidence to show that counties with a much more rigorous approach to this matter—counties which already, in effect, impose random tests—have, for that reason, a much better record of preventing accidents in which people are killed or injured. However, if the evidence were available, it would strengthen the hon. Gentleman's argument.

Mr. Home Robertson: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving way yet again. He disposed of his earlier point exactly as I would have done, and I am grateful to him for rubbishing his own point.

Does he accept that there is ample evidence from abroad, especially from New South Wales, that as much as a 30 per cent. reduction in fatal and injury accidents can be achieved as a result of applying such a policy? Will he also accept that in New South Wales and Finland the implementation of this type of legislation did not lead to any increase in the requirement for police manpower? It is an efficient power which can work to save lives.

Mr. Waller: I have not studied the New South Wales figures carefully.

Mr. Peter Bottomley rose——

Mr. Waller: Before my hon. Friend intervenes, I should like to point out that there is always a temptation to say that because a change of one kind or another has been made, any change in the casualty rate must be the result of that change. Arguments of that kind were used in both directions in our debates on the seat belt legislation. New South Wales and the other Australian states are high on the list of comparisons, but I am suspicious about using statistics in the way that the hon. Gentleman suggests, although I shall be happy to examine any that he may care to provide.

Mr. Bottomley: From 1982 onwards there has been a dramatic reduction in drink driving in New South Wales, but the amount of drink driving in Britain in 1982 was lower than in New South Wales, and it is lower in Britain now than it is in New South Wales. By selecting a particular year, one can prove all sorts of different things, but the key point is that one should not place too many hopes on any comparison. If a person doing research came to Britain from New South Wales, or from Victoria or New Zealand, and asked how Britain compared with what was happening in those places, he would be told that Britain was doing better. The issue that has been raised by the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) and that my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) is addressing is whether Britain can do better than it is doing now. I do not believe that we learn much from comparisons with other places.

Mr. Waller: That was a helpful intervention. I agree entirely with my hon. Friend that those who promote road traffic causes tend to use examples from experience abroad which can sometimes be misleading. One has to examine carefully the circumstances in different countries. In many respects, the position in Britain is different from that in other countries. We must therefore exercise great care when drawing comparisons.

I said earlier that a much higher proportion—34 per cent.—of the tests in Northumbria proved to be positive. Had the police in Norfolk, as happened in Northumbria, limited themselves to stopping people who appeared to be drunk, they would have caught far more people. Road blocks are an ineffective means of catching drunk drivers. While the police are stopping thousands of innocent people at one location, they are not available to patrol areas where they are far more likely to come across people breaking the law. The police need to target their efforts much more carefully.

Some chief constables interpret the present law in a way that can only be described as allowing random testing ahead of any changes to the law that we might consider. It has been reported that in one area 6,000 tests were administered in the pre-Christmas period, only nine of which were found to be positive. Nationally, the percentage found to be positive has fallen from 43 per cent. in 1976 to 28 per cent. in 1986. That may be because people are drinking less when they drive, which is to be welcomed, but, it may also suggest that chief constables—certainly the chief constable of Norfolk—are operating a random policy. The wholesale stopping of innocent motorists to catch the guilty can be counterproductive and alienate the vast majority of innocent drivers.

It is true that a large number of those who were questioned said that they would not be against the introduction of a random system, even though many of them did not understand the present position. However, among the large minority of people who are against such a change there are many who would be antagonised by the random stopping of motorists. In this country we are fortunate that the overwhelming majority of people have great confidence in the way in which the police carry out their duties. I do not want to see a change in the law, introduced precipitatly, in a way which could damage the relationship between the police and the public. A minority of people would be antagonised by a change which conflicts with the general principles applying to the way in which the police carry out their duties. We have got rid of the sus law and other legislation in which the police could operate their powers arbitrarily. For instance, in public order legislation and the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 we have been careful to ensure that the police cannot stop people at random simply because their face is black, they look scruffy or for some other reason. We do not want to return to circumstances in which the police stop people ar random without having cause to do so. That is why we have to be careful before proceeding in the way suggested by the hon. Member for East Lothian.

There is a good case for improving the law so that there is no doubt about what it means. There is also a good case for consolidating the two separate provisions of the existing road traffic law so that people understand it and so that we have the best possible deterrent powers. Ultimately, we all share the same interest in making the person who is thinking of going out to drive after taking a drink have second thoughts and stay at home or find somebody else to drive. That is the objective of all of us. It is merely a question of how we go about it in an effective way which ensures that the current harmonious relationship between the police and the public continues in the future.

1.52 pm

Mr. Tony Favell (Stockport): It gives me great pleasure to follow the speech made by my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller). He is my squash partner——

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Who wins?

Mr. Favell: Perhaps I win a little more often than he does, but I can say that because I am speaking after him.

I am sorry to say that I once again find myself in conflict with my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley. I hit him on the nose last week and he bears a scar to this day. His mother is convinced that I am trying to disfigure her son. On this occasion I do not propose to take my squash racquet to him but hope to win by force of argument.

My hon. Friend said, rightly, that he does not wish to bring the police into conflict with the public and that he fears—it is a fear that he is right to express—that random breath tests could introduce such a conflict. Many people have come to see me in my prosessional capacity as a solicitor and, since becoming a Member of Parliament, to talk about contretemps with the police. I have never heard anybody complain about passing a breath test. Indeed, they have never complained about being given a breath test that they failed. Almost every member of the public understands the reason for breath tests. They are concerned about their safety and the safety of their family. We all know from statistics the effect that drink has on drivers. Therefore, I am confident that the public support the police.

It gives me particular pleasure to support the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson). He probably remembers that I was a sponsor of his previous private Member's Bill and that I served on the Standing Committee. It was a sensible Bill also concerned with safety—the safety of children—and it was enacted. This is an equally sensible Bill, concerned with the safety of us all.

I look forward to hearing what my hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic says. He has done an enormous amount to bring to the notice of the public the dangers of drink driving, and he has done so without fear. Indeed, he has often been criticised in the press and also, occasionally, in the Tea Room for his strong views on what should be done to curb drink driving. I endorse and support all that he does. More strength to his elbow—if that is not an unfortunate phrase—in promoting the cause for which he fights so well.

I support the Bill for three reasons. First, the law as it stands is an obstacle to convicting someone who has been driving while under the influence of drink. When breath tests were first introduced they were a veritable obstacle course. It almost seemed that Parliament had made it virtually impossible for anyone to be convicted. The police had to go through the most extraordinary ritual before they could demand a breath test, and a further ritual had to take place at the police station before a blood test could be administered. If one wrong step was taken in complying with the regulations made under the Road Traffic Act 1972 the defendant in court would, almost undoubtedly, be found not guilty. As a solicitor I have, on many occasions, made use of the regulations to ensure that my clients were found not guilty.

Mr. Bottomley: Shame.

Mr. Favell: It is a shame, but we get paid for it and, as my hon. Friend knows, lawyers are under threat and have to try to eke out a living somehow.

Mr. Bottomley: I thought that my hon. Friend said that he was a solicitor. I thought that it was barristers who felt under threat, not solicitors.

Mr. Favell: We feel that we may be next in line, so we have to be rather careful.

[Mr. Favell]

I have a personal friend from Loughborough called Henry Charles, whose main claim to fame was that he discovered that the breathalyser kit laid down in the original Act had not been approved by the Home Secretary. On those grounds, not only was one of his clients found not guilty but several other people received pardons. Those are the sort of obstacles that existed under the original regulations, and one remaining obstacle, remains.

As we have heard from my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley a policeman now has the right to stop the driver of a car or motor cycle on the road. If he suspects that the driver is under the influence of drink, he can demand that the driver takes a breath test, but he must show that he has reasonable cause. Regardless of whether the driver has been drinking, if the policeman fails to show reasonable cause, the driver may be found not guilty. That seems nonsense.

My first reason for supporting the Bill is that the present regulations are the final obstacle to bringing a drunken driver before the courts. My second reason is that it is still widely believed by the public that random tests —even to stop and breathalyse a driver if he is believed to have been drinking—are not right unless the driver has committed a moving traffic offence. There can be no better reason for supporting the Bill than to make it absolutely clear to the public that people can be stopped—regardless of whether they have committed an offence or whether they were weaving their way along the road—and then, if they have been drinking, given a breath test.

Let us have clarification. Let the people know the position. A recent MORI poll showed that 2 million people still drink and drive regularly. That is far too many. There should be none. Too many people are still drinking and driving because they believe that, if they drive carefully, they will get home without being stopped. Indeed, reference has been made to the Christmas blitzes. In those areas where it is most likely that a driver will be stopped over Christmas, people are not drink-driving. I have heard people say in the pubs and clubs, "You should not go anywhere near Derbyshire. They will be absolutely red hot on drink-driving during Christmas week". Therefore, people avoid drinking and driving in that area during Christmas week. However, the minute the new year begins back they go on to the roads, because the police do not have the right, or are perceived not to have the right, to stop motorists randomly. That is another good reason for clarification.

My third reason for supporting the Bill is that I believe that it will deter and that it will save lives. I cannot conceive of any reason why the public should object to the police having those powers when many believe that they have them already.

A recent newspaper report stated that a coach full of schoolchildren travelling from Dover had been stopped because the police believed that it was overweight because of beer bought in Calais. The coach was delayed for four or five hours while it was weighed. If the police have power to do that and to delay schoolchildren for four or five hours on their way home, how much better is the reason for the police to have a right to stop someone on the offchance that he may have been drinking.

I support the hon. Gentleman's Bill and I hope that it has a Second Reading.

2.3 pm

Ms. Joan Ruddock (Lewisham, Deptford): The Opposition have not taken an official position on the measures in the Bill, but I shall speak briefly about some of the concerns that we share with its presenter. The magnitude of the crime involved is, of course, not doubted by any hon. Members. There are 950 drink-drive deaths per annum and 25,000 casualities in alcohol-related injury accidents. In that enormous number of people who have suffered because of the effects of drink-driving, one half were people who themselves were not drunken drivers when they had their accidents.

Drink driving is a more serious source of death, accident and injury than any other serious crime, such as homicide. It follows from that, therefore, that the police should be expected to make this a priority. It is an area of criminal activity in which the police must properly give much time and attention.

The need for deterrence is clear. As other hon. Members have said, the risk of detection varies enormously throughout the country. It can be as low as one in 4,000 and at its highest it is probably only one in 250. As a consequence, public attitudes are important. In that respect I want to cite a poll which has been published this month that shows that of those who ever drink any alcohol away from home, 77 per cent. of drivers believe that the police should have the power to carry out spot breath tests on any driver. That shows that since 1976 support for such a statement among men has increased from 54 per cent. to 73 per cent., and to no less than 83 per cent. among young men between the ages of 18 and 24. It is that latter group which is of most concern to the police, and which is involved in the highest proportion of the offences.

For all those reasons, we believe that the House should have the opportunity to study in Committee this important Private Member's Bill. I believe that the manner of presentation of the Bill by my hon. Friend the Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) shows that he is more than willing to negotiate and to postpone his measure until there has been full consultation. Those are the reasons why I wanted to come to the Dispatch Box to support the opportunity for the Bill to receive its Second Reading today.

2.4 pm

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Peter Bottomley): I think that the advice which the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) gave to her hon. Friend the Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) about flexibility may lead to both of them being successful in getting private Member's Bills through. Obviously the time available for this debate is rather shorter than that available for the previous one. The hon. Member for East Lothian and I would want to acknowledge that the hon. Member for Deptford in moving her Bill and my hon. Friend the Minister who responded to her were very kind in not taking up all the time available so that this important subject could be debated, at least in part.

The House will also welcome the way in which the hon. Member for East Lothian said that he would be willing to put off the conclusion on Second Reading until the Home Office had had time to consider the responses to consultation. That shows that there is a great deal of common interest in this House in seeing how far public opinion has changed since the present powers were laid down in statute.

The hon. Member for East Lothian will want to welcome all the speeches today. The hon. Member for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook) perhaps made the most useful speech. He provided a reminder that there are many of us, especially men, who in the past did drink and drive. We know many still do. The MORI survey for LEX showed a figure of about 1·5 million people who thought that they drove above the legal limit. I suspect that that figure is exaggerated. People gave what they thought were honest answers, but many of them thought that the legal limit was higher than it is. I try not to concentrate on the legal limit because I want no one to try to drink up to it. The only sensible advice from the Department of Transport, from the House, from the medical profession and the brewers is that drinking and driving do not mix. Do not combine the bottle and the throttle. People must make sure that they decide in advance whether they are going to drive or drink.

The House would unite in the belief that there are three messages that we want to convey to people under the umbrella of "Drinking and Driving Wrecks Lives". First, the host has responsibility to provide an attractive range of alcohol-free or very low-alcohol drinks for drivers. That applies to clubs, pubs, hotels, restaurants, office parties and family parties.

The second message was reinforced by the hon. Member for Deptford, who reminded us that nearly half of those who die in drink-related crashes are drivers. Of those who are not drivers, perhaps one in four or five of them are what I call consenting adults. In other words, they are passengers who knew in advance that the driver was going to drink, got into the car knowing that the driver had been drinking and then ended up as half innocent victims. We must also feel the greatest concern for people who might be called the uninvolved fatalities. In other words, I am referring to the driver coming in the opposite direction or the pedestrian on the pavement. Our hearts go out to them, and those are the people for whom we must fight hardest.

I suggest that the campaign against drinking and driving and the Scottish campaign against irresponsible driving, to which I give credit for raising public awareness about this problem, should open their memberships more obviously to the families of the drinking drivers who have died. To try to prevent deaths they should also open their memberships to the families of drinking drivers who are still alive. The deterrent approach matters most.

I am glad that hon. Members have not spent time trying to be heavy-handed. The arguments for clarifying the law and for altering police powers—the two sections of the Bill—are directed at ensuring that fewer people combine alcohol with driving.

I have spoken about the host's responsibility and the passenger's responsibility, but thirdly, and above all, we must consider the driver's responsibility. If I, as a driver, go to a party where most of the drink on offer is alcoholic, and if no alcohol-free drink is available, or if I feel a fool by asking for it, my responsibility is not to go along with the tide and drink alcohol, but to hold back because I am driving. If I am in a pub or a restaurant where the alcohol-free drink is being sold at the same price, a not-sufficiently-reduced price or even a higher price than alcoholic drink, how could I face myself the next morning if I had saved 10p or even £1 but I had ended someone else's life? My hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) recounted quite graphically the effect upon the family of a person who has died. It is a life sentence for parents if one of their children is killed by a drunken driver, or even if the young person is the drunken driver who has been killed.

No excuses remain for drinking and driving. One of the main reasons for that is the way in which the media have helped to put the subject on the public agenda. I am grateful to Members of Parliament who have helped put the matter on the political agenda. All the old excuses have gone and people now realise that it is not possible to say truthfully that there is no alternative to alcoholic drink.

I pay tribute to the brewers who have developed low-alcohol and alcohol-free lagers and beers, £20 million of which of which were sold in 1986 and about £120 million in 1988—the fastest growing part of the beer market. Low-alcohol beer tastes much better, but I recommend that people keep it in the refrigerator as it does not taste so good warm.

The publicans and the people who work in the not-for-profit clubs, the working men's clubs, the Labour clubs, the Tory clubs and the Liberal clubs—such as the one in Colne Valley, which has a Tory Member of Parliament—and the whole range of working men's institutes have joined publicans in promoting alcohol-free drink and I pay tribute to them. The one group which has made the biggest difference is the people behind the counters who decide what they stock. Derek Dormer for the union representing the working men's clubs has done a great deal and the institute's magazine quotes a great many clubs where a quarter of the beer sold is alcohol-free or very low-alcohol beer. That is tremendous.

When occasionally I am attacked by the media—not that people in the media are terribly interested in this debate, which is taking place at lunch time—I remember that I received a standing ovation once in my 14 years of public service, and that was at the annual dinner of the National Licensed Victuallers Association. If the publicans of this country get to their feet and applaud—or at least get to their feet—things are not that bad. It may have been because I spoke for so long or because I proposed the toast to Her Majesty the Queen, but at least it shows that the publicans are working with Parliament and are concerned.

Some have expressed the fear that I may suffer as my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir. G. Young) did when he stopped being a Minister at the Department of Health allegedly because the tobacco interests got cross with him. I may end my ministerial service quite soon, but it will not be because the brewers have got cross. The brewers are contributing to cutting death on the roads and are doing it very well. They spent £15 million last year on promoting drinks that drivers can take and that is tremendous.

I must say to the hon. Member for Stockton, North that if every other person in the community—whether or not they hold a position of responsibility or community representation—were as open as he has been, drink driving would be virtually ended within the next year. If people are willing to stand up and be counted and admit, "I have been an imperfect driver", or that they had combined drinking and driving, more people would be aware of the dangers.

Yesterday evening in Huddersfield I said that I had never been to a British Medical Association dinner where, on the menu beside the list of the fine food on one side and the fine wine on the other it said, "Members and guests are reminded that alcohol-free drink is on every table for drivers." One of the reasons why I have not seen such a thing at a BMA dinner is because I have never been invited to one. I did see it done once at a dinner of the County Surveyors' Society, and I hope that that practice will spread to magistrates and others involved in trying to save lives and enforce the law. Perhaps it should be adopted at more parliamentary dinners.

I wish to re-emphasise my comments on stocking alcohol-free drinks. We should consider the kinds of people who may not want to drink alcohol on any given occasion. About 10 per cent. of people are teetotal, and they represent a significant group. Another 10 per cent. —some estimate 20 per cent.—are reforming alcoholics, who ought to be off the booze. They would be helped if the rest of us taking alcohol chose an alcohol-free drink before moving on to alcohol. In that way, the reforming alcoholic or person who acknowledges that they have a drink problem—and many people do not acknowledge that—will see that everyone else is ordering non-alcoholic drinks, and it will be easier for that individual to remain alcohol-free and not feel under any social pressure to take alcohol.

Mr. Home Robertson: While I have enjoyed the 10 minutes of the Minister's speech so far, I have heard a certain amount of it before. One knows of his strong feelings, and one agrees with much of what he says about individual responsibility. However, I eagerly await the Minister's comments about the Bill, which would deter more effectively the evil to which he refers.

I realise that the hon. Gentleman has been left to hold the fort by the Home Office, and that he may have an embarrassing Home Office brief before him. Nevertheless, it will be helpful if before 2.30 pm, the Minister will give an indication of whether he intends to allow the Bill to make progress, or whether he is doing the Home Office's dirty work in talking it out.

Mr. Bottomley: I have an appalling suspicion that the hon. Gentleman must be coming up for reselection. He began his earlier speech cogently and effectively, acknowledging the realities of life and that it will probably be better to conclude the Second Reading debate—or at least make a decison about it—at the end of the consultation period.

The hon. Gentleman may have been momentarily distracted at the beginning of my remarks, but I thought that he had been sensible in agreeing on the best way forward. The hon. Gentleman will recall that I acknowledged how grateful we all are to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley), and to the hon. Member for Deptford for making it possible to debate this subject. The hon. Gentleman is wrong to suggest that my remarks make no contribution to the avoidance and deterrence of drink driving, and thereby to the avoidance and deterrence of the casualties associated with it, but merely compensate for the quality of my brief. The relationship between my Department and the Home Office is probably better in this field than in any other—not that I suggest that there is difficulty anywhere else in the seamless robe of Government.

I regret that the hon. Gentleman distracted me, because I wished to make further serious points that might help to continue the dramatic reduction in drink driving over the past three years. During the past three years, we have managed to change the attitude of the prime target group —the 18 to 24-year-olds, who previously were described in the General Accident survey as the YOBS, or young, over-the-limit, beer drinkers. Drink driving offences in that group have been cut faster than that of the Dumbos —dangerous, upper middle class business men over the limit, who have been drink-driving for decades. That shows what can be achieved without changing the law, police powers, or sentencing. However much one may believe either in the second part of the Bill, the suggestion that there should be full or mass random breath testing, or that there should be unfettered discretion, is misguided.

Every time that this issue is raised, there are opportunities to persuade another 100,000 people to give up drinking and driving. It is important to continue sending positive messages. The people who will be reading tomorrow's newspaper reports of this debate will not learn only that the hon. Member for East Lothian, is enjoying further success by steering another Bill through Parliament, albeit that the Second Reading decision will probably come after the consultation period. I hope that they will read also in Saturday's and Sunday's papers that drink driving deaths in Britain have been brought down below 1,000 a year for the first time since records began. I am not sure when the figures started to rise or to be calculated.

Drink driving in Britain is at a lower level than in most other countries. It has been coming down persistently over the past 22 years or so. When Barbara Castle introduced the breathalyser laws, she was laughed at, and most men tried to evade their consequences. My hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) made a lawyer's confession—he helped people to use technicalities to get off charges. We forgive lawyers many things, but, if they are changing in support of the general idea that 95 per cent. of us regard ourselves as potential victims of drinking drivers and few of us regard ourselves as potential victims of the police, we have made great progress.

The hon. Gentleman's offers, first, to consolidate the law—that is the middle option in the Home Office consultation paper—and, secondly, to provide that, within circumscribed procedures, the police may opt for random breath testing. It has been made plain that the present police powers are not understood by everyone. In legal terms, they are clear. They have been tested in the courts and have not been found wanting. It is possible for any one of us to be stopped and checked by the police without having original cause.

It is possible for the police to require a breath test in one of three circumstances: first, if someone has been involved in an accident; secondly, if someone has committed a moving traffic offence, or has given reasonable grounds to suspect that; or, thirdly, if there are reasonable grounds to suspect that someone has been drinking. Although he did not mention the accident point, my hon. Friend for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) clearly made those points.

Should those sections of the law be put together? I suspect that the results of the consultation are that they should be and it is possible that that could be put into the road traffic law or an amending Bill. I am grateful to the hon. Member for East Lothian for indicating that he would be prepared to be flexible about the Bill.

The next matter is far broader, and, I suspect, needs more than a two-hour debate. Should, by statute, the powers and operational procedures of the police be directly controlled? Some say yes. Certainly, over 100 hon. Members who signed the early-day motion appear to support that view. Many others say that the police powers should not be circumscribed at all. If the hon. Gentleman had phrased his Bill in another way to state that there should be no restrictions on the power of the police to require an alcohol test of a driver, perhaps 100 or so people would have agreed to that also. The hon. Gentleman may not have put his name at the top of the early-day motion, but that shows how opinions may vary. We should not prejudge hon. Member's reactions.

It is difficult for the House to lay down detailed requirements on how the police carry out the law. I am glad that police officers have discretion in many motoring offences. The point of the Government's approach and response to the North committee and its recommendations is that the trivial mistakes that all of us as motorists make some of the time should not necessarily lead us into court. Serious offences need to be dealt with most effectively, and drink driving is one of them.

I remind the House of the evidence of the pilot random alcohol surveys that the Department carried out last year. At one stage, they appeared to be controversial, but they have generally been accepted as worthwhile. The good news is that, after 10 o'clock on drinking nights—Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays—four out of five of the cars driving towards us are driven by someone who has not taken alcohol. The bad news is that one in five has. The good news is that 49 out of 50 are not above the legal limit when they have been two to five times more likely to be involved in a crash or a collision. The bad news is that one in 50 is above the legal limit. One in 500 is at twice the legal limit or above.

As the debate has turned mainly on deterrence and perceptions of risk, I remind all drivers that the police catch 1,000 drivers a week at twice the legal limit or above—people up to 20 times more likely to be involved in a crash or collision. That could not happen with random testing, it must come from targeted testing. Many people support what the police are doing. Another 1,000 people are between the legal limit and twice the legal limit. Many of them are caught by random stops, not random testing. I should not want to exaggerate. If anyone wants to see a mild exaggeration, they should look at the Evening Standard of 30 June 1988. The article did not make the second edition because the future of Elstree studio was more important than 1,000 people a year dying on the roads.

The police can test anyone, except those who have not been drinking, those who have not had a scrape or those who have not committed a moving traffic offence. In New South Wales last weekend, four out of five people were caught as a result of targeted rather than random testing. To catch 120,000 people a year in this country by random testing would require 23 million breath tests instead of the present total of 400,000, which is rising.

I shall not become involved in the points made by my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) about different statistics from different police services. The police should analyse the comparisons and learn from them rather than my pointing out any obvious or less obvious messages. More and more police services are taking the issue more seriously. The chief constable of Fife said that he was fed up—he did not say that, but it looked as though he were—with accidents involving drinking and driving. He required his officers to take more tests when it was lawful to do so. The number of tests increased, but the number of people over the limit and accidents decreased.

I have read in reports of an appalling publican in Ditchling who said that over Christmas he lost trade because West Sussex police were stopping people and testing them if there were lawful grounds to do so. Any publican relying on the drink-drive trade should switch to running a coffie bar. Some nine out of 10 publicans realise that a change has occurred. The hon. Member for East Lothian reminded me that anyone who continues to drink and drive should carry a kidney donor card because others may find more use for their organs.

The speech made my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green reminded us that we are not only discussing individuals. There is much pressure for less laxity. There is more pressure for effective enforcement, more effective deterrents and a culture change so that drinking and driving becomes as unlikely as smoking in a church, chapel, mosque or temple.

The biggest changes have come from public understanding. I ask the media to give more coverage not only to arguments for or against random testing, unfettered discretion or considering the existing system, which many have found unsatisfactory, but to why four men still go into a pub, the first buys a pint of beer all round and the other three feel that they must do the same. All four leave the pub over the legal limit. The media might say, especially the local press, why four out of five restaurants—whether they be Indian, Chinese, English or French—do not stock alcohol-free beer. Any restaurant that stocks beer should stock alcohol-free beer, because a third of their customers will be driving shortly afterwards.

Mr. Home Robertson: I acknowledge everything that the Minister is saying. Clearly we shall run out of time and the Chair is not in a position to accept a closure motion. Will the Minister say whether the Government will be prepared to consider making progress on the Bill, following the conclusion of the Home Office's consultation, on 5 May?

Mr. Bottomley: There have already been 2,000 responses to the consultation, and I am sure that the Home Office would welcome more. If it is possible to come to conclusions that might fit in with the Bill, there may be informal discussions to see what can be done. If there were an agreed way forward, the sooner that could be done the better, but whether it would be feasible is too early to judge. My right hon. Friend the Leader of the House and his ministerial alcohol group have a keen interest in seeing how we progress.

The hon. Member for East Lothian is riding with the tide. Many hon. Members have reflected the changing attitude that drinking and driving wrecks lives.

Many of us have misbehaved in the past. I put out a call to everyone concerned with the subject not just to give their views on the law, but to make their own contribution. They should provide alcohol-free drinks for drivers and expect them to take them. They should ask, "Are you sure?" if they see a driver drinking. Passengers should plan in advance to have an alcohol-free driver and drivers should remember that they have the prime responsibility to keep death off the roads.

There may be more deaths from sober drivers, but to have 1,000 deaths a year from drink driving means that 20 times a week a police officer knocks on a stranger's door and says that he is very sorry, but a son, a daughter, a husband or wife will not be coming home that night because somebody has been drink-driving. Those are the acts that we are trying to prevent. I ask everyone not to wait for a change in the law, if it comes, but to pack in the drinking and driving now. That is the real way of cutting our casualty rate dramatically.

It being half past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed upon Friday 5 May.

Reservoirs

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn—[Mr. Tristan Garel-Jones.]

2.35 pm

Ms. Diane Abbott (Hackney, North and Stoke Newington): When this new phenomenon—[Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. Will hon. Members who are not staying for the Adjournment debate please leave quietly? Meanwhile, I will give the hon. Lady a bit of injury time.

Ms. Abbott: We have a new phenomenon—a green Prime Minister or "the green goddess" as my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) calls her. Now that we have an environmentally minded Prime Minister and an environmentally conscious Government, I am confident that the case that I wish to make on a crucial environmental issue will be looked upon favourably. In the 29-acre Stoke Newington reservoir and filter beds site in my constituency we have what one might call a secret garden. My consititituency is one of the poorest areas of the country and is in one of the most built up parts of the inner city. Yet right in the middle of it we have a site the size of Regent's Park, which is an oasis—a green lung—for hundreds of thousands of people in Hackney, Haringey and Islington. Above all it serves as a green lung for thousands of my constituents who live on the huge council estate on Woodberry Down.

In addition to two large reservoirs, our secret garden contains four listed buildings, including our own castle—a pumping station built to look like a Scottish castle—and the reservoirs or man-made lakes provide a home for a host of wildlife, including 16 species of birds. Because the reservoirs are large and undisturbed—and because they do not freeze over in winter due to the movement of the water—they provide a unique home for wildlife, including smew and Bewick swans, tufted ducks, gulls and grebes, as well as a host of wild flowers and plants. Thousands of council tenants on the Woodberry Down estate overlook that secret garden and part of the complex—the New river—which goes all the way up to Hertfordshire.

Before I describe the threat to the site—our green lung—I remind the House that that expanse of water and open space is no ordinary site but has royal connections. The New river's royal connections go back to 1610, when the king bought an interest in it. From 1610 to 1954, the royal family received £500 a year from their investment in the New river. They were finally bought out for £8,234. That green space is unique—in its size, in the wildlife for which it provides a home, and in the service and pleasure that it provides for thousands of council tenants.

At this point, I make a plea to the Thames water authority to do more to allow public access to the site. We in Hackney and Islington have problems with access although there is access to the New river in Enfield, as there is in Hertfordshire. I wonder whether we in Hackney are thought so stupid that if we were allowed access to the site we might fall in and poison the water supply.

I have sketched for the benefit of the Minister the importance, significance and uniqueness of the Stoke Newington reservoir and filter bed site. Thames Water wants to destroy for profit that unique and marvellous site—that environmental treasure. Thames Water is poised to make £150 million from the development of the site—to fill in the site and squash into it no fewer than 1,100 houses, many in the form of blocks of flats, for sheer profit. Thames Water wants to destroy the site and drive away the wildlife, and thousands of my constituents will loose an environmental pleasure.

The scheme that Thames Water is bringing forward in conjunction with Countryside Properties plc refers to reserving a few units for community housing, but that community will not be our community. Single-parent mothers and people on the waiting list will not be housed in that community housing. Nobody in Hackney will be able to afford to buy or rent the bulk of the 1,100 units that Countryside Properties plc proposes. There is no question in my mind but that those flats and houses which will fetch £100,000 or £150,000 in the market, will be entirely out of the reach of ordinary people in Hackney.

The wildlife and the water on the site will be swept away. The site will be turned into a yuppie stockade in the middle of my constituency. All the possibilities of the site and all the community access to it will be lost for ever. I leave the social problems inherent in that yuppie stockade to the imagination of the House, but there will also be traffic problems and the divisiveness of creating an extremely expensive development in the middle of a poor area. What is more, the proposed development of the site endangers the New river, which has flowed for so many years.

I shall refer now to the possibilities of the site and to what the local community wants done with the site. Local people do not want it sold off to the highest bidder to make the highest possible profit for property speculators. The local community has campaigned and is campaigning for sporting facilities on the site. It would like the site to be used for angling, sailing, water sports or canoeing. I ask the Minister, with his professed interest in sport for all, to see that the site is used for some sporting purpose. I hope that he will do all that he can.

The local community would like the site to be used for sport, for nature conservation and for education. Local people believe that the site could house a garden centre or start-up workshops for small businesses. The local community has a whole range of ideas, revolving around the notions of making the site accessible to the community and maximising its potential for pleasure and education, and its usefulness. Basically however, local people want to keep it as a green lung. They want to keep the New river flowing and they want the two large reservoirs to continue in existence.

When talking about what could be done with the site, I stress that it is in the middle of a built-up area with special needs. The area in which the Stoke Newington reservoir and filter bed site is situated is one of particularly high density. Few people have back gardens. Many of the local people—as many as one in four— are unemployed. There are many elderly people and many children but a shortage of parks and of play and sporting facilities. Where there is a built-up area with so few gardens and a shortage of open air facilities, it is nothing short of criminal for Thames Water to consider, for sheer greed and profit, redeveloping the area and filling it with housing.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): I thank my hon. Friend for giving way as this also concerns my constituency, which is just a few yards away from the New river, the reservoirs and the filter bed site.

The borough of Islington has the smallest amount of open space of any metropolitan district in the country and values dearly the little open space that it has. The people of Islington are horrified to hear that the reservoirs, which have been a source of pleasure for many years, could be lost through a development which would be of no benefit to people on the housing waiting lists in Islington and Hackney. The filter bed site provides a unique opportunity for recreational-type development. We would be horrified if supermarkets and hypermarkets were built on it, or if the reservoirs were filled in for exclusive housing development, to which my hon. Friend has rightly drawn attention.

The people of Islington want more open space. It improves the quality of life of the people who live in a densely-populated urban area. It provides a real opportunity for their children to develop a love and an understanding of wildlife which would otherwise be denied them. We need to keep green lungs such as this.

Ms. Abbott: I thank my hon. Friend for his constructive intervention. In a sense, I am using Parliament as a platform on which to make a plea for several groups of people. I plead with Thames Water, and its successor authority after privatisation, to keep the New river flowing and to provide information that it has so far refused to provide about exactly how much water is needed to keep it flowing, to keep the reservoirs full and to maintain the existing level of wildlife. Although Thames Water pays lip service to keeping the New river flowing, it is not prepared to say how much water needs to flow down it to keep the wildlife there. My constituents fear that the authority will maintain only a derisory trickle of water in the river, which will result in the wildlife disappearing and the reservoirs being drained. The authority will then say, "who needs the site, anyway?" It will then get its way and develop the site for sheer profit. I plead with the authority to allow controlled access to the site. I have walked around the reservoirs. Local people—particularly children and the schools education service—should be able to have controlled access to it.

Hackney council has adopted the excellent policy of preserving the whole area as open space for recreational use, the preservation of wildlife and other environmental purposes. Despite the recent report, which undermines Hackney's wish to preserve the New river and the filter bids for environmental and leisure purposes, I am anxious that the council should stick to its policy and defend the site against greedy developers and Thames Water. The people of Hackney want the council to stick by its policies. They do not want the council to give way to pressure from developers who are not interested in the people of Hackney or Islington but only in making money.

Above all, I ask the Government to recognise the strength of local feeling, particularly the strength of feeling among people who live adjacent to the site—especially on the Woodberry Down estate.

Mr. Corbyn: And on the Highbury estate.

Ms. Abbott: Yes. I ask the Government to respect the wishes of the people who live on estates in Islington, Hackney and Haringey. Because of its size and its environmental value, this is a unique open space in inner London. We are most anxious that the site should be preserved for environmental purposes. It is in response to local feeling that I have asked for the debate.

The site will be redundant to Thames Water's needs in 1990. The opportunity to develop the site for community use and for the benefit of ordinary people will never return if the site is covered with houses to feed the greed of developers. Hackney will lose its secret garden and it will lose the New river which flows through Hackney—our green corridor to the fields of Hertfordshire.

Are the Minister and his colleagues aware of the Thames water authority's responsibility to the New river as set out in the royal charter? There was originally a New River Company, incorporated in 1619 by the royal charter. The charter ordains

"that the said Governor and Company of the New River and their successors at all and every tyme and tymes hereafter shall well and sufficiently maintaine repayre preserve and scoure the said New River and streame and all the Bankes and Bridges of and belonging to the same."

That royal charter is ordained to the governor of the New River Company and its successors. We have established legally that its successor is the Thames water authority. Will the terms of that royal charter apply to any private company? If not, why not? My constituents and the ordinary people around the reservoirs argue that the royal charter puts an obligation on Thames Water to maintain and preserve the river. We want to see that obligation fulfilled by the authority at its own expense and we want the same to be done by any successor authority. I am sorry that I did not give the Minister notice of that question and I appreciate that he may wish to return to it at a later date.

The water privatisation Bill is not about water but about land, particularly in view of what may happen to the Stoke Newington reservoirs and the filter bed site. Is the Minister aware that in London alone Thames Water has sites with a book value of £1,000 million? The privatisation of Thames Water is thus a potential £1 billion bonanza for private property speculators and people who live around Thames Water sites are concerned about that potential bonanza which might occur after privatisation.

There is enormous concern about the site, and if a planning application goes to the Department we hope that the Minister will be aware of that concern. Will the Minister ensure that the obligations enshrined in the royal charter are passed on to successor authorities? We ask him to ensure that the sporting, leisure and environmental needs of the population are maintained and that water privatisation does not simply become a profit-making extraganza for property speculators who care little for the community.

2.52 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Colin Moynihan): I congratulate the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms. Abbott) on securing time for a debate on the future of the Stoke Newington reservoirs and filter bed and on the admirable way in which she has put her case on the conservation and recreational aspects of the proposed development. I listened with care to the speech. I was unaware of the details of the royal charter obligations with which she enlightened the House, but it is my understanding that those obligations will be passed on to successor authorities. She will no doubt accept that I should like to take further advice on that to establish whether the general principles that would usually apply in such circumstances apply in this case. I will write to her in due course.

I will draw to the attention of the regional Council for Sport and Recreation the points made by both the hon. Lady and the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), with regard to access not just for the enjoyment of sport but bearing in mind the important role it plays, together with councils of all political persuasions, in ensuring that there is good recreational access to open land. Any aspect of development that changes that should be a matter of concern to the regional councils. I will draw the hon. Lady's speech to the council's attention and ask it to respond directly to her.

Mr. Corbyn: I am sure that the Minister is aware that when open reservoir sites are used for recreation, there is often a conflict between the conservation of wildlife and the interests of sports people. This is almost a unique opportunity to separate the two. One of the reservoirs could become a sanctuary for wildlife, particularly wading birds and migratory birds, and the other could be developed as a sports facility, which is sorely needed in that part of north London. It would be welcomed if the Minister can ensure that that can happen. We should use this unique opportunity and that provided by the filter bed sites to think of the recreational and natural needs of people, rather than allow yet another potentially lovely open site to be concreted over in the interests of the developers.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall come to that specific site later, but I wish to answer the general critical point raised by the hon. Gentleman. Regrettably, even between recreation and conservation groups, acrimonious local discussions sometimes result in court action. I can immediately think of the problems that arise between canoeists and anglers.

I can assist the hon. Member for Islington, North on two important points. I have long held the view that the Government should bring forward a code of practice which has teeth to assist on such matters. The Water Bill will provide such a code. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will welcome—as have hon. Members on both sides of the House—the contents of that code of practice. It is important to ensure that it bites.

In the attempt to reconcile differences among groups, I believe that more use should be made of phasing. Some areas are fortunate enough to have the use of two sites and recreational interests may be met on one and conservation interests on the other. However, in many parts of the country, people do not benefit from two sites and phasing on one site can be helpful in mitigating the problems that would otherwise occur. I am glad that the hon. Gentleman drew that point to the attention of the House.

I shall now turn to the specific points raised by the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington. Over the years, water authorities have, from time to time, found themselves with land holdings which they do not require for carrying out their many functions such as gathering and supplying water and treating and disposing of sewage. That regularly happens when any major industry seeks to keep abreast of technological use. It releases land for sale for development and other purposes. The Government encourage that, and it is right that they should do so.

Where a development is proposed, it is, of course, the planning system which has to reconcile conflicting interests and to ensure that the use to which the land is put is proper and beneficial, and take account of the wider public interest. It is in this context that the proposed development at Stoke Newington must be seen. It is one of five reservoir sites that has been rendered redundant for water service operations as a result of the new London tunnel ring main, with which all London Members are acquainted, and is an important development of great potential benefit to water services in London.

This issue therefore comes for consideration as a natural consequence of the process of technical change in the water industry. The point that I should emphasise is that the site has not come up for development as a consequence of any aspect of our proposals for the restructuring of the water industry.

The hon. Lady has raised a number of points about our proposals for the water industry in the future. If time permits I shall comment on them later but I shall now address myself to the specific issue that she raised.

I must make it clear that I am necessarily constrained in what I say about proposals to develop the land, because I must be careful not to prejudice the considerations of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on any planning applications that he may decide to call in or that may come before him on appeal. Similarly, I am constrained from expressing any views on the London borough of Hackney's local plan, which was the subject of a public inquiry last summer.

The hon. Lady referred to the significance of a sizeable area of open land in an urban area and briefly outlined the recent history of the site and the state of play on the local plan. The London borough of Hackney deposited its local plan in June 1987. It included proposals for the Stoke Newington reservoirs and filter beds and the New river and its banks eastwards from the Green Lanes bridge to be defined for metropolitan open land purposes. I gather that the New river was included in order to secure an open space link between the east reservoir and the Finsbury park, which is designated as metropolitan open land in the Islington borough plan. I understand that at the inquiry the Thames water authority objected to the local plan on the grounds that the inclusion of the reservoir and filter beds for metropolitan open land conflicted with its proposals as the hon. Lady ably demonstrated. It had submitted planning applications for residential development of about 1,100 units with water areas, open spaces and landscaping. However the council regards the planning applications as incomplete and has asked the applicants for more information. I understand that meanwhile the council has received from local residents a number of representations about the planning applications, and the points made today back that up.

The inspector who held the public inquiry into the plan reports to Hackney council. It is for the council to consider the inspector's report and to publish it, together with the modifications it considers are appropriate. There will then be a six-week period during which objections may be made. At the end of that period the council may decide to hold an inquiry into those objections.

My right hon. Friend does of course have the power to call-in a local plan. While he may use his power to call-in a plan at any time before its adoption, he would be unlikely to do so until the planning authority has completed its consideration of objections and given firm notice of its disposition to adopt the plan. He would use this power only in a limited range of circumstances where central Government intervention was clearly justified—for example where a plan raises issues of national or regional importance or where the plan gives rise to substantial controversy. An example would be where a plan extends beyond the area of the plan-making authority.

The hon. Lady has alluded to the question of the planning authority's process, and I hope that that clarifies the position on that specific point. I believe that it is relevant to the point that the hon. Lady made, not least with regard to her argument that this is of wider than local significance in its environmental impact.

The hon. Lady has spoken about the importance of the site for wildlife and the enjoyment that people derive from it. My right hon. Friend's policy is set out in the Department's Circular 27/87. The circular emphasises to all local authorities the importance of wildlife and the need to take it into account when considering development proposals such as this. I was interested to learn whether the Secretary of State had considered the possibility of recognising this site as one of special scientific interest under the Wild Life and Countryside Act 1981. In that respect, he relies on his advisers in the Nature Conservancy Council. The hon. Lady may wish to speak to the Nature Conservancy Council about the important points she has mentioned today. As I understand it, at present the Nature Conservancy Council is not of the view that this site is of sufficient wildlife interest to merit its designation, but, as it is there specifically to consider such matters in detail, it may benefit the hon. Lady to talk to it further.

So much for the particular local planning issue, which I hope I have dealt with as fully as observance of the planning procedures allows at this stage.

I said at the beginning that if I had time I would seek to respond to the more general comments raised by the hon. Member about the development of land and the assets of the water industry. No doubt, the hon. lady will forgive me if I speak rather rapidly in responding to a number of points that she has made.

I said earlier that some water authority land is released from time to time, because it is no longer required for the industry's purpose. That is of course the case and it is important. But the key fact is that, according to the industry's estimates at present, the great majority of land is required for operational purposes and will continue to be required for those purposes.

The extent of disposals may well increase in due course, reflecting technological changes and positive management, but members would be wholly misleading themselves if they assumed that there was scope for the wholesale disposal of water industry land assets.

The fact is that it is now, and will in future be, properly protected land in the public interest. Proper protection is essential. After privatisation the new water companies, like the authorities now, will be subject to the important duties in respect of conservation, providing for public access and putting their rights to land and water to the best use for recreation.

On conservation, the Bill provides that after privatisation the companies will continue to be under a duty of further conservation in the performance of their functions. Indeed, in our water Bill the duties are strengthened by enforcement powers given to the Secretary of State, and by the code of practice which we published in draft recently.

On recreation, the Bill provides that both the private companies and the NRA will inherit the duty of the water authorities to put the water and lands to best use for recreation. That will be particularly important in relation to the companies which will inherit most of the reservoirs and land assets. But it will nevertheless apply to the NRA in respect of locks, weirs, stretches of river beds or other assets it may acquire.

In addition, the Bill places a general duty on the NRA to provide recreation on inland waters. Under this power it could for instance enter arrangements with riparian owners to facilitate recreational use of rivers; or to sponsor and support local bodies which help to manage recreational use of particular stretches of water.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasise three points. First, as I have said, there is no evidence that any great proportion of water authority land is in fact surplus to operational requirements. Secondly, the very fact that the land is released from water uses will mean that the special protective measures related to the effect of water industry operations will no longer be required. Thirdly, and most importantly, ordinary planning and environmental controls will, as I have emphasised, continue to protect the land.

All those are important factors. I have every confidence that they will be considered in detail not just by the House, in Committee on the Water Bill, but in the future, too. I undertake to consider in yet further detail the points made by the hon. Lady and if I can come back with any positive suggestions—while recognising the sensitive position I am in with regard to the Secretary of State's role on planning matters—I will do so.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at five minutes past Three o'clock.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Overseas Students

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to increase the number of students from west Africa who are offered places in further education or higher education in the United Kingdom; what is the present total of such students; and if he has any target figures for future years.

Mr. Eggar: In 1986-87, the latest year for which there are complete figures, there were almost 4,000 students from west African countries studying at universities and public sector institutions of higher and further education in the United Kingdom. Her Majesty's Government gave, under various schemes, financial support to a large proportion of these students. The number of students receiving such support will be nearly 1,700 in the current financial year. We expect this figure to increase in future years.

Rudolf Hess

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in full all post mortem reports on the body of Rudolf Hess.

Mrs. Chalker: No. Publication is a matter for Hess's family.

PRIME MINISTER

Meetings

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister how many times she has met Mr. Rupert Murdoch at 10 Downing street in the last 12 months.

The Prime Minister: As I have told the House before, my normal practice is neither to confirm nor deny whether meetings with private individuals have taken place, even in those cases where no such meeting has occurred.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Top-up Loans

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will put his proposals for a student top-up loan scheme out for competitive tendering by banks and building societies.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am exploring with a variety of private sector financial institutions and other potential agents the most cost-effective approach to the administration of top-up loans. The scheme offers the financial institutions access to over 2 million graduate accounts: I expect there to be competition for this opportunity.

Creche Service

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the number of children of pre-school age in inner London cared for in a creche within an ILEA adult education institute; and what plans have been made to ensure that resources are made available to individual boroughs to maintain and expand this service.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not available centrally. The provision of creches for adult education students and staff will be a matter for the inner London boroughs to consider, in the light of the overall resources available to them.

National Curriculum (Documents)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the standing arrangements for the distribution of documents relating to the national curriculum to (a) schools, (b) parents and (c) others; and whether he has any plans to change those arrangements.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Arrangements for the distribution of particular documents are made in the light of their nature and status. Circulars, statutory orders and regulations which concern the curriculum responsibilities of head teachers and school governing bodies are sent direct to all schools. Under regulations to be made under section 22 of the Education Reform Act, parents will have access at the school to all such documents. Copies are sent to LEAs and representative bodies, which are also consulted on draft documents; such drafts are available to others on request.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the titles of documents relating to the national curriculum which have been made available to schools; and in respect of each document (a) how many have been sent to each school and over what period following publication, (b) whether any charge has been made, and (c) whether any delays in dispatch have occurred.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My Department has sent out two final circulars relevant to chapter 1 of the ERA—circular 1/89 on local arrangements for the consideration of complaints, and circular 3/89 on religious education and collective worship. Both were sent free of charge to all maintained schools—two copies to every head teacher and one for each governing body. The full circulation took just over two weeks in each case, because of heavy pressure on the dispatch services. The National Curriculum Council is responsible for the distribution of proposals for statutory attainment targets and programmes of study. It has sent copies of such proposals covering mathematics, science and primary English to all maintained schools.

A number of draft documents and consultation papers relevant to chapter 1 of the ERA have been sent to LEAs and representative organisations, but made available free of charge to schools and others on request. There have been no delays in dispatching these documents, but postal delays may have affected delivery of some.

Grant-Maintained Schools Trust

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the non-financial assistance being given to the Grant-Maintained Schools Trust.

Mrs. Rumbold: My Department provides information on the Government's grant-maintained schools policies to anyone who seeks it: the Grant-Maintained Schools Trust has from time to time sought and received such information.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has made any representations to the Charity Commission about the application by the Grant-Maintained Schools Trust for charity status.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has given any financial support to the Grant-Maintained Schools Trust.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. My right hon. Friend is, however, currently considering an application by the Grant-Maintained Schools Trust for financial support in connection with the provision or proposed provision of educational services in grant-maintained schools.

Examinations

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all local education authorities in England in rank order of expenditure per secondary pupil per year, starting with the highest spending authority, together with their position in the table of examination results for school leavers achieving five or more O-levels at grade A to C or CSE grade 1, in the latest year for which figures are available and in which these examinations were sat.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not available.

WALES

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list the average waiting times for the following operations at each of the district general hospitals in Wales (a) hip and knee replacements, (b) hernias, (c) cataracts, (d) ear, nose and throat and (e) varicose veins.

Mr. Grist: Information is not available for patients currently on waiting lists. The average waiting times given in the table relate to patients admitted on waiting list and booked or planned cases, and discharged during 1987. Information is given for each of the main general acute hospitals and each of the teaching hospitals in Wales.

Surplus Food

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report details of the localities and the numbers of each qualifying group which obtained free butter and beef under the European Community free food scheme in each year during which the scheme was operated.

Mr. Peter Walker: The EC surplus food scheme has operated for one year and a list of the organisations designated to operate the scheme was placed in the Library of the House on 21 April 1988 by the then Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, my right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer). The information on numbers of each qualifying group is not available.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the allocation to Wales of free butter and beef under the European Community free food scheme in each of the years during which the scheme operated.

Mr. Peter Walker: In Wales 176 tonnes of butter and 332 tonnes of beef were allocated to and distributed by designated organisations under the EC surplus food scheme in 1988.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of charitable organisations who applied for free butter and beef under the European Community free food scheme in each year during which the scheme was operated and those who were designated to operate the scheme.

Mr. Peter Walker: Charitable and non-profit-making organisations were invited to apply to operate the EC surplus free food scheme in 1988 and 1989. The list of designated organisations has been placed in the House. As organisations and individuals submitted applications on a confidential basis it is not possible to release details of those who were unsuccessful.

Examinations Expenditure

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all local education authorities in Wales in rank order of expenditure per secondary pupil per year, starting with the highest spending authority, together with their position in the table of examination results for school leavers achieving five or more O-levels at grades A to C or CSE grade 1 in the latest available year for which figures are available and in which these examinations were sat.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is available for the 1986-87 financial and academic years and is as follows:

	Expenditure per secondary school pupil (£)	Examination result position[1]
West Glamorgan	1,507	4
Gwent	1,363	6
Powys	1,332	1
Gwynedd	1,296	7
Dyfed	1,283	2
Clwyd	1,282	5
Mid Glamorgan	1,268	8
South Glamorgan	1,268	3

[1] Ranked in order of the percentage of school leavers with five or more O levels at grade A to C or CSE grade 1.

Urban Investment Grant

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make an announcement about his plans to introduce a new urban investment grant in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The consultation exercise which we conducted recently prompted a positive response from the public and private sectors alike. With very few exceptions, the proposal to simplify the grant regime aimed at stimulating private sector investment in rundown sites in all deprived urban areas of Wales was welcomed. As a result of the views expressed I have decided that the threshold for the new grant will be set at the lower level of £150,000 when the grant is introduced in April of this year. Detailed guidance notes setting out arrangements for the new scheme are now available. Copies of the notes have today been sent to all those who responded to the consultation.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

North Africa (Desertification)

75. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's contribution to the combating of desertification in north Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: We contribute to the fight against desertification through our participation in the work of a number of multilateral institutions. We also support measures to combat desertification in countries bordering the Sahara through our contribution to the European development fund; our share of projects that have been approved so far under the sixth EDF amounts to some £24 million.

Zambia (Ministerial Visit)

77. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, during the recent ministerial visit to Zambia, he held discussions regarding British aid.

Mr. Chris Patten: During her recent visit my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs held discussions which included reference to present and future British aid.

Pest Control

78. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure co-operation between the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute and national institutions concerned with pest control.

Mr. Chris Patten: The ODNRI has a long history of collaboration with centres of pest expertise in Britain and abroad. The role of such links is carefully considered when customer divisions in the ODA commission work from the institute. The £7 million special programme to support pest control in Africa, on which I instructed the institute to embark in 1987, is an excellent example. Under it the ODNRI is collaborating with eight institutions in Britain and 12 in developing countries.

Somalia

79. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what practical steps are being taken by the Department to offer an aid package to help resettlement of refugees and economic recovery in northern Somalia in the light of Government moves to encourage an end to internal hostilities in Somalia.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have given some £275,000 in support of the relief activities of British voluntary agencies in the wake of the civil conflict in northern Somalia. We stand ready to give prompt and sympathetic consideration to further requests from such organisations for humanitarian assistance.

IMF and World Bank

80. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the managing director of the International Monetary Fund and the president of the World Bank; and what matters they propose to discuss.

Mr. Chris Patten: Relations with the International Monetary Fund are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. As regards a meeting with the president of the World Bank, I can add nothing to the reply which I gave to the hon. Lady on 23 January, at column 370.

Caribbean Countries

81. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British aid to the Caribbean countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: In the most recent year for which figures are available (1987), British bilateral aid to the Caribbean amounted to £29·06 million. I recently visited several countries in the Caribbean and heard for myself the appreciation with which our aid programme is received.

Bangladesh

82. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of official development assistance to Bangladesh.

Mr. Chris Patten: Net official development assistance from the United Kindom to Bangladesh in 1987—the latest year for which figures are available—was £34·8 million. I anticipate that in the current financial year total expenditure will be about £50 million.

International Fund for Agricultural Development

83. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current United Kingdom contribution to the international fund for agriculture development, and on current negotiations on future funding.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since its establishment in 1977, the United Kingdom has committed some £47 million to IFAD, including £7 million to its special programme for sub-Saharan African countries affected by drought and desertification. Disbursements against these pledges total roughly £28 million to date. Negotiations for the third replenishment of IFAD's resources are in progress. A statement is awaited from OPEC donors on their intended level of support.

Malawi

84. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate the assistance offered to Malawi during the last three years and how it was used.

85. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British aid to Malawi.

Mr. Chris Patten: British bilateral aid to Malawi in the latest three years for which figures are available was as follows:

	1985	1986	1987
Total	14,008	15,019	24,868
Projects	3,134	3,168	2,342
Aid and Trade Provision	143	87	1,657

	1985	1986	1987
Programme Aid and Debt Relief	3,153	2,657	7,573
Commonwealth Development Corporation	1,092	1,976	5,478
Technical Cooperation	6,486	7,131	7,807
Disaster Relief	—	—	11

Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference

86. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the annual meeting of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference.

Mr. Chris Patten: I attended the annual consultative conference of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) in Luanda on 2 and 3 February. As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, informed the House on 2 February, at column 333, I was able to announce continued British support for SADCC. Both SADCC member states and donor representatives considered the conference a success.

Overseas Development Administration (Relocation)

87. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is considering the relocation of further London-based posts with the Overseas Development Administration to the administration's offices in East Kilbride.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have recently decided that 15½ posts concerned with personnel issues and the engagement of consultants should be relocated from London to East Kilbride. I have at present no plans for the relocation of further London based posts, although the position will be kept under review.

The Overseas Development Administration already has over 40 per cent. of its headquarters staff in East Kilbride and by the end of 1990 will have nearly 60 per cent. of its total staff outside London.

Lomé IV

88. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current progress on the Lomé IV negotiations.

Mr. Chris Patten: Negotiations on a successor to the third Lomé convention, which expires in February 1990, were opened formally in October last year. The first EC-ACP ministerial negotiating meeting, which I shall be attending, is in Brazzaville later this week.

Tropical Rain Forests

89. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further assistance he is giving to efforts to preserve the tropical rain forest in Brazil.

Mr. Chris Patten: We are supporting research in forest regeneration through the Maraca rain forest project. As I told the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) on 19 January, we also support the efforts of the World Bank and other international organisations to strengthen the application of environmental considerations in Brazil.

Colombia (Rural Development)

90. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans to meet representatives of the Colombian Government to discuss rural development programmes involving alternative crops for areas where narcotics are grown.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have no plans to do so. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the problem of drug control with Colombian Ministers and officials during his visit to Colombia last August. Her Majesty's Government are already assisting Colombia in the control of drugs.

Aid Projects (Assessment)

91. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the field tests of the new manual to help project managers decide how much environmental assessment is required in the case of each aid project.

Mr. Chris Patten: The draft manual was field tested by Overseas Development Administration staff on visits to a number of countries and was found to be a useful tool for helping to assess environmental concerns. Comments and suggestions for improvements in substance and format, from staff and from over 50 international bodies and non-governmental organisations, are being incorporated in the final version.

Tanzania (Aid)

92. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met Ministers of the Tanzanian Government to discuss future aid projects in that country; and what projects were discussed.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend visited Tanzania last September. He discussed a number of potential aid projects in the transport and natural resources sectors. He also signed an agreement for a further £6 million of project aid. He stressed the importance of Tanzania's economic reform programme in support of which Britain has pledged over £80 million in the last two years.

Development Assistance

93. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to announce the 1988 level of United Kingdom official development assistance as a proportion of gross national product.

Mr. Chris Patten: I hope to be able to provide this information before the end of June.

Crown Agents

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Crown Agents holding and realisation board last met, and what was discussed.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Crown Agents holding and realisation board last met on 27 April 1988. At that meeting, members noted a report on the status of CAHRB loans and investments and approved the annual accounts for 1987.

Conservation

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he gives, when allocating aid, to projects which safeguard and provide for the development of natural resources.

Mr. Chris Patten: Helping to develop natural resources has long been an important part of our aid programme, the prime aims of which are poverty alleviation and sustainable development. We are currently pursuing an initiative to commit more of our resources to forestry.

ODA

Voluntary Agencies (Funding)

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to increase the financial support available to voluntary agencies for their long-term development work.

Mr. Christ Patten: Subject to parliamentary approval, I propose to make a total of £16 million available to British voluntary agencies in 1989-90 under our joint funding scheme. This represents an increase of 43 per cent. on this year's allocation of £11·2 million. Our total support for the voluntary agencies last year came to more than £42 million, approximately half of which was spent on long-term development work. The increases I am announcing today are in recognition of the important role that many voluntary agencies play in promoting economic and social development at a grassroots level amongst some of the poorest communities in developing countries.

AIDS

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what research his Department has commissioned into the socio-economic impact of AIDS on developing countries.

Mr. Christ Patten: My Department has commissioned three research projects into the socio-economic impact of AIDS in developing countries: "A review of sources on sexual behaviour"; "Traditional Health practitioners and the spread of the HIV virus"; and "Community coping mechanisms in circumstances of exceptional demographic change". In addition, we are funding a major research project on the demographic and economic impact of AIDS in developing countries.

EMPLOYMENT

Restart

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why the restart interview form in section 7 dealing with qualifications ignores Scottish educational qualifications.

Mr. Lee: Question 7 of the restart interview form contains a space in which details can be inserted of qualifications held which are not included on the form. Scottish educational qualifications can be shown in this box. The hon. Member's point about Scottish educational qualifications will be considered when the form is reviewed.

Adjudication Officers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what number of adjudication officers were in post at the end of each reporting year since 1983; and what proportion of such officers had over 12 months' experience of adjudication work.

Mr. Lee: Three annual reports of the chief adjudication officer have been published, covering the years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87. The information given in these reports is as follows:

Year	Adjudication officers in post
1984-85	334
1986-87	505

I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 26 January 1988 at column 159, showing 524 adjudication officers in post at that time.

Information about the levels of experience amongst adjudication officers is not routinely collected.

Child Employees

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he proposes to ratify International Labour Organisation convention No. 138 on the minimum age for the employment of children.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The Government have no intention of introducing legislation to effect the changes that ratification of this convention would require.

Benefit Office (Durham)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people use the unemployment benefit office in Langley park, Durham, and with what frequency.

Mr. Lee: There are 245 people registered as unemployed at Langley park part-time unemployment benefit office, of whom 185 attend fortnightly and 60 attend quarterly.

International Labour Organisation

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill of 3 February, what considerations of policy led to the conclusion that the amendments to legislation required to give further effect to the provisions of the International Labour Organisation convention No. 111 are unnecessary and undesirable.

Mr. Nicholls: The main consideration is the difference between United Kingdom law and the terms of the convention concerning the Civil Service and armed forces. Nationality rules for these two groups are specifically excluded from the scope of the Race Relations Act 1976.

The Government consider the maintenance of these rules essential to ensure the close identification of the personnel concerned with the United Kingdom.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Lindholme Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present establishment figure for prisoners at Lindholme prison; what are the actual figures for prisoners held at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The certified normal accommodation at Her Majesty's prison Lindholme is 1,001. Two hundred and fifty of these places have been taken out of use for refurbishment and upgrading of physical security standards. The establishment's population on Tuesday 7 February was 723.

North Yorkshire (Police)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report the village and main police stations in the Richmond division of the North Yorkshire police area in the latest year for which figures are available; and which have opened and closed since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The current list of main and village police stations is as follows:

North Yorkshire Police—Richmond Division

Main Police Stations	Village Police Stations
	Northallerton Sub-Division	Richmond Sub-Division	Ripton Sub-Division
Bedale	Borrowby	Askrigg	Bagby
Catterick Garrison	Brompton	Aysgarth	Coxwood
Legburn	Crakehall	Barton	Dishforth
Northallerton	Great Broughton	Catterick Village	Kirkbymalzeard
Richmond Divisional Headquarters	Great Smeaton	Colburn	Kirklington

Scorton	Norton on Swale	Hawes	Thornton le Moor
Stokesley	Osmotherley	Hunton	Topcliffe
Thirsk	Swainby	Middleham	Wath
		Middleton Tyas
		Redmire
		Reeth

Details of the police stations which have opened and closed since 1979 are as follows:

(i) In 1986, the police station at Great Ayton was closed and replaced with a police office;

(ii) In 1988, the police house and office at Crathorne was closed and replaced with one at Hutton-Rudby;

(iii) In the same year, the police station at Racecourse Lane, Northallerton was closed and replaced with one in Northallerton High Street; and a police office was opened at North Stainley.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report the number of police employed to cover the Richmond division of the North Yorkshire police area annually from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

Year	Police strength at 31 December
1979	209
1980	190
1981	193
1982	193
1983	203
1984	205
1985	220
1986	215
1987	230

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice or training his Department offers to airlines on United Kingdom immigration legislation and rules; and if he will encourage airlines to ensure that their staff at ports outwith the United Kingdom are made aware of current legislation and rules.

Mr. Renton: Advice and training is provided to airlines, on request, in the context of the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987. Our policy is to encourage carriers to take advantage of such advice and training which, subject to the payment of travelling and subsistence costs by the airline, extends to their staff outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list for every week of 1988 the number of (a) notices served, (b) representations made, (c) cases where discretion was exercised, (d) demands made, (e) payments made and (f) payments waived under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987;

(2) if he will list for each week in 1988 the number of persons and their nationality refused entry on arrival at (a) Heathrow, (b) Gatwick and (c) Dover.

Mr. Renton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for every week in 1988 the average occupancy and the number of nights that accommodation was full at (a) Harmondsworth, (b) Annexe (building JA), (c) Queen's building, (d) Beehive and (e) Latchmere.

Mr. Renton: The available information is as follows:

Average occupancy figures with numbers of nights that accommodation was full in parenthesis

Note:—The Queen's Building detention accommodation was closed for refurbishment from 19 January 1988 until June 1988.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what record is maintained of applications made by persons arriving at (a) Heathrow, (b) Gatwick and (c) Dover claiming political asylum; what records are maintained as to the action taken on each request; whether records are maintained as to the initial destination of persons removed from the United Kingdom at the time of seeking asylum; and if such information is made available to (i) any other Government or agency within the European Economic Community and (ii) any other Government; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list for each week in 1988 (a) the number of persons arriving at (i) Heathrow, (ii) Gatwick and (iii) Dover and claiming asylum, (b) of which countries they were nationals and (c) how many were (1) refused leave to enter and removed, (2) refused leave to enter and were detained, (3) refused leave to enter and granted temporary admission and (4) granted temporary admission pending a decision;

(3) what information on persons seeking asylum in the United Kingdom is made available to Governments and agencies of (a) countries within the European Economic Community and (b) other countries; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what information on persons or groups of persons seeking (a) leave to enter the United Kingdom and (b) asylum in the United Kingdom is made available to Governments within the Trevi group; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what information is held on immediate action taken on persons seeking asylum within the United Kingdom; and to whom it is made available.

Mr. Renton: Some information on applications for asylum is collected at Heathrow, Gatwick and Dover for inclusion in a weekly return providing management information for internal use. I will write to the hon. Member giving the numbers and nationalities of persons arriving at these ports and claiming asylum in each week in 1988.

The limited information on outcomes of cases contained in the weekly returns is accurate only for the time at which the returns are compiled. It is not updated to take account of subsequent action and is not aggregated, since it would not give a meaningful picture. Information from the weekly returns is not made available systematically to any other Government or agency.

Comprehensive published statistics on asylum applications and on outcomes are derived from the refugee index computer which is maintained centrally and includes details of all asylum applications made at ports, from within the United Kingdom and from abroad; however, full details of detention, temporary admission and removals are held only on individual files.

In advance of the published statistics, provisional information on applications received and decisions taken is made available quarterly to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. These returns are produced from the refugee index. Copies are placed in the Library. Similar information is given quarterly to the European Community working group on immigration. Information is not sent to Governments within the Trevi group as such or to other countries or agencies.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each week in 1988 the number of passengers and of which country they were nationals arriving and claiming United Kingdom citizenship and who were refused entry or who were requested to submit to further examination at (a) Heathrow, (b) Gatwick and (c) Dover, in each case showing the action taken in respect of the passengers.

Mr. Renton: Information in the form requested has not been collected centrally since September 1988. Between 1 January and 3 September 1988, a total of 129 passengers claiming British citizenship on arrival were either refused entry or were required to submit to further examination.

Catholic Marriage Advisory Council

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what Government funds are currently allocated to the Catholic Marriage Advisory Council; and upon what conditions those funds are made available.

Mr. John Patten: Home Office grant in aid to the Catholic Marriage Advisory Council in 1988-89 is £121,910. One condition of the grant in aid is that it be used in support of the headquarters unit of the organisation in order to encourage voluntary work. The other conditions are standard for Government grants and seek to ensure probity and the effective, efficient and economic use of resources.

Marion Gaima

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he received with regard to the case of Marion Gaima; and how many replies or acknowledgements were sent.

Mr. Renton: Just over 1,000 letters, plus a small number of petitions, have been received about this case. Replies have been sent to 85 Members of Parliament, Members of the House of Lords, and Members of the European Parliament; two letters from Members of Parliament, which were received recently, have not yet received replies. Some of the correspondence from members of the public registering support for Miss Gaima did not call for a specific reply. One hundred and fifty-three acknowledgements and 131 replies to other official correspondence have been sent so far. We hope to reach a decision on the case shortly, and at that stage replies will be sent to the remaining letters as necessary.

Broadcasting (Deaf and Hard of Hearing People)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has received any representations on the White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s", regarding the provision of broadcasting services to Scottish viewers who are deaf or hard of hearing; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and representatives of deaf and hard of hearing people with regard to the White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We have received a number of representations in connection with our broadcasting proposals from hon. Members on behalf of constituents who are deaf or hard of hearing. Careful account will be taken of these comments and we would welcome any further comments during the consultation period which ends on 28 February.

London Fire Brigade

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has regarding the steps taken by the London fire brigade to implement recommendations 30 and 31 of the Fennell report.

Mr. John Patten: I am informed by London fire brigade that it has reviewed and strengthened its instructions and training arrangements for command and control on the fireground at both junior and senior officer level. The brigade has also completed its review of protective clothing. As a result, a new fire tunic is currently being introduced; provision of the new tunic should be completed by the end of June. In addition, new improved gloves are being purchased, the delivery of which is expected before the end of March.

Mr. Abdullah Hassan Yousef

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take in the case of Mr. Abdullah Hassan Yousef following the ruling of the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Mr. Berrehab.

Mr. Renton: I wrote to the hon. Member on 8 February and I have subsequently arranged to meet him on 15 February.

Prisons

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently being held in each prison in England and Wales, and in total, and how many prison officers are currently in each prison in England and Wales, and in total.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 6 February 1989]: The latest available information is given in the table.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of these commitments.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department is represented on a large number of international organisations and associated committees, and no central register of such bodies is maintained. Some of these give rise to identifiable membership costs, and the forecast total for these membership costs for 1988-89 is some £9 million. Nearly half of this total arises from membership of two organisations: these are the International Telecommunications Union and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Freight Forwarders

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many foreign-controlled freight forwarders were being used in 1988 by all Government Departments; and how many British ones were used.

Mr. Atkins: This information is not held centrally. My Department does not have co-ordinated arrangements for employing freight forwarders and is not a substantial user of their services.

Post Offices

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list in the Official Report (a) the main post offices and (b) the sub-post offices in the Hambleton and Richmondshire areas, and in North Yorkshire as a whole in the latest year for which figures are available; and which have opened or closed since 1979.

Mr. Forth: I have consulted the Post Office, which has supplied the following information. There are currently 18 main and sub-post offices in the Hambleton and Richmondshire areas, and 527 in North Yorkshire as a whole. There has been no change in the provision of main post offices in these areas since 1979. During the same period, two sub-offices have opened in North Yorkshire and 38 have closed. These sub-offices are as follows:

National Girobank

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when his Department expects to announce a buyer for National Girobank.

Mr. Forth: Discussions with potential purchasers are continuing and we have set no timetable for completing the sale.

Shipbuilding

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many merchant vessels of more that 500 gross registered tonnage were built outwith the United Kingdom for United Kingdom shipping firms in each of the past 10 years; what types they were; and in which countries they were built.

Mr. Atkins: The information available, which relates to vessels built overseas for United Kingdom registration, is shown in the table.

Note:

Only vessels of over 500 gross tonnes are included.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will press for international action to eliminate excessive shipbuilding credit arrangements and for the rationalisation of the world shipping industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Government's objective is to achieve a reduction in subsidies across the range of officially supported export credits on a multilateral basis. Any consequent reduction in shipbuilding credits should contribute to the rationalisation of world shipping.

Fur and Fur Products

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly, Official Report, 12 January, column 733 (a) what were the species whence the fur and fur products were derived, and (b) what were the quantities of red fox pelts involved.

Mr. Alan Clark: The species were:—

mink
rabbits and hares
Persian, Astrakhan, Caracul and similar lambs
Indian, Chinese, Mongolian and Tibetan lambs sea-lions, fur seals and other seals sea otters, nutria and beaver musk-rats and marmots wild felines
sheep
other animals.

The quantities of red fox pelts are not identified separately in the "Statistics of Overseas Trade".

Post Office Board (Bonuses)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much has been paid as profit-related bonuses to the chairman and members of the Post Office Board; and if he will list such payments.

Mr. Forth: In 1987-88 performance-related bonuses were paid to the chairman and members of the Post Office Board against a range of targets including profit. Profit-related payments amounted to £11,240.

UK Goods

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to encourage people to purchase goods made in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: Ministers repeatedly point out the advantages of buying United Kingdom goods where they are well designed, of good quality and competitively priced. My Department's policies are geared to helping businesses achieve this.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Industrial Development (Grants)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the terms of the package of grant assistance promoted by the Industrial Development Board, Northern Ireland, available to investors in Northern Ireland and the investment grants available in all other regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Viggers: A wide range of support is available to companies and individual investors in Northern Ireland including:

Accommodation:—Stocks of land and industrial premises for purchase or lease.

Capital Grants:—Up to 50 per cent., depending on location within Northern Ireland, of the cost of new buildings, machinery and equipment whether purchased or leased.

Employment Grants:—Paid on a per capita basis over, typically, 3-5 years.

Rent Grants:—Paid for up to five years towards the cost of renting privately-owned industrial premises or property leased on commercial terms from the IDB.

Interest Relief Grants:—In respect of loans obtained from the private sector.

Loans:—Against approved security.

Share Capital:—Through ordinary or preference shares, often with a buy-back option or redemption terms.

Management Incentive Grants:—Paid to help companies overcome exceptional management recruitment problems.

All of the above assistance is subject to certain limits and to constraints applied by the European Commission.

In addition, eligible companies can apply for the following assistance:

R and D Grants:—Up to 50 per cent. of expenditure on approved projects for research and development work related to new products or processes for manufacture or application in Northern Ireland.

Marketing Development Grants:—Grant can amount to 40 per cent. of eligible marketing costs incurred in implementation of a marketing plan, up to a maximum of £60,000 in one year.

Alternatively, companies may receive 40 per cent. of eligible identifiable costs, up to a maximum of £30,000, to help develop a strategic approach to their marketing planning and implementation.

Grants available to industry in Great Britain are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Trade and Industry, Wales and Scotland.

St. Vincent de Paul Society

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will raise the subject of support by the Republic of Ireland Government for the St. Vincent de Paul Society in Northern Ireland at the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. I do not regard this as a matter which falls within the scope of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Water Courses

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under what circumstances a designated water course is de-designated; and in what state of maintenance such water courses are handed over to those landowners with riparian rights.

Mr. Viggers: Water courses are de-designated by the Northern Ireland Drainage Council in circumstances where their maintenance at public expense is no longer justified. Such water courses become the responsibility of the riparian landowners in their existing condition.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Finance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which have received allocations under the Estate Action funding scheme for 1988-89 and the proposals for 1989-90; and if he will indicate the figures in each case.

Mr. Trippier: At 23 January 1989, the following local authorities in the regions indicated had received allocations of extra resources under the Department's Estate Action programme for 1988-89.

For 1989-90, local authorities are currently working up their detailed proposals and allocations have not yet been made.

Geomorphological Surveys

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the geomorphological surveys for (a) Ventnor and (b) Luccombe; and whether he intends to publish the findings.

Mr. Chope: I expect to receive a report of geomorphological studies for Luccombe in mid-March and for Ventnor in January 1990. The results will be published as soon as possible thereafter.

Chief Officers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he gives to local authorities on the extent to which more than one chief officer post should be held by the same individual.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Subject to a few statutory exceptions, local authorities are free to appoint such officers as they think necessary for the proper discharge of their functions. The Government propose in the Local Government and Housing Bill to require each council to appoint a head of its paid service, who will be responsible for advising the council on the organisation, appointment and proper management of the council's staff.

Chandeliers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of 1 February, Official Report, column 212 regarding chandeliers, when he anticipates (a) completing the research necessary and (b) forwarding his advice to the Select Committee.

Mr. Chope: I expect that the results will be available by Easter.

Warrington and Runcorn New Town

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether details of changes in the cost-floor calculations have been made available for Warrington and Runcorn new town development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: No changes have yet been made. Section 122 of the Housing Act 1988 is to be brought into effect shortly.

Brodsworth Hall

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list his full day's itinerary during his recent visit to Brodsworth hall, near Doncaster, in South Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I paid a private visit to Brodsworth hall on 4 January when passing through the area.

Council House Sales (Torbay)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation in respect of the sale of council housing stock, in the light of Torbay council's decision to reject his advice to hold another ballot.

Mr. Trippier: We have no plans to do so.

Yorkshire Water Authority (Chairman)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement as to what performance targets the chairman of the Yorkshire water authority achieved to receive a bonus for the year 1987-88; if he will list for the four previous years the annual bonus the chairman received; and if he will list by year for the past five years his basic salary.

Mr. Moynihan: In response to the first and second parts of the hon. Member's question I refer him to the answer I gave to his earlier question on 7 February at column 598.

The basic salary of the chairman of the Yorkshire water authority in each of the past five years has been as follows:

Year	Salary (£)
1 July-30 June
1984-85	26,093
1985-86	35,424
1986-87	37,548
1987-88	41,724
1988-89 (up to 30 September 1988)	45,900
1988-89 (from 1 October 1988)	51,000

The chairman increased his time input on 1 July 1985 and has served on a full-time basis since 1 October 1988.

Archaeology

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the current archaeological funding being paid to archaeological societies in the three counties of Yorkshire; what was the comparable figure (a) five and (b) 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for English Heritage.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the level of funding provided to English Heritage for rescue archaeology; if he has any proposals to increase funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 9 February 1989]: I am aware of no recent specific representations concerning the level of funding to English Heritage for rescue archaeology. It is for English Heritage to determine priorities within its overall resources.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to introduce legislation to enable him to serve an order prohibiting development on sites of archaeological significance.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 9 February 1989]: Provision already exists, under the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979, for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to schedule any monument which appears to him to be of national importance. The provisions of that Act also control development by making it an offence for any person to execute or cause to execute specified works to a scheduled ancient monument without the written consent of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what archaeological mapping vertical aerial photographs have been taken in the three counties of Yorkshire; where these are stored; and what facilities are available for members of the public and students of archaeology to study them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 9 February 1989]: An extensive collection of archaeological aerial photography material is held by the Royal Commission on historical monuments of England and is available for public consultation at the commission's London headquarters. I have asked the secretary to the commission to write to the hon. Member to explain what material is available on Yorkshire.

Football Clubs (Membership Scheme)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received from (a) Darlington football club, (b) Leeds United football club, (c) Middlesbrough football club and (d) York City football club concerning the proposed football identity card scheme.

Mr. Moynihan: I have not received any direct written representation from these football clubs. However, a letter from the chairman of Darlington football club to the Football League expressing concern about the proposed national membership scheme for football spectators was brought to my attention by my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon). I have replied to him. The chairmen of Darlington, Leeds United and York City attended a meeting which the Secretary of State for the Environment and I held with Football League club chairmen in the House on 17 January.

Water Pollution (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the location and ownership of all boreholes on agricultural land in North Yorkshire that have been shut by his Department as a result of excess nitrates in the water supply.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand from the Yorkshire water authority that the only public water supply boreholes which it has closed on the grounds of high nitrate concentrations are Kirby Hill borehole, Boroughbridge, in 1985; Baldersby-St-James borehole, Baldersby, early in 1988.

Use Classes Order

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the workings of the Use Classes Order between his Department and planning authorities; and if he will make a statement on any callings currently before his Department.

Mr. Howard: We propose to commission research later this year on the impact of the Use Classes Order 1987, and I am interested to receive any relevant information about its effects. I cannot comment on individual planning applications called in for my right hon. Friend's decision; applications are normally called in only if they raise planning issues of more than local importance.

Disconnections

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about disconnections from households with persons of pensionable age and young children.

Mr. Moynihan: The National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux has made representations on how customers, particularly the elderly and those with young children, could be further protected from any risk of disconnection of water supply for non-payment of bills. Since then the water industry has announced important additional customer safeguards in its proposed revised code of practice on disconnections, to which my hon. Friend the Minister for Water and Planning referred in his parliamentary answer of 9 February at columns 772-73.

Private Sewers

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has made any assessment of the potential costs to water authorities of being obliged to adopt private sewers connected to a public main in cases where the private sewers have proved to be defective, and no liability can be exercised upon the original construction.

Mr. Moynihan: No precise estimate of these costs would be practicable, but the results of a sample survey of private sewers in one water authority area suggest that if water authorities were required to adopt all private sewers, they would incur annual renewal costs, excluding normal maintenance, in the region of £75 million.

67 Tufton Street

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the increase in the weekly rent paid by the Property Services Agency to Bourne Association Ltd. for the lease of 67 Tufton street, Westminster, which resulted from the new letting agreement, reached during August 1979, that the Property Services Agency should pay an increased rent of £10 per sq ft per week.

Mr. Chope: The rental charges paid by the PSA on leasehold buildings are determined on a strictly commercial, and therefore confidential, basis.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the unexpired term of the leasehold agreement made between the Property Services Agency and Bourne Association Ltd. for the rent of 67 Tufton street, Westminster, in August 1979 before new terms were negotiated.

Mr. Chope: There was no unexpired term of the leasehold agreement in August 1979. At that time, negotiations were in progress about the renewal of the previous lease which had expired in June that year.

Homelessness

Sir Antony Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when Birmingham university research report on local authority policy and practice on homelessness will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Copies of the report have been placed in the Library today. It highlights the variation between authorities, both in how they interpret the legislation and in the efficiency and procedures they adopt in providing assistance to the homeless.

The research shows that people applying to local authorities for help find the system bewildering and often feel they are kept in the dark about what is happening. Some authorities take an excessive time to process applications, which sometimes become entangled in long-drawn-out and complicated checking processes. Others deal with applicants quickly, thus reducing the time that families spend in temporary accommodation.

In some cases, staff have genuine difficulties in interpreting the legislation. This can lead to uneven treatment, so that households with similar problems may be dealt with in a completely different way in one part of the country compared with another.

There is also room for improvement in the allocation of permanent housing. Systems for allocating homes for homeless people are not always properly integrated into general allocation and waiting list systems, meaning that people in the greatest housing need sometimes have to wait longer in temporary accommodation. Nor is best use made of housing association properties, and there are problems in fitting in with their allocation systems.

The report identifies a number of key areas in which local authorities could improve their performance to provide a more consistent and efficient service to the homeless. The research findings provide a valuable input into our current review of the homelessness legislation.

New Housing (North-West)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average cost of building a new two-bedroom two-storey house in the north-west during 1987, and estimated for 1988 by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 3 February 1989]: Information provided by those local authorities in the north-west region which have so far made returns to the Department show that the average of tenders accepted for the building of new two-storey two-bedroom houses, including all works but excluding professional fees and land, was £17,546 in the financial year 1987-88 and £20,816 in the first half of the financial year 1988-89.

Comparable information for housing associations is not available.

Water

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) under what arrangements and for what purpose the Southern water authority has purchased shares in the Folkestone water company;

(2) under what arrangements and for what purpose the Southern water authority has purchased shares in the Eastbourne water company;

(3) under what arrangements and for what purpose the Southern water authority has purchased shares in the West Kent water company;

(4) under what arrangements and for what purpose the Southern water authority has purchased shares in the Mid Sussex water company.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 3 February 1989]: Southern water authority purchased shares in these companies under the powers available to it under the Water Act 1973. I understand that Southern hopes to use its shareholding to promote co-operation with the companies to reduce costs.

Legionella

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the findings for the last time that the water systems of the Houses of Parliament were tested for legionella.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 9 February 1989]: The cooling towers for the air conditioning system and the standby generator serving the underground car park are dosed regularly to minimise microbiological contamination, and the water quality is bacteriologically tested every month by an approved specialist contractor. The most recent sample, taken on 9 January 1989, was satisfactory. No separate routine testing is undertaken specifically for legionella alone.

Landfill

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will revoke the licences of Colliers Industrial Waste in the light of evidence of unauthorised dumping of unsuitable waste at landfill sites.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 9 February 1989]: Revocation of any disposal licence is a matter for a waste disposal authority to decide under section 7(4) of the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring arrangements are in place to regulate the disposal of clinical wastes in private sector landfill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 9 February 1989]: Monitoring arrangements for the disposal of controlled waste, including clinical waste, are matters for waste disposal authorities under part I of the Control of Pollution Act 1974, with advice and guidance from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Water Charges

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what representations he has received about arrangements for rebate of water charges and standing charges for those on low incomes.

Mr. Colin Moynihan: We have had no recent formal representations from consumer groups about rebates on water charges for people on low incomes.

Football Grounds (Minister's Visits)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the Football League grounds, and (b) the Football League matches visited by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State since his appointment in his capacity as the Minister with responsibility for sport.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 January 1989]: I have attended the following Football League matches since my appointment as Minister for Sport:

Charlton Athletic v. Arsenal—3 October 1987
Tottenham Hotspur v. Wimbledon—31 October 1987
Charlton Athletic v. Chelsea—20 December 1987
Manchester United v. Charlton—1 January 1988
Luton Town v. Derby County—16 January 1988
Charlton Athletic v. Liverpool—23 January 1988
Hartlepool United v. Crewe Alexandra—27 February 1988
Derby County v. Arsenal—26 March 1988
Charlton Athletic v. Newcastle United—23 April 1988
Millwall v. Newcastle United—19 November 1988
Charlton Athletic v. Luton Town—14 January 1989

I have also attended international matches and a number of matches between league clubs in other competitions.

In addition I have visited the grounds of Reading FC, Liverpool FC and Aston Villa FC on non-match days.

ENERGY

Wind Energy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made at the experimental wind turbine sites at (a) Langdon common, (b) Capel Cynon and (c) Cold Northcott.

Mr. Michael Spicer: At the proposed experimental wind turbine site at Capel Cynon, developments are proceeding and an anemometry mast is expected to be erected on the site before the end of this month. Negotiations are also proceeding between the CEGB and the landowners and it is expected that section 2 consent under the Electric Lighting Act 1909 will be sought later this year.

At the Langdon common and Cold Northcott sites, negotiations are continuing between the CEGB, local landowners and other interested parties, in relation to planning permission.

Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out his policy towards the flag-swapping and origin-swapping of uranium, with regard to the application of international safeguards; and if he is satisfied with the interpretation of flag and origin-swapping made by (a) the Euratom supply agency in Brussels and (b) the Euratom safeguards divison in Luxembourg.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We follow internationally accepted practices of accounting for nuclear material. These reflect the fact that conversion and fabrication of uranium oxide is a continuous process in which materials of different origin are routinely blended and lose their identity and that it is not therefore feasible to trace the origin of any particular batch of nuclear material. Moreover, exchanges of safeguards obligations (flag-swapping) do not affect the origin of nuclear material.

The Euratom supply agency and the Euratom safeguards office do not accept origin swaps but accept that the established practice of exchanging safeguards obligations in respect of nuclear material is compatible with proper safeguards. The Government share this view.

Wave Energy

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many navigation lights and radar reflectors could be mounted on an offshore wave device.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The number of navigation lights and radar reflectors which could be mounted on an offshore wave energy device would depend upon the size of the device.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the impact of the reported increase in Atlantic wave amplitudes on the economics of wave energy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Any established trend in changes to Atlantic wave amplitudes would need to be taken into account when assessing the economics of wave energy. Wave conditions affect both device productivity and capital cost.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list those contracts on wave energy research in which final signatures of the papers by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority officials was more than six months after the start of the contract and if he will give the length of delay in each instance;

(2) if he will list the number and amounts of payments for work on wave energy in which the settlement of the invoice by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority was more than six months after the submission of the invoice; and if he will give the length of delay in each case.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will explain his Department's concern about the risks which could be posed to shipping by offshore wave power devices;

(2) if he will make a statement on the environmental problems associated with offshore wave devices on water of 100 m depth off the west coast of Scotland; and whether such devices would be visible from the shore.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The possible risks to shipping and environmental aspects including visual amenity of offshore wave energy devices were discussed in section 13 of the report on wave energy by the energy technology support unit, ETSU R26. This report was published in 1985 and copies were placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will compensate wave energy researchers for the consequences of any inaccurate comments by his officials concerning their work.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The wave energy programme was redirected as part of the Department of Energy's continuing assessment of the priorities for renewable research and development and no question of compensation arises.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what length would be required of the most productive type of offshore wave device, as identified by his Department's consultants in their report of June 1983 and by subsequent analysis of reliability by Dr. Taylor at ETSU, to generate electricity output equivalent to that of Sizewell B on the basis of (a) peak output and (b) mean annual output, on the assumption that Sizewell B will operate on a capacity factor equivalent to that of existing Central Electricity Generating Board nuclear plant.

Mr. Michael Spicer: If such an offshore wave device could be developed and if such a comparison were meaningful the approximate lengths would be:

(a) 25 km.
(b) 50 km.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian, 20 January, Official Report, column 343, if he will publish the recent correspondence between the manager of his Department's wave programme, Mr. Peter Davies, and Professor Salter, relating to the circulation of papers to the wave energy steering committee.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department is not aware of any recent correspondence between Mr. Peter Davies and Professor Salter.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy at what date he expects the North sea oil industry to be back to full production; what efforts he is taking to overcome the loss of output due to recent accidents; what measures he is taking to encourage the economic replacement of this lost production; what has been the cost to date to the Exchequer; what is the estimated total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government have created the conditions which encourage the exploration and development of our North sea. Despite low oil prices, commitment to new investment is at its highest level for more than four years, and exploration activity is currently at a record level. Up to the end of January production of some 9·5 million tonnes, worth some £670 million at today's prices, has been deferred as a result of the recent accidents. It is too early to say when all this production will be resumed and hence to estimate the final cost.

CEGB (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will ask the Central Electricity Generating Board to list by location and type its total landholdings in the county of South Yorkshire to date.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 3 February at column 424.

Hinkley Point

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, what policy considerations underlay his decision not to present evidence to the Hinkley Point C public inquiry on (a) plutonium production and end use, (b) radioactive waste management and (c) safeguarding of nuclear materials arising from Hinkley Point C, if built.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend made an official witness available to the Hinkley Point C inquiry to provide any necessary clarification of Government policy as set out in his answer of 17 December 1987 to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) and in the White Paper "Privatising Electricity" (Cm. 322), in particular paragraphs 44-49. Such clarification therefore formed the basis of the departmental witness's proof of evidence.

At the inquiry and in correspondence arising from his appearance, the departmental witness answered questions on a wide range of issues including on matters raised at (a) and (c) in the question.

Radioactive waste management is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Environment on whose behalf evidence is being separately presented to the inquiry by an official witness from the Department of the Environment.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, if he will obtain a copy of the report by Bill Keepin and Gregory Kats entitled "Greenhouse Warning: A Rationale for Nuclear Power", for his Department's library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The Department's library has made arrangements to obtain a copy of the report.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what were electricity prices for consumers of 40 MW/8,000 hours supply, 10 MW/6,000 hours supply and 4 MW/4,000 hours supply, expressed in pence/kWh, in each European Community country in each quarter of 1988;

(2) if he will make a statement on the competitive position of United Kingdom electricity consumers of 40 MW/8,000 hours supply and 10 MW/6,000 hours supply, in relation to similar consumers in other European Community countries;

(3) what is his policy with regard to future electricity price increases affecting United Kingdom consumers of 40 MW/8,000 hours supply and 10 MW/6,000 hours supply and the effect on the United Kingdom's competitive position.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department does not collate information in the form requested. The following table shows industrial electricity prices in the European Community for a range of consumption patterns. It shows that industrial electricity prices in England and Wales are in the mid-range of prices in the European Community. After privatisation large industrial consumers will be able to take advantage of the new competitive environment to purchase electricity from the cheapest available source.

	Prices in pence/kWh as at 1 July 1988

Open University

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when his Department obtained the two Open university documents which he agreed to procure in his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 12 February 1988, column 394; and what cost was incurred by his Department in their procurement.

Mr. Parkinson: The Department's library acquired a copy of Open university research group report, "Reflections on Britain's Nuclear History, A conversation with Lord Minton" by David Lowry, in February 1988 at a cost of £9. Dr. Lowry's thesis, "Nuclear Powers—An Assessment of Nuclear Decision Making, 1932-1979, with Special Reference to the Anglo-American Atomic Relationship", is not commercially published. It is available on loan from the Open university and was borrowed by the Department's library in March 1988.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Profession (Green Paper)

66. Mr. Favell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the response to the Green Papers on the legal profession.

The Attorney-General: No. The papers are discussion documents, on which comments have been invited by 2 May 1989. These responses will be considered once the consultation period has elapsed.

George Blake (Escape)

69. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Attorney-General what discussions he has had with the Director of Public Prosecutions regarding the escape from prison of George Blake and the subsequent confessions by named individuals.

The Attorney-General: The matter is under investigation by the police at the request of the director, who is keeping me informed.

SCOTLAND

Crossroad Attendant Schemes

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of crossroad attendant schemes payments and plans available in (a) August 1988, (b) January 1989 and (c) estimated for March 1989 or on similar dates for which information is readily available.

Mr. Lang: Comprehensive information on payments to crossroads care attendant schemes is not available. Some crossroads schemes participate in employment training as sub-contractors. Some previously participated in the community programme on the same basis. The Training Agency is not directly involved in funding arrangements between training managers and sub-contractors. However, under the community programme payments totalling £77,615 were made in August 1988 to nine crossroads schemes directly contracted to the Training Agency.

Health boards and local authorities have powers to make grants to voluntary organisations such as crossroads but no records are held centrally of the sums paid by them to individual recipients.

Employment Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the organisations which have made representations about the impact of employment training on voluntary sector projects.

Mr. Lang: The organisations which have made representations about the implications of employment training for voluntary sector projects are set out below:

Aberdeen District Council
Aberdeen Youth Information Centre
Age Concern Scotland
A & M Projects
Apex Trust, Glasgow
Bearsden and Milngavie District Council
Beith Pre-School Nurseries
Bonhill Community Organisation
Brechin Day Centre
Castlemilk Family Support Group

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of the unemployment statistics for Cunninghame, North constituency by local electoral division, or on another convenient basis.

Mr. Lang: On 8 December 1988 (the latest date for which information is available) the number of unemployed claimants in each electoral ward of the Cunninghame, North parliamentary constituency was as shown in the table below.

Ward	Unemployed claimants
Ardrossan North	315
Ardrossan South	416
Arran	240
Beith	215
Dalry	217
Fairlie, Skelmorlie and Cumbrae	197
Garnock East	192
Kilbirnie North	229
Kilbirnie South	256
Largs North	239
Largs South	124
Saltcoats East	281
Saltcoats North	306
South Beach	352
West Kilbride	198
Constituency Total	3,777

This information is available in the Library.

Education Survey

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the terms of reference for the survey of parents' views on school education being carried out by the MVA consultancy; when it is expected to report; whether that report will be published in full; and what is the total cost of the operation to the Scottish Office.

Mr. Rifkind: The terms of reference for the market research survey of parents' views on school education in Scotland are to carry out a survey of parents' attitudes towards, and perceptions of, school education; and to ascertain parents' experience of, and opinions on, the education provided by the schools their children attend.

The MVA consultancy is due to report in June 1989 and I envisage that the main findings would be made public.

The cost of the survey is £121,715.

Child Care Workers

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of his Department's appropriate grant aid budget has been allocated to the training of child care workers over the last five years to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Provision of social work services in Scotland is primarily a responsibility of local authorities. Information is not available on the level of expenditure incurred by local authorities in training child care workers.

Over the last five years the Scottish Office has paid to voluntary social work agencies in the child care sector, training grants under section 9 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 totalling approximately £0·5 million and representing some 30 per cent. of the grant scheme budget. Section 9 expenditure in 1988-89 also includes the initial instalment of a grant of £60,000 annually for three years in the first instance awarded to the university of Dundee for the setting up of a programme of training for social workers handling child abuse cases.

Caravan Sites

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of caravan sites not licensed by local authorities operated under the auspices of voluntary organisations in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Thirty-eight sites are operated in Scotland by organisations holding certificates of exemption from the Secretary of State issued under paragraph 12 of the first schedule to the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of caravan sites licensed under the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 by local authorities in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Health Boards (Press Releases)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether health boards must clear their press releases with his Department before release to the press.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Inverclyde Royal Hospital

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the average waiting times at the Inverclyde royal hospital over the past five years for (a) hip and knee operations, (b) hernia operations, (c) cataract operations, (d) ear, nose and throat operations, (e) gynaecological operations and (f) varicose veins operations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The table sets out the information requested for patients discharged from the hospital during the calendar years listed.

Inverclyde Royal Hospital
Mean Waiting Time in Days

Specialty or Operation	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
(a) Hip and knee operations	315·2	295·6	296·5	170·8	174·0
(b) Hernia	193·7	274·1	221·1	334·5	328·3

(e) Gynaecology	100·5	71·3	53·1	49·4	57·6
(f) varicose Veins	480·9	572·0	692·7	918·1	1,003·0

Consultants

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of consultants employed by the National Health Service in Scotland who also undertake private work in the specialties of ear, nose and throat, orthopaedics and obstetrics and gynaecology.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available centrally.

Hospital Building

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the building costs estimated and actual for hospitals started since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Details of all hospital developments are not held centrally as minor capital projects are delegated to health boards and the Department only keeps records of all projects over £1 million.

The relevant information is detailed below:

[1] The total column represents the most up-to-date information available. Building contracts lasting more than 2 years are subject to variation of price clauses; costs therefore increase in line with inflation in the building industry.

Department of Registers

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether there has been any change in his policy with respect to the conversion of the department of the registers for Scotland into an agency; and whether a date has been set for the establishment of such an agency.

Mr. Rifkind: The possibility that the department of the registers of Scotland might become a next steps agency remains under consideration. No date for its establishment as an agency has therefore been fixed.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an estimate of the number of people in Scotland with more than one job for 1975, 1979, 1983, 1986 and 1988.

Mr. Lang: The information available from the labour force surveys is given below.

Persons in employment with second jobs

Scotland	Thousands
1983	52
1987	54

These estimates are based on samples of some 5-6,000 private households in Scotland and are subject to substantial sampling error.

The results of the 1988 survey are not yet available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures for each parliamentary constituency giving the retrospective estimates for unemployment for the second quarter of 1979, 1983 and 1986 calculated on a comparable basis to the current unemployment claimant count.

Mr. Lang: This information is not available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures on (a) the estimated or projected size of the civilian labour force in Scotland, males and females aged 16 years or above, on a quarterly basis between mid-1985 and mid-1989 and (b) the recorded size of the civilian work force in Scotland, employees in employment, self-employed, participants in Government work-related trading schemes without contracts of employment, unemployed, on a quarterly basis between mid-1985 to the most recent date for which the information is available.

Mr. Lang: Estimates and projections of the civilian labour force in Scotland are available only at mid-year. Subject to this qualification information on (a) is set out in table 1 and on (b) in table 2. Considerable uncertainty surrounds estimates of labour force and employment growth, particularly at regional level. Revised estimates of employment growth await the results of the 1987 census of employment and the 1988 labour force survey later this year.

[1] The figures for 1985-1987 are estimates, and for 1988 and 1989 are projections by Department of Employment.

[2] Estimates of the civilian labour force at the end of June each year are produced by combining activity rate estimates and projections with mid-year estimates and projections of the resident population of Scotland produced by the general register office. Activity rate estimates and projections are based on sample estimates from the annual labour force surveys. All estimates are subject to sampling and other errors and although estimates are given to the nearest thousand, they are not accurate to this degree. Estimates for individual years must be treated with extreme caution.

[1] Recent Department of Employment quarterly estimates of employees in employment are based upon the results of the 1984 Census of Employment and include an allowance based on the annual Labour Force Surveys to compensate for persistent undercounting in the regular quarterly sample surveys of employers. Individuals with two jobs as employees of different employers are counted twice. These estimates are subject to revision when subsequent information from the 1987 Census of Employment becomes available later this year.

[2] Estimates of the self-employed up to mid-1987 are based on the 1981 Census of Population and the results of the 1981, 1983, 1984, 1986 and 1987 Labour Force Surveys. The provisional estimates from September 1987 are based on the assumption that the average rate of increase between 1981 and 1987 has continued subsequently. The Scottish sample from the Labour Force Survey is small and results are subject to relatively large sampling errors. Estimates for recent quarters are subject to revision when information from the 1988 Labour Force Survey becomes available later this year.

[3] The unemployment figures are not adjusted for seasonal variation and do not allow for changes in the coverage of the unemployment statistics over the period.

Water Supplies

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what action he intends to take to bring up to the standard required by the European Community the drinking water of Strathclyde regional council; and if he will will make a statement;

(2) what action he intends to take to bring up to the European Community standard the public water supplies which are at present above the European Community recommended limits for aluminium, manganese, iron and lead;

(3) what action he intends to take to reduce the aluminium content in the water supplied to consumers in Gourock/Linwool, and surrounding areas of Renfrew.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for the quality of public drinking water supplies lies with the water supply authorities, the regional and islands councils. Improvement works covering public water supplies which do not yet comply fully with the relevant EC directive (80/778/EEC) are in progress in Strathclyde region and elsewhere and programmes are reviewed regularly by the Scottish Development Department. Supply areas where the aluminium or lead standards may be exceeded are included in such programmes. The directive allows derogation for naturally occurring iron or manganese but in such cases water authorities make improvements whenever possible. Reduction of the aluminium content of supplies in the areas mentioned will be achieved by the introduction of new treatment works and refurbishment of others over the next few years. Water authorities were recently asked to provide updated programmes, with costs, of works required to bring all supplies up to EC standards.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will name the water reservoirs which supply drinking water in Scotland which at present cannot meet European Community standards;

(2) if he will name the water reservoirs in Scotland which supply drinking water and have received additional time to bring their water up to European Community required standards.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All public water supply reservoirs in Scotland meet the requirements of the European Community directive (75/440/EEC) on the quality required of surface water intended for the abstraction of drinking water. For details of water supplies which are the subject of derogation from, or delay in, compliance with the directive (80/778/EEC) relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption, I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quinn) on 7 February 1989, columns 555-59.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take in response to the report submitted to Strathclyde regional council water and sewerage committee on 24 January on the capital expenditure required to overcome the deficiencies regarding the aluminium parameters in accordance with the requirements of the European Community directive and the possibility of completing the necessary works within the requisite time scale of the present level of capital spending.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department wrote on 31 January to all regional councils asking them to submit up-to-date programmes, with costs for individual schemes, of works to bring all supplies up to the standard required. Aluminium features prominently in these plans.

The need for improvements is taken into account in setting the capital expenditure allocations for authorities each year. On 12 December 1988 I announced a 14 per cent. increase in the planned provision for capital expenditure on water and sewerage services in 1989-90. The allocations shortly to be announced will enable faster progress to be made.

Pupil Numbers

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of pupils in independent/non-maintained schools in each of the years 1979-80 to 1987-88, identifying separately those granted aid school pupils before 1984-85.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of pupils at September each year in independent and in grant aided schools are set out in the table below.

	Independent	Grant aided
1979	16,364	18,931
1980	16,044	18,652
1981	15,831	18,186
1982	15,160	17,901
1983	14,977	17,850
1984	15,396	17,882
1985	31,899	1,506
1986	32,218	1,484
1987	32,510	1,470

Block grant under the Grant-Aided Secondary Schools Regulations ceased in 1985 when the schools concerned became independent.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of pupils in independent/non-maintained schools who obtained (a) six or more higher, (b) three or more higher and (c) one or more highers, and as a percentage of S4, S5, S6 in that section for each of the years 1982-83 to 1987-88 inclusive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information relating to the number of pupils in each stage in independent schools is not available. Readily available information relating to the number and percentage of all school leavers from independent and grant-aided schools who obtained highers is shown in the table below.

	1-2 Highers		3-4 Highers		5+ Highers
	Number	per cent.	Number	per cent.	Number	per cent.
1982-83	600	17	900	24	1,400	38
1983-84	600	18	800	24	1,300	38
1984-85	600	17	800	23	1,400	38
1985-86	600	16	800	22	1,300	37
1986-87	600	16	800	20	1,500	38

Departmental Offices (Public Meetings)

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what guidelines exist concerning the use of public offices owned or occupied by his Department for the purposes of political meetings;

(2) whether he authorised the meeting of Scottish Conservatives which took place at Dover house on Wednesday 8 February;

(3) whether an account for the let of the building will be submitted to the Scottish Conservative party in respect of the meeting of Scottish Conservatives held at Dover house on Wednesday 8 February; and how much the let will cost.

Mr. Rifkind: I invited a number of Members of Parliament and Members of the European Parliament together with several others to meet my ministerial colleagues and myself on 8 February in Dover house. No departmental accommodation was made available to anyone and the question of a let does not arise.

Lurcher's Gully

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his latest inquiry into Lurcher's Gully.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The last public local inquiry into proposals to expand skiing facilities at Cairngorm, including development at Lurcher's Gully, was held in 1982. Planning permission was subsequently refused. Highland regional council has published a consultative draft of a proposed new structure plan, which contains a proposed policy on development at Lurcher's Gully, but there is no proposal for such development before my right hon. and learned Friend at present.

Employment Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of community programme support projects which have (a) closed down as being unsuitable for transfer to employment training, (b) been transferred to employment training, (c) will close down at the end of the project life on 31 March because of their unsuitability for employment training and the total number of places involved in each category for the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 February 1989]: The Government do not accept that former community programme projects were unsuitable for transfer to employment training. A number of community programme sponsors chose not to participate in employment training: no count was made of the number of projects and places affected. Nor was a count made of the number of former community programme projects that joined employment training or the places they offered. A count now could be made only at disproportionate cost. However, by the end of March 1989, 21 community programme projects which did not transfer to employment training and which have contracts which are not yet completed will close down. These projects currently provide 260 places.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons (Transport)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list details of all accidents on roads in Scotland involving a transporter vehicle carrying (a) nuclear warheads, (b) defence nuclear materials or (c) rocket or missile delivery vehicles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There have been no incidents during the movement of nuclear warheads or defence nuclear materials in the United Kingdom which have given rise to a radiological risk to members of the public. For security reasons, however, I cannot comment on whether nuclear weapons or defence nuclear materials are present in particular vehicles at particular times, and therefore I cannot comment on whether there have been any road accidents involving such vehicles. The Ministry of Defence has no record of any road accidents in Scotland involving transporter vehicles carring unarmed nuclear delivery vehicles.

Low Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to monitor the effects of noise from low-flying jets on expectant mothers.

Mr. Neubert: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) on 23 January 1989 at column 450.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to reduce the number of low-flying jets over north Yorkshire.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will extend the area around RAF Leeming within which residents are able to claim compensation for aircraft noise.

Mr. Neubert: Later this year when two squadrons of Tornado aircraft are operational and the level of flying is representative of the eventual total station activity, a further full noise survey will be undertaken. If the results of this show that the occupants of additional homes in the vicinity of RAF Leeming are subject to the qualifying level of noise, arrangements will be made to extend the area of entitlement to noise insulation grants.

Lockerbie Air Disaster

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the involvement of service personnel stationed at Catterick garrison in the clear-up operation in the wake of the Lockerbie air disaster.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Assistance from the Catterick garrison was provided by 29 Royal Army Medical Corps personnel from the Duchess of Kent military hospital, who deployed on 21 December 1988 and returned on 22 December, and by 70 personnel from the 1st Battalion, the Prince of Wales' Own Regiment, who deployed on 11 January to help with aircraft salvage and returned on 17 January.

NHS Endurance

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the collision on 7 February between HMS Endurance and an iceberg, and the subsequent holing of that ship.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At 16.10 GMT on 6 February 1989 HMS Endurance struck an iceberg while manoeuvring at low speed in very confined waters near Cape Scrymgeour in Antarctica. The ship suffered damage below the waterline which was quickly contained by temporary repairs carried out by the crew. There were no casualties and no pollution resulted from the accident. Subsequent examination has revealed that the damage may be more serious than initially thought. The ship is currently carrying out limited operations from Hope bay and will shortly be returned to the Falkland Islands for further examination and repair.

Deployment (Europe)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average number of (a) British land forces, (b) British main battle tanks, (c) British armoured personnel carriers, (d) British anti-tank guided missile systems and (e) British tracked surface-to-air missile systems stationed on the mainland of Europe in each year since 1980.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For numbers of land force personnel stationed on the mainland of Europe, I refer the hon. Member to page 24 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988, Part 2" (Cm. 344-II) which details the totals of European theatre ground forces in BAOR and Berlin since 1982. The balance of strengths to 1980 can be found on page 24 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986 Part 2" (Cmnd. 9763-I). For numbers of equipments in use on 1 January 1988, I refer the hon. Member to pages 6, 10, 14 and 16 of the NATO publication "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. This document was first published on 25 November 1988 and comparable figures for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the effective strength of British land forces on the continent of Europe in 1987.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 17 January 1989 at column 130.

BAOR (Training)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average amount of time spent by each British Army of the Rhine infantry battalion on (a) battalion level training and (b) company level training in each year since 1980.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 17 January 1989, at columns 131-32. It is not possible to provide the detailed information requested for years prior to 1987 except at disproportionate cost. Such figures are, however, unlikely to differ significantly from those for 1987.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average amount of time spent by each British Army of the Rhine armoured regiment on (a) regimental training and (b) squadron/troop training in each year since 1980.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 17 January 1989, at column 132. It is not possible to provide the detailed information requested for years prior to 1987 except at disproportionate cost. Such figures however, are unlikely to differ significantly from those for 1987.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average number of miles travelled annually by each British Army of the Rhine vehicle during training in each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not possible to derive the information requested from existing records.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average amount of fuel consumed annually by each British Army of the Rhine vehicle during training in each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not possible to identify fuel consumed specifically during training. The figures detailing the total British Army of the Rhine fuel consumption for all types of vehicles by financial year are as follows:

Financial year	Cubic metres
1979-80	70,213
1980-81	64,422
1981-82	64,674
1982-83	68,839
1983-84	69,169
1984-85	[1]75,735
1985-86	68,400
1986-87	66,768
1987-88	67,720

[1] The major reinforcement exercise, Exercise Lionheart, was held during this financial year.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average amount of training ammunition used annually by (a) British Army of the Rhine infantry battalions and (b) British Army of the Rhine armoured regiments in each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Armoured Personnel Carriers

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 17 January to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South, Official Report, column 130, what percentage of British armoured personnel carriers stationed on the mainland of Europe in 1987 were non-troop carrying vehicles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Around one quarter of British armoured personnel carriers stationed on the mainland of Europe in 1987 were defined as non-troop carrying.

Courts Martial

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British Army personnel were convicted by courts martial for offences of (a) absent without leave, (b) desertion, (c) assaults on superior officers, (d) possession of drugs and (e) disorderly behaviour within the last year for which figures are available.

Mr Neubert: During 1988 the following convictions from courts martial were recorded;

	Soldiers	Officers
Absent without leave	137	1
Assaults	13	0
Disorderly	3	0

Notes: A soldier convicted at a court-martial of more than one of the same category of offence would only count as one conviction. In the case of a soldier who faced court martial on more than one occasion for the same offence then each conviction would count. For a soldier convicted at a court-martial of more than one of the offences listed above, each offence would count. "Superior Officers" are taken to be those of superior rank to their assailant.

Warstocks

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Army meets the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation requirements for the maintenance of warstocks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 22 December 1988 at column 371.

Firing Ranges

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the annual expenditure on clearing (a) the Okehampton range and (b) all Army firing ranges of ammunition after firing practice in each year since 1980.

Mr. Neubert: The clearance of ammunition from ranges is the responsibility of the units using the facilities together with the range commandant, who has overall responsibility for range safety. When necessary an explosive ordnance disposal unit will be called in to deal with specific items of live ammunition. Costs specific to range clearance are not separately recorded.

Helicopters

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) anti-tank helicopters and (b) troop-carrying helicopters are permanently assigned to 24 Infantry brigade.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to give details of the number of operational aircraft in specific units or formations.

Married Quarters (Woolwich)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he has made in the disposal of surplus married quarters in the Woolwich area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: We are currently negotiating the sale of 27 surplus married quarters in the Woolwich area to the London borough of Greenwich, and a further 67 quarters and civilian houses are expected to be offered for sale on the open market over the next 15 months. In addition, two civilian houses will be offered for sale to sitting tenants.

Wormhoudt Massacre

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement setting out actions taken by his Department since April 1988 in respect of the Wormhoudt massacre, giving details of how many civil servants are working on the matter.

Mr. Neubert: I have nothing to add to previous statements on the actions of my Department. A number of officials from different branches are working on this matter and we are giving full co-operation to the German authorities who have jurisdiction in the case.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any officials from the Federal Republic of Germany have visited his Department in respect of the inquiries into the Wormhoudt massacre.

Mr. Neubert: A formal invitation has been issued to the public prosecutor in Lubeck to visit this country and his reply is awaited.

SOCIAL SECURITY

One-parent Families

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number and proportion of one-parent families in receipt of family income supplement in April 1987 headed by (i) a female and (ii) a male head of household; and if he will give the equivalent data for the family credit, at the end of November 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information for one-parent families in receipt of family income supplement is as follows:

	Number	Percentage
i. Female head of household	88,000	96·0
ii. Male head of household	4,000	4·0

The equivalent information for family credit is not available.

Redundancy (Benefit Appeals)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he proposes to take following the number of successful appeals by ex-shipyard workers who had been denied benefit for 13 weeks after being made redundant, in respect of workers in other trades who have been made redundant in similar circumstances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The decision of the independent adjudication authority in relation to a redundant shipyard worker relates specifically to that particular worker and his terms of redundancy. This decision has implications for other British Shipbuilders workers whose circumstances were identical, and we have taken steps to bring this to their attention.

The decision has no direct effect on workers made redundant in other industries.

Industrial Deafness

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, for each year from 1979, the numbers of appeals from residents in Derbyshire concerning industrial deafness that have been considered by medical appeals tribunals, and the annual success rates of such appeals.

Mr. Scott: I regret that this information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants in the north-west of England and each of the metropolitan boroughs inside the north-west were paid under the cold weather payments scheme for the last five years; how much benefit has been paid in each of the last five years; and how many claims were refused.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not collected separately for metropolitan boroughs. The table shows the information for each local office in the Department's north-west region for the winters of 1985-86 and 1986-87.

No cold weather payments were made by those offices in the winters of 1984-85 and 1987-88 nor has the trigger temperature (an average of 0 deg. C. over a seven-day period) been reached in the north-west so far this winter.

[1] The number of claims refused is not known.
[2] It is estimated that 143,000 claimants received payment.
[3] Details of the number of claims refused in 1984-85 and 1987-88 are not available.

Benefit Payments (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each benefit office in South Yorkshire the number of people in receipt of unemployment benefit for (a) less than two weeks, (b) between two weeks and six months and (c) for over six months, at the latest available date; and what are the comparable figures for 1979 as a percentage of (a), (b) and (c).

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available for individual benefit offices.

War Pensioners (Housing Benefit)

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many district and borough councils operate a disregard in excess of £5 a week for war pensioners when calculating entitlement to housing benefit; and what rate of weekly disregard is applied by each of those councils.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Local schemes for disregarding war pensions in excess of the statutory £5 are entirely at the discretion of individual authorities.

The following authorities operate such schemes, but I regret that information on the extent to which individual schemes enhance the statutory disregard is not available.

Source: Based on 1988 returns provided by 474 of the 483 local authorities in Great Britain.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether those in receipt of a war pension which prior to the April 1988 social security changes was disregarded in the calculation of housing benefit (a) were, and (b) are entitled to transitional protection; what rights of appeal are open to those pensioners so affected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The housing benefit transitional payments scheme is intended to provide help to vulnerable groups of claimants who experienced reductions in their housing benefit as a result of changes introduced by the Government in April 1988. Those in receipt of a war pension are eligible to receive help in the same way as all other applicants except that transitional payments do not cover losses of housing benefit incurred as a result of a local authority limiting the scope of its discretionary scheme in April 1988.

The statutory disregard on war pensions in the housing benefit scheme was increased at the time of the April reforms from £4 to £5 a week and also local authorities retained the right to provide additional help for war pension recipients should they wish to do so. War pension recipients are able to request reviews of their awards of transitional protection by a more senior officer in the same way as all other applicants.

Adjudication Officers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many adjudication officers were in post at the end of each reporting year since 1983; and what proportion of such officers had over 12 months' experience of such work.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Statistics are not collected on the information requested. It is regretted therefore that the information could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to review the procedure for assessing the eligibility of children to mobility allowance; and will he make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We shall be considering the whole structure of the mobility allowance scheme in the context of the findings of the OPCS disability surveys.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he has any plans to increase the age limit of below 66 years for people claiming mobility allowance;

(2) if he has any plans to increase the mobility allowance age ceiling of 75 years.

Mr. Scott: We shall be considering the age limits for mobility allowance in the context of the findings of the OPCS disability surveys, but, as an interim measure, we are proposing the extension of the upper age limit from 75 to 80 in the Social Security Bill currently before the House.

Social Fund

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow and (b) Strathclyde have (i) claimed and (ii) received a crisis loan from the social fund.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Such information is available in the Library.

Pensions

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy on the extent to which employers should offer their staff an occupational pension scheme or a suitable alternative.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is our policy to encourage employers to set up occupational pension schemes so that their employees will have the widest possible range of options from which to choose the most appropriate means of providing for their retirement. The changes brought about last year as a result of the Social Security Act 1986 made it easier for employers to use their occupational pension schemes for contracting out of the state earnings-related pension scheme (SERPS).

Young People in Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the situation of young persons leaving care during the period since the April 1988 changes in social security provisions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have received a number of representations on this subject. Most recently my right hon. Friend met with my noble Friend the Baroness Faithfull and representatives of various organisations involved with young people. In addition I have met with representatives of the Church of England Children's Society and officials have met with representatives of the Association of County Councils and the Confederation of Scottish Local Authorities.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the new take-up figures for income-related benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesham and Amersham (Sir I. Gilmour) on 8 February at column 713.

Child Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of potential recipients of child benefit earn more than the average wage; and if he will provide the statistical details on which his calculation is arrived.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Among those families who stand to gain from an increase in child benefit (because they do not receive any income-related benefit) around 70 per cent. have incomes above average earnings. I am writing to the hon. Member giving details of the calculation.

War Widows

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual cost of making an ex gratia weekly payment of (a) £10, (b) £20, (c) £30, (d) £40 and (e) £50 to pre-1973 war widows; and what that cost would be at current values in each of the next 10 years assuming an annual increase of 10 per cent. in the current annual death rate of such widows.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Based on the latest information available about the number and projected numbers of pre-1973 war widows, which is subject to considerable uncertainty, the estimated gross costs (excluding reductions in entitlement to income-related benefits) rounded to the nearest £1 million are as follows:

£ million

	Ex-gratia weekly payment of
	£10	£20	£30	£40	£50
1989	28	57	85	113	141
1990	26	52	78	104	129
1991	25	49	74	98	123
1992	24	47	71	94	118
1993	22	45	67	89	111
1994	21	42	64	85	106
1995	20	40	60	80	100
1996	19	38	57	76	95

	Ex-gratia weekly payment of
	£10	£20	£30	£40	£50
1997	18	36	54	72	90
1998	17	34	51	68	84
1999	16	32	48	63	79

The estimated projected number of widows on which the costs are based takes into account the mortality rates of war widows.

HEALTH

Emergency Provision

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the current projected National Health Service bed requirement for armed forces casualties arising from future war in Europe;

(2) what recent steps he has taken to assess the adequacy of existing arrangements for the reception by the National Health Service of armed forces casualties arising from any future war in Europe.

Mr. Freeman: The projected workload for the National Health Service in the event of war in Europe is the subject of continuing joint civil/military medical planning between officials of the Department, the Minister of Defence and Health Service emergency planning staff. Details of military casualty estimates are classified.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place a copy of his guidance to the National Health Service on stockpiling medical supplies for emergencies and war in the Library.

Mr. Freeman: As indicated at paragraph 3.14 of health circular HC(88)31, "Emergency Planning in the NHS: Health Service Responsibilities in Civil Defence," possible arrangements for stockpiling against emergencies—in addition to existing holdings—taking account of shelf life, location and transport are currently being examined with a view to rationalisation and the issue of further guidance. Officials will report when details have been fully worked out.

Trent Regional Health Authority (Nurses)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of the last five years for each hospital in each area health authority in the Trent regional health authority, the number of nurses engaged in educational medicine and the care of children.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally. I therefore suggest that the hon. Member contact the chairman of Trent regional health authority for an answer to his question.

Military Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley of 20 June 1988, Official Report, column 415, if he will provide details and costs of the National Health Service participation in the military home defence exercises Eastern Shield, Capital Guard, Drake's Drum, Autumn Tiger, Northern Crusade, Western Encounter, Triple Crown and Strong Link.

Mr. Freeman: Certain NHS authorities participated to a limited extent and on a voluntary basis in some of these exercises, Participation mainly involved ambulance services, some hospital accident and emergency departments and emergency planning staff. The costs were contained within NHS budgets. The exercises provided health authorities with useful insight into NHS civil defence planning problems as well as valuable major accident practice.

Legionnaire's Disease

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to include Legionnaire's disease as a notifiable infectious disease.

Mr. Freeman: There is already an adequate surveillance programme organised by the communicable disease surveillance centre whereby cases of legionnaire's disease are reported to them.

The list of notifiable diseases is kept actively under review.

Control of Diseases Act

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many outstanding applications there are by local authorities under section 16 of the Control of Diseases Act awaiting his approval.

Mr. Freeman: One, from Lambeth borough council in respect of legionnaire's disease, which is being considered.

Aluminium

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the effect on babies of water supplies containing levels of aluminium above the level provided for in EEC directives.

Mr. Freeman: No disease is known to be caused in babies by aluminium present in the public water supply in the United Kingdom from natural sources or as a result of the normal use of aluminium compounds in water treatment. Gross contamination of water with aluminium sulphate renders the water unpalatable and would cause milk feeds prepared with this water to coagulate. Such water, if drunk, would be expected to cause vomiting and diarrhoea.

Hampstead and Haringey Health Authorities

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the initial paper on the consultation into the merger of Hampstead and Haringey health authorities produced within the department of community medicine at North East Thames regional health authority and the paper presented to the regional health authority members by the regional health authority management.

Mr. Freeman: Copies of the following documents have been placed in the Library:

1. "Proposals for the amalgamation of Hampstead and Haringey Health Authorities"—paper presented to the July 1988 meeting of North East Thames regional health authority;
2. "The proposed amalgamation of Hampstead and Haringey Health Authorities"—North East Thames regional health authority consultation document issued in August 1988;

3. "The proposed amalgamation of Hampstead and Haringey Health Authorities"—North East Thames regional health authority information leaflet issued in August 1988;
4. "Results of consultation on the proposed amalgamation of Hampstead and Haringey Health Authorities"—paper presented to the January 1989 meeting of North East Thames regional health authority;
5. "Proposed amalgamation of Hampstead and Haringey Health Authorities: responses to consultation"—Appendix to (4) above.

Radiation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what additional or revised guidance was issued on the use of radiation medicines on patients in the National Health Service between 1972 and 1988; and if he will provide an estimate of the number of radiation medicines in use in each of those years;

(2) which of the recent recommendations of the International Committee on Radiological Protection on the use of radiation physics medicines he proposes to accept and which he does not.

Mr. Freeman: The Medicines (Administration of Radioactive Substances) Regulations 1978 regulate the administration of radioactive substances to patients or volunteers (which I assume to be what is meant by the term radiation physics medicines) used by the hon. Member. The Administration of Radioactive Substances Advisory Committee (ARSAC) was established in 1980 to advise Health Ministers on the granting of authorisations for the use of such substances.

ARSAC produce "Notes for Guidance on the Administration of Radioactive Substances to Persons for Purposes of Diagnosis, Treatment or Research", first published in 1980, and subsequently revised in 1984 and 1988. A copy is issued to each applicant.

The most recent publications of the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) dealing with radioactive medicinal products were ICRP publication 52 "Protection of the Patient in Nuclear Medicine" (1987) and ICRP publication 53 "Radiation Dose to Patients from Radiopharmaceuticals" (1988). Both these documents were taken into account when the 1988 revision of the "Notes for Guidance" was produced. This publication gives details of effective dose equivalents which are in line with those recommended by the ICRP. Exceptionally on the advice of ARSAC the Secretary of State may authorise procedures resulting in higher effective dose equivalents.

Additional guidance on the use of radioactive medicinal products was given in the "Code of Practice for the Protection of Persons against Ionizing Radiations arising from Medical and Dental Use" (1972), and is included in the "Guidance Notes for the Protection of Persons Against Ionising Radiation arising from Medical and Dental Use" (1988).

Some aspects of the administration of radioactive medicinal products are also subject to the Ionising Radiations (Protection of Persons undergoing Medical Examinations or Treatment) Regulations 1988, issued to all health authorities under cover of health circular HC(88)29.

Information is not held centrally as to the number of radioactive medicinal products in use prior to 1980. While a breakdown cannot be given of the radioactive medicinal products in use in any given year since the establishment of ARSAC in 1980, authority has been given for the use of 876 different radioactive medicinal products at various times in the eight years since its inception.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new courses of treatment using radiation physics medicines within the National Health Service were begun in each year since 1983; and what was the total caseload in each year.

Mr. Freeman: I have taken the term "radiaction physics medicines" to mean radioactive medicinal products. I regret that information about the number of treatments using radioactive medicinal products, and the total caseloads for each year, is not held centrally.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many medical physicists were working in radiotherapy in the National Health Service in each of the last five years; and how many of those were on the basic grade.

Mr. Freeman: I regret we do not collect this information centrally.

Placental Tissue

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if health authorities sell placental tissue without the consent of the woman concerned.

Mr. Freeman: We do not collect information about the arrangements made by individual health authorities although we should expect them to respect any views expressed by patients on this matter.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there are regulations governing the fate of the placental tissue after (a) an abortion and (b) a normal delivery of a child; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There are no such regulations.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the sale of placental tissue to the Institut Merieux by British health authorities.

Mr. Freeman: There is a long-standing arrangement under which health authorities can make available placenta to the Institut Merieux. I understand this is used for therapeutic purpose (for example the manufacture of albumen and gamma globulin) and that a small handling charge is paid to the participating health authorities to cover storage costs. We understand from the Institut Merieux that it does not collect from National Health Service hospitals placenta which becomes available as a result of abortions.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money passed between Liverpool health authority and the Institut Merieux in France in the last financial year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: I regret this information is not held centrally. I would advise the hon. Member to write directly to the chairman of Liverpool health authority if he wishes to pursue this matter.

Office of Population Censuses and Surveys

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list the grades of civil servants employed by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Mr. Freeman: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys employs civil servants of the following grades:

Grade 2 (Deputy Secretary)
Grade 3 (Under Secretary)
Senior Medical Officer
Grade 5 (Assistant Secretary, Chief Statistician, Chief Social Survey Officer 'A') Grade 6 (Senior Principal, Chief Social Survey Officer 'B')

Grading

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the appeals procedure to be completed within the Rotherham area health authority on the current National Health Service regrading structure.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally.

Trent Regional Health Authority

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the closure of all National Health Service hospitals and other National Health Service properties in the Trent regional health authority area since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: It is important to note that closures are very often balanced by openings or other reprovision elsewhere. The hospitals or units approved for total or partial closure from 1979 to end 1987 in the Trent regional health authority are in the table.

Foetal Tissue

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish the report of his Department's inquiry into the use of foetal tissue for transplant operations.

Mr. Freeman: We expect to receive the report in the next few months.

Elderly Persons

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking as a result of the recommendations concerning the discharge of elderly persons from hospital contained in the recent joint statement published by the Association of Directors of Social Services and the British Geriatrics Society, a copy of which he has been sent.

Mr. Freeman: The Department plans to issue, in the next few weeks, a booklet entitled "The Discharge of Patients From Hospital", which covers discharge arrangements for all patients, including elderly persons. This booklet will be circulated to all health authorities under a health notice. The statement the hon. Gentleman refers to will be included in the list of further reading on questions of good practice which is to be given as an appendix to the booklet.

Care in the Community

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the annual saving to the Government as a result of informal carers looking after the sick, elderly and handicapped in the community.

Mr. Freeman: The Government recognise the valuable contribution made by informal carers looking after sick, elderly and handicapped people in the community. There is no reliable basis on which to quantify that contribution.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has regarding the steps being taken by the London ambulance service to implement recommendations 32, 33, and 34 of the Fennell report.

Mr. Freeman: The information is as follows:

Recommendation 32: The LAS has brought forward to the current year (1988-89) the purchase of equipment which will improve its ability to monitor the position and timing of front line ambulances.

Recommendation 33: The LAS has revised its major accident plan which will ensure that the emergency control vehicle will be mobilised immediately whenever four or more ambulances are sent to an incident.

Recommendation 34: An on-call roster for senior officers will be introduced in place of the present voluntary arrangement.

The LAS is also discussing with the London emergency services liaison panel what further action is necessary to strengthen the links between all emergency services.

Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list by region the numbers of qualified first and second-level psychiatric nurses, and the number of qualified learners.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 31 January 1989]: Information on the numbers of nurses employed in the mental illness area of work in each region at 30 September 1987 is shown in the table.

Organ Donations

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many organs have been donated for transplantation in the North West regional health authority area during each of the last five years; and how many transplant operations have taken place.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 31 January 1989]: According to information reported to the United Kingdom transplant service, the number of organs retrieved from, and transplants performed in, hospitals in the North Western regional health authority during the last five years is as follows:

Cadeveric organs retrieved

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Kidney[1]	94	87	84	93	119
Heart and heart/lung	—	7	9	20	28
Liver	—	6	9	11	23

Kidney	77	81	107	81	130
Heart and heart/lung	—	—	—	10	29
Liver	—	—	1	2	—

[1] A donor has been counted twice if both kidneys were donated. 1988 figures are provisional.

NHS Trusts

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those hospitals which he considers eligible for National Health Service hospital trust status as set out in the White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 February 1989]: Any hospital which meets the criteria in chapter 3 of the White Paper would be eligible. I do not understand why the hon. Member recently produced a list, readily and publicly available, of the 320 largest acute hospitals in the NHS and claimed that they were the only eligible hospitals.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether National Health Service hospital trusts will be allowed to buy their interest-bearing debt from the Government.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 February 1989]: I propose that National Health Service hospital trusts will be given an interest-bearing debt equal to the value of their initial assets. The terms, including repayment provisions, will be set by the Government at the time.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether hospitals currently under special health authorities will be eligible for status as a National Health Service trust.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 February 1989]: Yes, if they meet the criteria in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Resource Management Initiative

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish his Department's evaluation of the resource management initiative in hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 February 1989]: I will consider whether to publish the evaluation of the resouce management initiative at the first six sites when I have received it. That evaluation will of course be used to improve the detailed implementation of resource managment systems in other hospitals.

Out-of-area Health Care

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) where a district health authority, under the White Paper on the National Health Service, has contracted with an out-of-district hospital for a particular service, whether patients will have the choice of getting treatment for that service within the district;

(2) where, under the White Paper on the National Health Service, a district health authority has contracted with a hosiptal outside its district to provide a particular service, whether patients from that district health authority will have to travel to the out-of-district hospital for that service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 February 1989]: Hospital patients are not necessarily best or most conveniently treated within the administrative boundaries of their district health authorities. The White Paper's proposals will make it possible for NHS funds to cross those boundaries when patients and GPs choose treatment elsewhere—for example, because waiting times are shorter. When placing contracts each DHA will need to take account of the existing referral patterns of local GPs, and will be free to place contracts with more than one hospital. They will need to discuss with GPs the possibility of changing existing patterns of referral if they believe that better value for money can be obtained by doing so. DHAs will also need to allow for referrals by GPs to hospitals with which no contracts have been placed, keeping some funds in reserve for this purpose.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how health authorities are to be reimbursed for accident and emergency admissions from patients outside their own district of residence under the proposals in the National Health Service White Paper.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 February 1989]: My proposals on meeting the costs of accident and emergency admissions will be spelt out in a working paper on funding and contracts to be issued shortly.

Waiting Lists

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, under the White Paper, what information he has about the relationship between waiting list time and the unit cost of treatment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 February 1989]: There is no necessary relationship between the length of time a patient waits for treatment and the unit cost of that treatment.

Surgery (Costs)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, under the White Paper, whether the cost of treatment will be a factor in determining where health authorities place contracts for surgical operations.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 February 1989]: In all decisions about surgical treatment now, as throughout the history of the NHS, and in every health care system the cost of treatment is a factor, but by no means the only one.

Health Authorities (Membership)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether non-executive members of the new health authorities proposed by the National Health Service White Paper will be drawn exclusively from people who live in the area covered by the authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 February 1989]: I would normally expect them to live, work or have some other connection with the area covered by the health authority.

White Paper (Costs)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will break down by available categories on what the money allocated to the National Health Service White Paper launch has been spent.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 February 1989]: The estimated £1,250,000 cost of the launch of the review includes the total cost of the nationwide teleconference and follow-up regional meetings; the communications packs containing videotape programmes, other visual aids and speaking notes; and associated printed material. It is not possible at this stage to put precise costs on each.

I am sure it has been well worth the cost and effort to explain to 1 million NHS employees, responsible for £18 billion expenditure in England alone, what the White Paper proposals mean for their jobs, careers and their patients.

Former Ministers (Facilities)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if any office and other facilities are provided by his Department for former Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he is providing (a) office accommodation and (b) privileged access to Government records to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie).

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: By convention, former Ministers are allowed reasonable access to the papers which they handled when they were in office. Departments make suitable arrangements for this on request. The former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, made such a request and has been given the temporary use of a room in the Department and the part-time assistance of an administrative officer to manage and safeguard the papers. I understand that several former Ministers of this and former Governments have been given similar facilities in various Departments in recent years.

THE ARTS

Northern Ballet Theatre

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will meet the chairman of the Arts Council to discuss funding of the Northern Ballet theatre.

Mr. Luce: I meet the chairman of the Arts Council on a regular basis. He keeps me appraised of all Arts Council business, although questions of funding for individual arts bodies are matters for the council.

CIVIL SERVICE

Government Forms

Mr. Steel: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he will consider the possibility of having Government forms printed in black rather than in pale blue, to make them more easily legible.

Mr. Luce: The design of Government forms is a matter for individual Departments, many of which have adopted their own distinctive styles and colours. Since the Government's forms initiative began in 1982, Departments have made good progress in producing forms and leaflets which are more attractive, easier to understand and simpler to complete. Government forms now regularly win awards from the plain English campaign. I am committed to continue this work until every form is a good form. If the right hon. Member has a particular form in mind, and will write to me, I shall bring it to the attention of the Minister concerned.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Textile Firms, Leicester

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to make available to hon. Members the report of the revenue special investigation team into tax evasion by textile firms in Leicester.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Details of Inland Revenue investigations are not published.

Composite Rate Tax

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people pay composite rate tax on investment income (a) in total, (b) who have a tax liability and (c) who do not have a tax liability.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. There were some 64 million accounts subject to composite rate and which earned over £1 interest in 1986-87, some of which were held by clubs or other non-individuals. Of these accounts, it is provisionally estimated that 49 million were held by investors whose composite rate interest would be wholly liable to tax in the absence of a composite rate system, and 13 million by investors none of whose composite rate interest would be liable. The balance of about 2 million accounts was held by investors, part of whose interest would be liable to tax if there were no composite rate system.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the total value of mortgage tax relief by planning region in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates for the years 1979-80 to 1982-83 have been derived from the results of the survey of personal incomes and are given in the table.

Cost of mortgage interest relief (£ million)

	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83
Northern	60	80	70	95
Yorkshire and Humberside	110	155	150	160

Scotland	85	125	120	140
Northern Ireland	20	35	30	30
United Kingdom	1,450	1,960	2,050	2,150

Following the introduction of MIRAS in April 1983, regional information on the cost of mortgage interest relief cannot be extracted from Inland Revenue records. The regional distribution of mortgage interest can be estimated from the family expenditure survey (FES) but, as the sample size for the FES is relatively small, it is not possible to provide robust estimates of regional trends for the period after 1982-83. Accordingly, the following tables show the cost of mortgage interest relief in the United Kingdom from 1983-84 to 1988-89 with the percentage distribution of the relief by region, based on FES data from 1984 to 1986.

Cost of mortgage interest relief

	(£ million)
1984-85	3,580

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the additional annual cost to the Exchequer in tax relief on mortgage interest payments of every 1 per cent. rise in mortgage interest rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) on 12 December 1988 at column 426.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the saving to the Exchequer of paying mortgage income tax relief at the standard rate of tax only.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct Revenue yield in a full year, at 1988-89 income levels, from restricting mortgage interest relief to the basic rate is estimated to be £330 million. No allowance has been made for the effect of any consequential changes to the distribution of outstanding mortgages.

Tax Fraud

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the names and addresses of those prosecuted and convicted of tax fraud in 1987-88; and if he will make it his policy to categorise future prosecutions by locality or region.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. Names and addresses of those prosecuted and convicted of tax fraud are already released to the press by the Inland Revenue with details of the offences.

Tax Avoidance and Evasion

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to carry out investigations to establish how much revenue is lost each year through tax avoidance and evasion.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue is already alert for areas where tax is lost through avoidance and evasion. Precise quantification of the total tax involved each year would be impracticable.

Spending Plans

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will provide a table giving for 1987-88 the difference between spending plans, as given in the public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 56 and estimated outturn (a) due to capital receipts, (b) resulting from current spending of Departments and (c) resulting from classification changes;

(2) if he will provide a table giving for 1988-89 the difference between spending plans, as given in the public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 288. and estimated outturn

(a) due to capital receipts, (b) resulting from current spending of Departments and (c) resulting from classification changes;

(3) if he will provide a table giving for 1989-90 the difference between spending plans, as given in the public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 288. and estimated outturn (a) due to capital receipts, (b) resulting from current spending of Departments and (c) resulting from classification changes.

Mr. Major: The available information is given in the table. Full information on capital receipts, other than for local authorities, is not available.

Company Cars

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for 1987-88 and 1988-89 the number of tax units liable for tax on a company car, the amount of tax for which they are liable and the total tax yield.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Provisional estimates based on projections from the 1985-86 survey of expenses and benefits are given in the table.

	1987-88	1988-89
Number of directors and higher paid employees with private use of a company car	1·2 million	1·3 million
Tax liability on this benefit	£280 million	£530 million

ACT (Dividends)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the number of zero rate taxpayers reclaiming advance corporation tax on dividends and the amount of tax reclaimed in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that the information is not available centrally.

Taxation

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will give for 1988-89 (a) the composite rate tax paid by zero rate taxpayers on interest from bank and building society accounts, (b) the number of zero rate taxpayers who are paying composite rate tax, (c) the total amount of composite rate tax paid by basic rate taxpayers and (d) the number of basic rate taxpayers paying composite rate tax on bank and building society accounts.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1987-88, the latest year for which information is available, about £450 million of the composite rate tax accounted for by building societies, banks and other deposit takers was due in respect of interest that would not have been liable to tax in the hands of its recipients in the absence of a composite rate scheme, and about £3,050 million was due in respect of interest that would have been liable to tax.

I regret that the remainder of the information is not available in the form requested. But of accounts earning more than £1 interest in 1986-87, some of which were held by clubs or other non-individuals, 49 million are provisionally estimated to have been held by investors whose composite rate interest would be wholly liable to tax in the absence of a composite rate scheme, and 15 million to have been held by investors at least part of whose composite rate interest would be non-liable.

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will specify each donation made by his Department in response to public appeals for financial aid during each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Brooke: Since 1979-80 no donations in response to public appeals for financial aid have been made directly by Her Majesty's Treasury.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue from corporation tax from 1978 onwards, distinguishing wherever possible between corporation tax and advance corporation tax; and if he will express such revenues in index form taking 1984-85 tax year's revenues as the base.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Total (£ million)	of which ACT (£ million)	Total index (1984-85 = 100)	ACT index (1984-85 = 100)
1978-79	3,940	1,380	47·2	43·8
1979-80	4,646	1,831	55·7	58·1
1980-81	4,645	1,823	55·7	57·9
1981-82	4,930	1,993	59·1	63·3
1982-83	5,677	2,222	68·1	70·6
1983-84	6,184	2,118	74·1	67·3
1984-85	8,341	3,149	100·0	100·0
1985-86	10,708	3,808	128·4	120·9
1986-87	13,495	4,456	161·8	141·5
1987-88	15,734	4,939	188·6	156·8

One-parent Families

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many one-parent families benefit from the additional personal allowance.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About half a million one-parent families benefit from the additional personal allowance. This estimate is based on a projection of the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes and is provisional.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide his best estimate of expenditure in 1988 on devolved public service pension schemes.

Mr. Brooke: Of the main public service superannuation schemes, only those covering local government employees and the police and fire services are not centrally administered. For the financial year 1987-88, the most recent period for which information is available, the estimated net expenditure by employing authorities in Great Britain on those schemes is:

	£ million
Local government	895
Police	259
Fire service	70

Information on expenditure on the smaller schemes operated by non-departmental public bodies for their staff is not held centrally. It could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any guidance is given to Departments on the procedures for answering parliamentary questions for written answer.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. The procedure adopted is essentially a matter for the departmental Minister concerned. Guidance, reflecting the recommendations of the Select Committee on Parliamentary Questions of Session 1971-72, can be found in "Erskine May" (20th edition, pages 331-47).

Departments have been given an advisory level at which the cost of answering a parliamentary question should be referred to Ministers; that level is currently £250 and was announced in a written answer on 14 March 1988 by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General at column 429. This does not, however, alter the discretion of individual Ministers to decide that a particular question should be answered partially or in full, regardless of cost.

Credit Cards

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the present charges to credit card holders by each one of the credit card companies operating in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: This is a matter for the companies concerned.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each of the credit card companies operating in the United Kingdom; and, as far as the information is available to him, the names of those operating in (a) Austria, (b) each one of the European Community countries, (c) Sweden, (d) Canada and (e) the United States of America.

Mr. Lilley This information is not held.

Civil Service Pension Scheme

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will list the grades of civil servants who are currently not members of the principal Civil Service pension scheme.

Mr. Brooke: Membership of the principal Civil Service pension scheme does not depend upon the grade of the civil servant. Most civil servants are eligible for membership. The exceptions are:

staff covered by another occupational scheme
those who work less than fifteen hours a week staff employed on a casual, fee-paid, or sessional basis some staff engaged locally overseas staff specifically engaged on terms that exclude PCSPS membership staff who exercise their right to opt out of the scheme

Seal Products (Illegal Trading)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the prosecutions for the illegal importation of harp and hooded seal skins since the implementation of the ban on imports; and if he will list the numbers of cases in which charges were preferred, and convictions obtained.

Mr. Lilley: None.

Charities (Payroll Giving)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide figures for (a) the total number of employees currently making donations to charity under the payroll deduction scheme introduced in the 1987 Budget, (b) the total number of companies from which employees are currently making donations to charity under the payroll deduction scheme, (c) the amount of money raised in the financial year 1987-88, under the scheme, (d) the total amount of money that has been raised to date for charities under the payroll deduction scheme and (e) the estimated amount of money that will have been raised for charities under the payroll deduction scheme by 1 April 1989.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 8 February 1989]: In 1987-88 it is estimated that about 60,000 employees participated in the scheme and £1 million was donated. The number of participants and the amount of donations are expected to be considerably higher in 1988-89. Current indications are that about 100,000 employees are participating, but it is not possible to provide a reliable forecast at this stage for the year as a whole. About 3,400 schemes have been set up to date, but a figure for the number of separate companies participating in the scheme is not available. Public authorities and other employers may also operate schemes and one company may register separate schemes for different payrolls; conversely a single scheme may cover a group of companies.

EC (Contributions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what part of the receipts recorded in the White Paper on European Economic Community contributions, Cm. 603, relates to sums paid to British traders to subsidise the export of food to third countries under the common agricultural policy arrangements.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 7 February 1989]: The proportion of the receipts from the EC budget recorded in the White Paper, Cm. 603, which relate to export refunds paid to United Kingdom traders are as follows:

	Per cent.
1983-84	18·6
1984-85	20·5
1985-86	19·0
1986-87	14·5
1987-88	27·7
1988-89	20·0
1989-90	21·5
1990-91	23·0
1991-92	22·0

Industrial Trust

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Inland Revenue will investigate companies making donations to the Industrial Trust and claiming tax relief; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 6 February 1989]: The Inland Revenue is responsible for determining taxpayers' tax liabilities, and any reliefs they may be entitled to, in accordance with the law, and subject to the taxpayers' rights of appeal to independent appeal commissioners and the courts.

I regret that I cannot comment on the affairs of any taxpayer.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Horticulture R and D

Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to modify the proposed reduction in research and development funding in near market research in horticulture.

Mr. MacGregor: The planned reduction in Government expenditure on near-market research and development announced last autumn related to agriculture, fisheries and food as a whole. Consultations with industry organisations on the funding of near market work in individual sectors are continuing. Final decisions on the reductions in funding for horticulture and other sectors have not yet been taken.

Fraud

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to detect and prosecute cases of agricultural fraud.

Mr. MacGregor: All agricultural subsidies paid in the United Kingdom are subject to pre or post-payment verification, by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, IBAP or Agriculture Departments as appropriate.

Any suspicious or irregular payments are investigated, and recovery action is taken. When justified by the evidence available, prosecutions are brought (19 in the period 1984-88).

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the take up of the set-aside proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Over 1,800 farmers in the United Kingdom are setting aside nearly 58,000 hectares (143,000 acres) of arable land in the current crop year. I shall shortly be publishing full details of the analysis of this years response.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farms have taken the option of the set-aside scheme for agricultural land; and what effect this has had on the number of employees working on those farms.

Mr. Ryder: Over 1,800 farmers in the United Kingdom are setting aside arable land in the current crop year. It is too early to assess the impact on agricultural employment.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farms have taken the option of the set-aside scheme for agricultural land in (a) Suffolk and (b) Norfolk; and what is the total acreage involved.

Mr. MacGregor: The information is as follows:

	Number of farms	Acreage of set-aside land
Suffolk	83	4,723
Norfolk	65	4,355

NFU (Meeting)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union; and what they discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I meet the president of the National Farmers Union on various occasions to discuss agricultural matters.

Chickens and Eggs

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he received a report following the meeting at the central veterinary laboratory on 4 February 1988 called to discuss infections in chickens and eggs.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No meeting took place at the central veterinary laboratory on 4 February 1988 about infections in chickens and eggs.

Covent Garden

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Covent Garden market authority last met; and what was discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: The Covent Garden market authority is an independent statutory body. My responsibilities in relation to this body are laid down by statute, and I have no role at the authority's meetings, which are matters for the authority itself.

Surplus Food

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the current arrangements for the distribution of surplus European Economic Community food to pensioners and others; and how they differ from previous years.

Mr. Ryder: In the United Kingdom, 127 charitable and non-profit making organisations were designated in 1988 to distribute surplus beef and butter during 1988 and 1989. The definition of those eligible to receive produce is restricted to those receiving income support or family credit and those of no fixed abode or living in welfare hostels. Detailed distribution arrangements are a matter for designated organisations to determine according to local needs and the resources available, but the organisations have to follow the conditions attached to their participation in the scheme. They are entitled to reimbursement of transport and administration costs within the limits laid down in the European Community legislation. The scheme first operated in 1988 and the rules are not expected to be changed for 1989.

There have been no directly comparable schemes in previous years. During the winter of 1986-87, arising from severe weather throughout Europe, a number of products were distributed to the most needy by charitable organisations; and at Christmas time in both 1982 and 1984, subsidised butter was sold to the general public through retail outlets.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the (a) quantity and (b) cost of each foodstuff distributed under arrangements for surplus EEC food distribution for each year since accession to the EEC.

Mr. Ryder: Since accession to the European Community, the quantity and value of each foodstuff distributed in the United Kingdom under various arrangements for surplus EC food distributions is as follows:

	Butter	Concentrated butter	Cheese	Whole milk	Semi-skimmed milk	Beef
1982[1]
Quantity (tonnes)	23,197	—	—	—	—	—
Value (£)	16,895,739	—	—	—	—	—
1983[2]
Quantity (tonnes)	39,144	—	—	—	—	—
Value (£)	39,930,292	—	—	—	—	—
1986-87[3]
Quantity	13,624 tonnes	113 tonnes	8,558 tonnes	8,637,975 pints	2,559,924 pints	974 tonnes

1988[4]
Quantity (tonnes)	2,463		—	—	—	1,775
Value (£)	5,049,583		—	—	—	4,385,385

[1] "Christmas Butter Scheme"—subsidised butter was sold to the general public through retail outlets at a maximum cost of 44p per 250 grams.
[2] "Christmas Butter Scheme"—subsidised butter was sold to the general public through retail outlets at a maximum cost of 42p per 250 grams.
[3] "Cold Weather Aid"—free produce distributed by charitable organisations was made available to the most needy. Butter and beef were made available from intervention stores. Whole milk, semi-skimmed milk, cheese and concentrated butter were purchased on the open market.
[4] "EC Surplus Food Scheme"—butter and beef from intervention stores were made available for distribution by designated organisations only to those on Income Support or Family Credit and to those of no fixed abode or living in welfare hostels. Produce made available free or at a nominal charge (not exceeding 20p per kilogramme).

Bee Products

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if bee products have ever been distributed under the EEC surplus food distribution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: If the hon. Member is referring to the current EC surplus food scheme, which is aimed at reducing stocks held in intervention, bee products are not subject to intervention arrangements and are not covered by this scheme.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what EEC policies currently pertain towards bee products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The only EC controls in this area are those contained in Council directive 74/409/EEC on the harmonisation of the laws of the member states relating to honey.

Meat Products

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what regulations there are requiring cooked food retailers and caterers to specify the meat content of meat-style products;

(2) what requirements there are for indicating to consumers the levels of mechanically recovered meat within overall meat contents.

Mr. Ryder: The Meat Products and Spreadable Fish Products Regulations 1984 require most meat products to be marked or labelled with a declaration of their minimum meat content. These regulations do not require the presence of mechanically recovered meat to be indicated separately.

However, the Food Labelling Regulations 1984 require food treatments and/or the names of ingredients to be appropriately indicated where an omission to do so could mislead purchasers. Both sets of regulations apply to retail sales and sales to caterers.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations there are to control the production of mechanically recovered meat in terms of hygiene and safety.

Mr. Ryder: All mechanically recovered meat is produced from carcases which have been inspected and passed as fit for human consumption.

In England and Wales, the Slaughterhouse (Hygiene) Regulations 1977, as amended, apply to the production of mechanically recovered red meat in cutting plants attached to slaughterhouses. The Poultry Meat (Hygiene) Regulations 1977, as amended, apply to mechanically recovered poultry meat produced in licensed cutting premises. Mechanically recovered meat produced in other premises is subject to the Food Hygiene (General) Regulations 1970.

Similar legislation applies in Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table in the Official Report giving details of (a) pre-tax net farm income and (b) gross output in current prices and in real terms for each year since 1979 (i) for each of the three counties of Yorkshire and (ii) nationally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Information on farm output and incomes is not available by county. However estimates of gross output, gross product and farming income by standard statistical region have been published for 1984 and 1985 in the annual reports on farm incomes in the United Kingdom. Corresponding figures for 1986 will be provided in the next report due to be published in the spring. These reports also include estimates of net farm income by farm type but by the (different) farm business survey regions.

The figures provided in these reports are however subject to revision and the best estimates which are currently available (consistent with the United Kingdom figures recently published in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1988") are as follows:

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Gross regional output
Yorkshire and Humberside	1,026	1,056	1,189	1,110	1,132
United Kingdom	11,334	11,763	12,818	12,211	12,504
Gross Product
Yorkshire and Humberside	470	441	574	500	543
United Kingdom	5,299	5,105	6,024	5,389	5,836
Farming Income
Yorkshire and Humberside	183	137	258	140	175
United Kingdom	1,730	1,339	2,061	1,053	1,470

No regional figures for agriculture are available for years before 1982. The purchasing power of farming income (which is pre-tax) may be derived by deflating the series by the retail price index. The values of this (1985 = 100) for each year are 1982—85·8; 1983—89·7; 1984—94·3; 1985—100 and 1986—103·4. Separate price indices do not exist for each region.

Milk

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to bring goat milk production under legislative control.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 8 February.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (a) whether he has any proposals to extend regulations governing milk production to goats' milk and ewes' milk and (b) whether he proposes to support the goat producers association's clean milk production scheme.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As regards goats' milk I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 8 February. This referred to the Ministry's code of practice which has objectives similar to the clean milk producton scheme. The legal position of ewes' milk is the same as that of goats' milk, and a code of practice is being prepared.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will bring forward proposals to reduce the incidence of contamination of goat and cows' milk.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Windsor and Maidenhead (Dr. Glyn) on 10 February.

Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will seek to extend legislative control over production of cows' milk to cover goats and sheep.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As regards goats' milk, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 8 February. The legal position of sheep's milk is the same as that of goats' milk, and a code of practice is being prepared.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether there are any plans to bring all milk production under legislative control.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Cows' milk is already comprehensively regulated. The position on goats' milk was described in the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 8 February. The legal position of sheep milk is similar to that of goats' milk, and a code of practice is being prepared.

Consumers Association

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Consumers Association; and what was discussed.

Mr. Ryder: The most recent ministerial meeting was held on 12 October, at our request. A wide range of matters of mutual concern were discussed.

River Esk (Pollution)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has made any assessment of the study undertaken by Friends of the Earth of the potential radioactive pollution of the River Esk by Americium 241, caesium 137 and other radioisotopes released from Sellafield.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My officials have only just received a copy of the report in question from Friends of the Earth and are studying this. I have, however, seen various press reports referring to statements by Friends of the Earth about radioactivity in the area of the river Esk. These reports refer to comparisons between measured levels of radioactivity and the generalised derived limits (GDLs) recommended by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB). Such comparisons are not valid. The GDLs provide a simple but crude way of demonstrating the environmental acceptability of given levels of radioactivity, but they do not provide means of calculating dose. The GDLs are intended for situations where no information is available on land usage, local habits and other factors relevant to the radiation exposure of people in the area. This is patently not the case around the river Esk. On the basis of extensive monitoring conducted by my scientists, British Nuclear Fuels plc and others, it has been clearly established that there is no risk of unacceptable exposure of man from these contamination levels.

Sheepmeat Premium

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department plans to support the introduction of draft EEC regulations to phase out the variable sheepmeat premium.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the negotiations on the review of the EC sheepmeat regime, which have made little progress so far, I will be seeking to ensure that the United Kingdom sheep industry can, at reasonable cost, continue to capitalise on its natural advantages and superior efficiency. It is too early to judge which means of support will be most effective in achieving this.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total area of land covered by agreements in the Suffolk environmentally sensitive areas; how many farms are covered; and how he intends the scheme to progress in the future.

Mr. Ryder: The table shows the total number of agreements and the area of land covered so far in the Broads, Breckland and Suffolk River Valleys ESA.

ESA	Number of agreements	Area of land covered in hectares
Broads	624	11,990
Breckland	82	3,100
Suffolk River Valley	273	6,130

Information on the number of farms covered is not readily available. I intend to carry out a policy review of ESAs in 1991-92 to determine how the scheme will progress.

High Grade Land (Warrington)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of agricultural land within Warrington, South is high-grade agricultural land.

Mr. Ryder: The area has not been surveyed in detail and the published 1:63,360 scale agricultural land classification map gives only a generalised indication of land quality. It shows approximately one third of the agricultural land as grade 2, and almost all of the remaining land as grade 3.

Salmonella (Working Group)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he received the report of the joint Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Department of Health and British Egg Industry Council working group on salmonella and eggs; and at what exact time he placed a copy in the Library.

Mr. MacGregor: I received the report of the joint Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Department of Health and British Egg Industry Council working group on salmonella and eggs on 10 January 1989 and placed a copy in the Library at about 10.45 on Tuesday 7 February 1989.

Aluminium

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what levels of aluminium are contained in the following soya milks (a) Wysoy by Wyeth Nutrition in powder form, (b) Granose produced in West Germany in liquid form and (c) White Wave produced by Unisoy Milk in the United Kingdom; what evidence he has on the effect of such levels of aluminium on infants and young children; and if he will publish the results of research showing the levels of aluminium in the most popular brands of soya milk sold in this country.

Mr. Ryder: It is not our policy to publish details of individual brands sampled under the food surveillance programme.

The Department of Health's independent committee on toxicity chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment has considered the results of analyses carried out by my Department and has advised that no action is needed to reduce the aluminium intakes from infant formulae. That Department's expert advisory committees will keep under review the results of research in this area.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

5. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about British Rail's proposed routes for the Channel tunnel link.

15. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about British Rail's proposed routes for the Channel tunnel link.

25. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about British Rail's proposed routes for the Channel tunnel link.

Mr. Portillo: I have received a large number of representations about British Rail's proposals for rail links to the Channel tunnel.

27. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the proposed Channel tunnel fixed lines to Waterloo and Charing Cross; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have received a large number of representations about British Rail's proposals for rail links to the Channel tunnel. It is not envisaged that Channel tunnel trains will use Charing Cross.

45. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further plans he has to encourage improvements to the road and rail network to enable the north of England to benefit from the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) today.

47. Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to British Rail's proposals for a new high-speed line between London and the Channel tunnel; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I am in regular contact with British Rail about the progress that it is making with the development of its proposals. I set out the Government's position in my response to the Adjournment debate initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) on 2 December 1988 at columns 1025-32.

52. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss links from Scotland, Wales, the north, midlands and south-east of England to the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Not at present. British Rail is still consulting widely in preparation for the plan which it will be publishing later this year in accordance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987.

London Underground (Exit Barriers)

11. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake an inquiry into safety implications of automatic exit barriers in London Underground stations.

Mr. Portillo: In response to my request London Regional Transport has already commissioned independent consulting engineers to review the working of automatic ticketing systems. It expects to receive the consultants' report by the end of April 1989.

M40

12. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date he expects the M40 to link the motorway boxes surrounding London and Birmingham.

58. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest completion date for the M40.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The M40 between the M42 and Warwick and between Warwick and Wendlebury should be completed by autumn 1989 and the end of 1990, respectively. Completion of the section between Wendlebury and Waterstock will depend on the statutory procedures. We hope to make an announcement shortly.

London Regional Transport

13. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chair of London Regional Transport; and what matters they will discuss.

37. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chair of London Regional Transport; and what matters they will discuss.

Mr. Portillo: I meet London Regional Transport's chairman regularly to discuss a range of matters and will next do so on 6 March.

Central London Rail Study

14. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the new tube lines recently mentioned in the central London rail study.

40. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the central London rail study.

62. Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the central London rail study.

Mr. Portillo: In the short time since the report was published we have received a small number of responses from the public.

31. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he plans to have with user groups and local transport about the options contained in the central London rail study.

33. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next proposes to meet the expert advisory groups to discuss the proposals for underground rail tunnels in Greater London.

Mr. Portillo: I intend to consider the written representations received before arranging discussions with interested parties.

Glasgow Airport

16. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to give gateway status to Glasgow airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend is considering a request from BAA plc, as owners of Prestwick and Glasgow airports, for a review of the 1986 traffic distribution rules for Scotland, which restrict intercontinental traffic to Prestwick. He will make an announcement in due course.

Road Casualties

17. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further measures he is taking to reach his target of reducing road casualties by one third by the year 2000.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our short-term target is to reduce the annual number of road fatalities below 5,000, as well as to bring about a sharp decline in injuries. Since 1986 there has been a 5 per cent. reduction in fatalities and a 6 per cent. reduction in serious injuries.

Over the year ahead, we will be concentrating our efforts on vulnerable groups such as children, the elderly, pedestrians, cyclists and motorcyclists, as well as on dangerous groups such as drinking drivers and selfish and aggressive road users.

Overall we have the best record in the EC for road deaths. We must now aim for the same position on each of the vulnerable road user groups.

Engineering, education, enforcement, exhortation and example will all play their part.

Civil Aviation Authority

18. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, met the chairman of the authority on 19 January 1989 to discuss a number of issues of mutual interest.

Heathrow Airport (Security)

19. Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will next meet the chairman of BAA further to discuss security at Heathrow airport.

22. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 16 January, on security at Heathrow airport, he will now make a further statement on any developments since then.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is nothing to add to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks) on 31 January at column 146.

A1

20. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the reports of the studies conducted by his Department and the Scottish Office on the future of the A1; and if he will make a statement..

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Discussions have taken place and further meetings are planned between officials of the Department's northern regional office and the Scottish Development Department about a proposed improvement scheme on the A1 near the English/Scottish border at Marshall meadows. An announcement on a preferred route is expected by early summer 1989.

The report of an independent study being carried out by the Scottish Development Department is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what date he expects work to start on upgrading to three lanes the section of the M1 between Dishforth and Scotch Corner.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Subject to the satisfactory completion of the statutory procedures, we hope to start construction in the mid-1990s.

Motorway Lighting

21. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of motorway is at present unlit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A total of 74 per cent.

London Underground Ltd (Crime)

23. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussion he is having with officials of London Underground Ltd. on the level of crime taking place on the Underground.

Mr. Portillo: I and my Department maintain close contact with London Underground Ltd. on the action that it and the police forces concerned are taking against crime on the Underground.

West Sussex (Infrastructure)

24. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on transport infrastructure investment in West Sussex.

Mr. Portillo: Actual and planned expenditure on the A23 and A27 trunk roads since 1979 amounts to about £95 million at November 1985 prices.

Over the past five years £14 million has been made available to the county council through transport supplementary grants for the local road network.

Road Haulage Industry (Safety)

20. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to uphold safety standards in the road haulage industry after 1992 and the introduction of the single European market.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government are determined to ensure that regulations, which are necessary for safety, but which do not restrict trade, are applied throughout the Community.

Scottish Airports (Review)

28. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his review of Scottish airports will be complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend is considering a British Airports Authority plc request to review the 1986 traffic distribution rules for Scotland. He will make an announcement in due course.

M1 (Relief Plans)

29. Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has apart from the extension of the M40, for the relief of the M1 between junction 1 and its junction with the M6.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are planning improvements at junction 1 and a climbing lane at junction 9. Schemes planned for the A5 will also help to relieve the M1. The trunk road programme is currently under review. We expect to make an announcement in the spring.

British Rail

30. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chair of British Rail; and what matters they will discuss.

41. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chair of British Rail; and what matters they will discuss.

53. Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chair of British Rail; and what matters they will discuss.

54. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chair of British Rail; and what matters they will discuss.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend plans to meet the chairman of British Rail on 16 March to discuss a variety of railway matters.

Traffic Congestion

32. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies have been undertaken by his Department as to the current extent of traffic congestion in urban areas in Britain; and whether he has any information as to the comparable situation 10 and 20 years ago.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Average vehicle speeds are taken as an indicator of urban traffic congestion. In London surveys have been maintained since 1968. The results were published recently by my right hon. Friend in his "Statement on Transport in London." Copies have been placed in the Library. Comparable information is not available for other urban areas in Britain, though the Department carried out a series of studies of traffic speeds in 13 urban areas outside London in the 1960's and 1970's. The results showed the importance of limiting on-street parking density in the interest of securing good average traffic speeds during peak and non-peak hours.

Docklands

34. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much central Government are spending on transport in the docklands in the financial years 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Portillo: Central Government expenditure on transport which serves docklands was £143 million in 1987-88 and is estimated at £127 million in 1988-89.

Transport in London (Document)

35. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport from what bodies he has requested formal responses to the document entitled "Statement on Transport in London" which he published on Thursday 26 January.

Mr Portillo: The statement on transport in London is not a consultation document. It is a technical publication prepared for the London local authorities and other interested bodies to provide them with a framework within which they can plan their own transport related decisions.

Crises (Shipping)

36. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the NATO study on supply and demand for shipping in crisis and war commissioned by the senior civil emergencies planning committee at the request of the planning board for ocean shipping, is expected to be completed; if there will be any intermediate report; and when and in what form the results will be published.

Mr. Portillo: The study is expected to be completed in early 1990. No intermediate report is planned, and no decision has yet been reached about the form of the final report.

Rochford

38. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for visiting the Rochford constituency in order to review road traffic problems.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has no official plans to visit Rochford.

TALIS

39. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has now completed his consideration of the proposed British Rail line known as TALIS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: This is not a matter for me, but I understand that British Rail will be considering this alternative before reaching a decision on its preferred route between London and the Channel tunnel.

Bypasses

42. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bypasses have been completed since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A total of 96 bypasses and relief roads have been completed since 1979, representing 40 per cent. of new national road mileage.

Other trunk road schemes, although not denoted bypasses, have a bypassing effect.

Railway Works (Environmental Protection)

43. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek powers to provide funds for environmental protection on any railway works which he has approved.

Mr. Portillo: It is normal practice for British Rail to take appropriate environmental protection measures when they undertake new railway works. The costs involved form part of the total cost of the project for the purposes of establishing the case for the investment, and are financed in the same way as the rest of the project.

M1 Air Crash

44. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report from the accident investigator on the M1 air crash; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Reports by the air accidents investigation branch concerning major accidents generally take some 15 to 18 months to produce.

The AAIB's practice is to communicate important findings, as it reaches them, to the Civil Aviation Authority or other relevant quarters, without waiting for completion of the full report.

A590 Dalton-in-Furness Bypass

46. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many objections have been received regarding the preferred route for the A590 Dalton-in-Furness bypass in Cumbria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The objection period for the published orders end on the 28 February. So far four objections have been received. A public inquiry may be necessary if these and any further objections are not withdrawn.

Road Construction (North Devon)

48. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road construction projects, together with their cost, which have been approved, started or completed since 1979 in north Devon from M5-Tiverton to South Molton, Barnstaple area and the River Torridge, together with connecting roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Some £109 million worth of new trunk road construction schemes have been approved, started or completed as follows:

Scheme	Works cost £ million
A361 North Devon link road stage 1 (M5 Sampford Peverell to Tiverton)	17·3	Completed March 1984
A361 North Devon link road stage 2A (Tiverton to Newtown)	27·6	Completed November 1988
A361 North Devon link road stage 2B (Newtown to Barnstaple)	25·3	Started October 1987
A39 Barnstaple bypass	20·5	Started August 1987
A39 Bideford bypass	18·3	Completed May 1987

The cost of connecting roads are included.

A1-M1 (Lighting)

49. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve and extend lighting on the A1-M1.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On the A1 it is proposed to replace the existing lighting between Astwick and the Edworth turn in Bedfordshire (2·4 km), and to extend lighting between Biggleswade and Beeston also in Bedfordshire (3·2 km). It is also planned that 8·8 km of the Newcastle western bypass, which will be designated part of the A1 when complete, will be lit.

On the M1 it is planned to replace the existing lighting between the Scratchwood service area and junction 5 (9·5 km) and to extend lighting from junction 17 to junction 20 (14·5 km).

Subject to the availability of funds, it is hoped that these proposals will have all been implemented by 1990-91.

Estuarial Crossings (Tolls)

50. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all organisations that have made representations in favour of increasing tolls across estuarial crossings to his Department since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is not readily available.

Uniform Driver Licensing System

51. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the proposals of the European Community Commission to introduce a uniform driver licensing system, with specific reference to the position of drivers who operate voluntary community transport schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The consultation document on proposals for a new unified driver licensing system published by the Department in January 1988 outlined the likely impact of the EC initiatives. Some 480 responses were received A total of 84 per cent. of these expressed concern at the adverse effects that tighter controls on minibus drivers would have on Community and charitable organisations. Some 148 letters have also been received from hon. Members on this issue.

The Government have expressed their strong concern about these proposals not only to the Commission but to other member states and the European Parliament. We shall continue to stress the importance of not damaging the mobility of individuals and groups, including disabled and elderly people, children, and community groups. The latest statistical evidence about the good safety record of minibuses in Britain is being made available to the Commission, other member states, and the European Parliament. Our aim in the negotiations is to secure the flexibility that is needed.

Airlines (Licence Applications)

55. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information was given to him by the airlines concerned at the time of application for licence as to the anticipated passenger loads of (a) American Airlines on its Manchester/Chicago route and (b) British Airways on its Manchester/New York route; and what steps he takes to monitor the accuracy of those estimates.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no requirement for United States airlines to provide information on anticipated passenger loads in respect of their services to the United Kingdom. The licence for British Airways to serve the Manchester/New York route was granted prior to the establishment of the Civil Aviation Authority in 1972; any information provided at the time on anticipated passenger loads is not readily available. The Civil Aviation Authority collects and publishes operating and traffic statistics in respect of all carriers serving United Kingdom airports, and provides reports to the Department in appropriate circumstances.

Passenger Ferries (Fires)

56. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fires were reported on board passenger ferries in 1988; what was the comparable figure for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Thirteen fires on board passenger ferries were reported to the Department in 1988. For the previous five years the figures are:

Year	Number
1983	5
1984	3
1985	6
1986	4
1987	2

Moray Maritime Rescue Subcentre, Peterhead

57. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the proposed closure of the Moray maritime rescue subcentre at Peterhead.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend announced the closure on 31 January. Both he and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy are confident that the closure will not affect the coastguards' ability to handle any future incidents in the offshore oil fields, and moreover that the associated reinforcing of the Aberdeen maritime rescue co-ordination centre will in fact enhance the coastguards' capability to deal with such incidents. The closure of the Moray MRSC will take place on 30 March.

Bedfordshire (Road Grant)

59. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to announce the 1989-90 100 per cent. grants to Bedfordshire county council for roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect to announce a decision soon.

Local Rail Networks

60. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to give encouragement and support to the increasing use of local rail networks in city areas and between major cities and their hinterlands.

Mr. Portillo: We are prepared to support investment in urban rail services wherever it offers value for money. The Government's policies on the funding of such investment are set out in their observations on the third report of the Transport Committee (1986-87 Session)—HC 420, annex C.

Random Breath Testing

61. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received from the north-east region in favour of random breath testing.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Current pressures for the introduction of random breath testing reflect society's hardening attitude towards the drinking driver.

The Association of Chief Police Officers has said that it would like to be given wider powers to stop and test drivers. On 1 February, at column 251, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in answering a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight), set out the three options under consideration in response to the police request and invited views by 30 April.

We are now bringing the amount of drinking and driving down more effectively in this country than is the case elsewhere. What matters is that we should continue to change public attitudes and behaviour.

M25

63. Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will install on the central reservation of the M25 motorway appropriate traffic lights and gates at suitable intervals which can be opened by the police to allow vehicles in major traffic jams on one carriageway to enter the carriageway going in the opposite direction in order to leave the motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Any benefit from such an arrangement would be outweighed by the practical difficulties of establishing and operating it, and by the adverse safety implications to which it would give rise.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement concerning his conclusions following receipt of the study of alternative designs for the proposed east London river crossing bridge; and if he will place a copy of the study in the Library.

Mr. Channon: I expect to receive the consultant's report later this month. I shall make an announcement as soon as possible. I shall then place a copy of the report in the Library of the House.

London Underground (Security)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many transport police are assigned to the (a) District, (b) Central, (c) Northern, (d) Bakerloo, (e) Metropolitan, (f) Piccadilly, (g) Victoria, and (h) Jubilee lines of the London Underground at the latest available date; and what were the figures for (i) 1985, (ii) 1986 and (iii) 1987.

Mr. Portillo: Officers of the British Transport police are not assigned to specific lines of the London Underground.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many railway staff with security responsibilities are assigned to the (a) District, (b) Central, (c) Northern, (d) Bakerloo, (e) Metropolitan, (f) Piccadilly, (g) Victoria, and (h) Jubilee lines of the London Underground at the latest available date; and what were the figures for (i) 1985, (ii) 1986 and (iii) 1987.

Mr. Portillo: All railway staff of London Underground Ltd. have security responsibilities as part of their general duties.

Transport and Road Research Laboratory

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding his decision to shut down the Transport and Road Research Laboratory database on bus services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: None. The database has served a useful purpose in providing speedy information during the first 18 months of deregulation but it would be unduly costly to continue. The Department receives regular statistical returns from bus operators which enable it to monitor longer term changes in the bus industry. TRRL continues to conduct studies into specific aspects of deregulation.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of the Transport and Road Research Laboratory database on bus services in each of the last five years.

Mr. Portillo: Work on the database began towards the end of the financial year 1985-86. The costs are as follows:

1985-86	50,000
1986-87	250,000
1987-88	250,000
1988-89	150,000

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had regarding the possibility of saving the Transport and Road Research Laboratory database on bus services.

Mr. Portillo: None. The database is not to be extended but it will be retained as a source of information for TRRL's studies on deregulation and to deal with requests for information. In addition, the database is to be published in April and will be available, on tapes, for research purposes.

Roads (Nottinghamshire)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to develop a primary road network in Nottinghamshire suitable for the advent of the Channel tunnel and the European single market.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The primary road network in the county has been agreed between the Department and the county council. Nottinghamshire is well served by trunk roads such as M1 and A1. There is already a full programme of national and regional trunk road schemes in the county.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the stretch of the M1 which runs through Nottingham, North constituency was last repaired; and when it is next due for repair.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Major repairs to the M1 motorway between the Trowell service area and junction 26 at Nuthall were carried out in 1985. Further major repairs are unlikely to be required before the year 2000. If the hon. Member believes that we have missed a stretch, perhaps he would let me know.

Airports (Facilities)

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will conduct an inquiry into the back-up facilities at Glasgow, Belfast, Prestwick and Campbeltown airports;

(2) who directs to what airport an aircraft in distress should be directed;

(3) if he will list the relative lengths of the airstrips at Glasgow, Campbeltown and Belfast; and what back-up facilities exist at each airport;

(4) what criteria are used in an on-board emergency as far as the direction of the aircraft to a suitable airport is concerned;

(5) what emergency facilities exist at Glasgow airport;

(6) what emergency facilities exist at Aldergrove airport;

(7) what emergency facilities exist at Prestwick and Campbeltown airports;

(8) what role the Civil Aviation Authority plays in the laying of ground rules for the direction of air traffic;

(9) what criteria exist to enable air traffic controllers to direct any aircraft in distress away from populated areas.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These matters concerning aviation safety are the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority and have been drawn to the attention of the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority.

European Transport Systems

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he intends to take in respect of the proposal of the European Economic Community transport commissioners for high-speed rail links from Glasgow, Edinburgh and Cardiff via London through the Channel tunnel to western Europe; what discussions he has with the Community of European Railways in respect of all these proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the proposals recently published by the Community of European Railways. We are not aware of any proposals by the European Commission. It is for British Rail to bring forward any proposals for further investment which it considers appropriate in the light of the CER report. The Government are always happy to approve proposals by British Rail for rail investment which is commercially justified.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expected cost to public funds of the northern Europe sub-committee of the Planning Board for European Inland Surface Transport at the civil defence college this spring; and what subjects will be discussed.

Mr. Portillo: No additional staff costs will be incurred. Expenses to be incurred against public funds are expected to be about £900. Details of the proceedings are classified.

NATO (ACTICE Study)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost to public funds of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's ACTICE study held at the civil defence college in April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: No additional staff costs were incurred. Expenses associated with hosting the study came to £6,495.

Air Navigation Orders

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to provide that all air navigation orders affecting changes in the use of United Kingdom airspace be approved by Parliament before they come into force.

Mr. Bottomley: This would not be practicable. Many of the changes have to be made at short notice and are of temporary duration.

Light Dues

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to publish the feasibility study into extending light dues to yachts and pleasure craft being undertaken by the British Ports Authority at his request on its completion.

Mr. Portillo: Yes.

Port State Control

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to ensure port state control is vigorously enforced to eliminate sub-standard ships and crews from United Kingdom and European Economic Community ports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: All European Community coastal states have signed the Paris memorandum of understanding on port state control, agreeing to inspect 25 per cent. of foreign merchant ships visiting their ports. The United Kingdom has inspected more than 25 per cent. in each of the past five years.

High Speed Rail Link (London-Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the progress of plans to build a high-speed rail link between London and Liverpool.

Mr. Portillo: The west coast main line already offers a high-speed service, and further improvements over the next few years will raise the maximum line speed further on much of the route. Journey time will also be reduced as a result of revised maintenance procedures. I am not aware of any plans to build a new line.

Motorway Verges

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to clean up motorway verges.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Cleaning of verges is one of the tasks carried out by the local authorities and consultants who act as the Department's agents for motorway maintenance. Standards for this are laid down in a code of practice for routine maintenance.

We are currently considering what further action may be needed to deal with litter on motorways.

Fennell Report

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps are being taken to strengthen the links between the British Transport police and other emergency services in London in accordance with recommendation 28 of the Fennell report;

(2) what steps are being taken to review the performance and training of British Transport police officers in accordance with recommendations 99 and 108 of the Fennell report.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that the chief constable of the British Transport police has submitted to the police committee a report of the action he has taken in the light of the Fennell report. I expect to have the committee's views shortly.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has made to the board of London Regional Transport or London Underground Limited to improve enforcement of the smoking prohibition on the London Underground in accordance with recommendation 101 of the Fennell report.

Mr. Portillo: The enforcement of the smoking prohibition on the Underground is the responsibility of London Underground Ltd. and the British Transport police. London Regional Transport in its response to the Fennell report, a copy of which is available in the Library, has accepted recommendation 101. British Transport police officers have been instructed to enforce the smoking prohibition and are instituting a campaign to secure prosecution of smoking offences using video recording equipment to identity offenders. I understand that the British Transport police are discussing the criteria for prosecutions with the Crown prosecution service.

Road Accidents

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will give statistics for the accident and safety record of (a) motorways and (b) other roads, over the last five years;

(2) what proposals he has to improve the safety of motorways in the future.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following table shows the number of accidents occuring on motorways, and on all roads, for each of the years 1983 to 1987.

Accidents and accident rates per 100 million vehicle kilometers: Motorways and other roads: 1983-1987

Further information about motorways safety can be found in "Road Accidents Great Britain 1987", a copy of which is available in the Library.

A comprehensive package of measures to improve motorway safety was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last April. Pamphlets giving fuller details were placed in the Library of the House. Most of the proposed measures have been implemented; others involving technological and regulatory changes will be phased in over several years.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 14 February 1989

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has made an assessment of the stability of the sub-Saharan countries under the long-term impact of AIDS.

Mr. Eggar: Research into the long-term demographic, social and economic consequences of AIDS are being financed under the overseas aid programme. We are also providing support through the World Health Organisation to those countries affected by the disease.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives under article VI of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty 1986 are planned by Her Majesty's Government with regard to United Kingdom nuclear weapons, in advance of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty 1990 review conference.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister of State on 8 December 1988, at column 316.

Council of Europe

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government plans to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the Council of Europe during 1989.

Mrs. Chalker: We will be represented at the 40th anniversary celebration of the Council of Europe on 5 May 1989. A postmark bearing the Council of Europe's slogan will be in use in Mount Pleasant sorting office for four weeks from 1 May 1989. We are considering what else might be done to mark this anniversary.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Trees

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will draw the Magistrates' Association's attention to the requirement for the courts to have regard to any financial benefit which may accrue, or appear likely to accrue, to offenders convicted of unauthorised felling of a protected tree; and if he wil make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The possibility of benefit is a matter which magistrates should take into account in such cases. The Lord Chancellor, in his capacity as president of the Magistrates' Association, will take the opportunity of referring to this matter, and expressing his personal views on it, on a suitable occasion when addressing members of the association.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the total annual cost of written parliamentary questions each year since 1979; how such a figure is calculated; and what is the average cost per hon. Member in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Wakeham: Records of the total cost of answering parliamentary questions are not kept and details of the average cost per hon. Member are not, therefore, available. However, an assessment is made of the average cost of answering a written question. This average figure is updated regularly and currently stands at £51. The calculation is based on a sample of staff time using average rates of pay and associated costs (such as national insurance and superannuation) for the Civil Service grades concerned and substantive non-staff costs such as computer usage.

Paper Products

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make it his policy to buy chlorine-free recycled paper products for the House.

Mr. Wakeham: Responsibility for monitoring the safety and health aspects of paper products supplied to the House lies with Her Majesty's Stationery Office. There is no reason to believe that its present policy in this respect is in need of change.

TRANSPORT

Trunk Roads

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many single carriage equivalent miles of trunk roads his Department will have renewed in the year 1988-89.

Mr. Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 8 December 1988, at column 243.

Cherished Number Plates

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department auctions cherished number plates on newly issued registered numbers 1 to 40.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Not at present. Proposals for selling attractive registration marks are being prepared. Auctions, and sales of new year-letter numbers in the series 1-20 which are currently not issued, are both under consideration.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the estimated costs of administration, per vehicle registered, of road fund licences issued in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Registration, licensing and taxation of vehicles forms part of the same administrative process. The total cost of that process in 1987-88 was £108·3 million. Thirty-three million vehicle licences were issued in that year; there were also 20 million other vehicle transactions, such as new registration documents issued.

Driving Licences

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will publish the estimated costs of administration, per licence issued, of driving licences in Great Britain in 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The overall cost of administration of the driver licensing system in 1987-88 results in an average cost of £3·24 per driving licence issued.

Merchant Fleet Tonnage

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will be revising his assessment of the merchant fleet tonnage emergency requirements, in the light of the further loss of North sea output from the Fulmar Auk and Clyde oilfields in December 1988.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have been asked to reply.

No. The temporary loss of North sea output in peacetime would not affect the merchant tonnage needed to service the North sea in wartime.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Lancashire Constabulary

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how many police posts have been civilianised by Lancashire constabulary since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Lancashire that 235 police posts have been civilianised in this period.

Naturalisation

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many naturalisation applications are at present outstanding; and how many of these applications were made one or more years ago.

Mr. Renton: Precise figures are not available. Estimates suggest that around 80,000 applications for naturalisation are now outstanding, of which about three quarters were made over a year ago.

Crime Statistics

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the crime clear-up rates for the area covered by Lincolnshire constabularly for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The recorded clear-up rate in the Lincolnshire constabulary was 49 per cent. in 1983, 35 per cent. in 1984 and 42 per cent. in 1985. From 1986 the information is published annually in table 2.18 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales".

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to issue guidance on planning for the National Health Service in war for inclusion in current emergency planning guidance to local authorities.

Mr. John Patten: Revised guidance on civil defence planning was issued by the Department of Health and Social Security to the National Health Service in July 1988. The guidance was also circulated to all local authorities in England and Wales. The substance of the guidance will be incorporated shortly in the emergency planning guidance to local authorities.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley of 7 December 1988, Official Report, column 205, if he will give details of the amounts of capital expenditure by the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation since 10 July 1987; and if he will give details of the purposes to which such expenditure was put; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Capital expenditure by the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation since 10 July 1987, when my right hon. Friend announced a review of warning and monitoring arrangements, has been limited to items essential to the maintenance of the organisation's effectiveness and readiness for operation. The carrier warning system was completed with expenditure of £2·1 million, automatic telephone exchanges were installed in operational controls at a cost of £1·75 million, and building projects amounted to £0·43 million.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will consult the appropriate police authorities concerning increased police liaison with Interpol in respect of persons missing in the United Kingdom and wanted in connection with criminal inquiries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. I refer the hon. Member to the reply to his question on 19 December 1988, at column 144.

Voting Rights

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he hopes, with the aid of modern technology, to be able to give service personnel the right to vote by post.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Service personnel may vote in person or by post or by proxy if they are living in the United Kingdom. Service personnel overseas must vote by proxy, because the Representation of the People Act 1983 does not permit ballot papers to be sent outside the United Kingdom. To be useful, alernatives or new aids provided by modern technology to the letter post would need to be consistent with the arrangements for the secrecy of the ballot.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) blacks, (b) Asians, (c) men and (d) women are currently serving in (i) the Metropolitan police, (ii) other police forces, (iii) the prison service and (iv) the probation service.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information is as follows:

Police	Officers[1]	Men	Women
Metropolitan Police (as at 5 February 1989)	414	24,788	3,220
Other police forces (as at 30 November 1988)	769	87,000	9,929

Prison Services

Of some 11,500 members of the service (including staff in headquarters and regional offices) who responded to a survey in 1986, 111 stated that they were of ethnic minority origin. The results of a more recent survey of those who did not respond are currently being analysed. Information on the number of women and men in the service is not immediately available.

Probabtion Service

Information on the ethnic composition of the probation service derives from a survey as at 31 December 1987. Of all employees 330 were recorded as Afro-Caribbean or Other Black and 86 as Asian. Because of the extent of non-recording these figures are minima.

As at 30 September there were 3,811 men and 2,972 women (whole-time and part-time) in the probation officer grades.

Broadcasting (Training)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has on the level of expenditure on training made by (a) the BBC and (b) ITV companies in each of the last five years;

(2) what provision he intends to make for training by (a) the BBC and (b) ITV companies after 1992;

(3) if he has any plans to bring forward proposals for training in broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: No information is available centrally on expenditure incurred on training by the BBC and ITV companies. It is for the broadcasting industry to provide its training, and there are no plans for Government intervention.

Television Licences

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the estimated costs of administration, per licence issued, of television licences in Great Britain in 1987-88.

Mr. Renton: The figure for the United Kingdom is £3·15, exclusive of VAT. A separate figure for Great Britain is not available.

Metropolitan Police

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the total cost to public funds of the Metropolitan police in 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: As police authority for the metropolis I have approved estimates which provide for net revenue expenditure by the Metropolitan police of £1,082·391 million in 1989-90, an increase of 7·7 per cent. on the expenditure I approved for 1988-89. This will be a cash limit.

The increase in expenditure is largely to meet increased manpower costs including the extra 300 police officers and 250 civilian staff which I announced on 30 January.

I have also authorised the issue of a precept requiring rating authorities to levy rates at 18·88p in the pound for Metropolitan police purposes. This is an increase of 14·4 per cent. on the 1988-89 precept of 16·5p.

The precept has been affected by block grant payments to the Metropolitan police due in 1989-90. The Metropolitan police are subject to the same block grant arrangements as local authorities and like them benefits from block grant in some years more than others. Although the Metropolitan police will receive over £9 million less in block grant in 1989-90, overall, London will receive £175 million more.

Viraj Mendis

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the costs of the operation by police and immigration service officers to seize Mr. Viraj Mendis; and by whom these costs will be borne.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 January 1989]: Additional costs of the operation were in the region of £5,000, of which about £1,100 were police costs and about £3,900 immigration service and prison department costs. For this purpose the operation includes the removal of Mr. Mendis from the church; escorting him to London; his detention for two nights at Her Majesty's prison Pentonville; and his deportation under escort to Sri Lanka. Normal police funding arrangements apply to the additional police costs. Immigration service and prison department costs are borne by the Home Office.

THE ARTS

Disabled People

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (a) how many civil servants and (b) what percentage of the total number of civil servants in the Office of Arts and Libraries were registered disabled in each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce: There are at present no registered disabled persons in the Office of Arts and Libraries. The Departments for which I am responsible continue to pursue opportunities to employ people with disabilities.

NATIONAL FINANCE

IMF

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions since becoming Chancellor he has met representatives of the International Monetary Fund in London; and if he will list the individuals who were present, the date and the topic discussed on each occasion.

Mr. Lilley: Since becoming Chancellor, my right hon. Friend has met representatives of the International Monetary Fund on six occasions:

Representatives	Date
Mr. P. de Fontenay, Mr. H. Vittas	9 December 1983
Mr. H. Schmitt, Mr. H. Vittas	10 December 1984
Mr. P. de Fontenay	13 December 1985
Mr. P. de Fontenay, Mr. H. Vittas	28 November 1986
Mr. M. Russo, Mr. H. Vittas	27 November 1987
Mr. M. Russo, Mr. B. Smith	2 December 1988

The discussions have covered United Kingdom economic developments and policies in the context of the fund's annual article IV review of the United Kingdom's economic policies.

In addition, my right hon. Friend has met the managing director of the International Monetary Fund in London on four occasions. He met the then MD, Mr. J. de Larosiere on 28 June 1983, 17 April 1984 and 3 February 1986 to discuss a wide range of international economic issues and met the current MD, Mr. M. Camdessus on 11 May 1988 on the occasion of the United Kingdom's formal agreement to a contribution to the IMF's enhanced structural adjustment facility (ESAF).

GNP

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the gross national product has been received by the Exchequer in each year since 1979; from which sources it came; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The information on receipts by the Government can be found in "Financial Statistics" tables 3.1, 3.2 and 3.3. Figures for GDP are shown in Economic Trends, table 2.

East Midlands Business Survey

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has received a copy of the half yearly east midlands business survey commissioned by Price Waterhouse and the business school of Trent polytechnic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The recently published east midlands business survey confirms that the region shares in the strong economic performance of the country as a whole. In particular, the survey highlights the high percentage of businesses expecting to increase capital investment and to take on more employees in the next six months.

Public Sector Debt

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on the monetary aggregates of public sector debt repayment in 1988.

Mr. Lilley: The Government's policy is to fund fully the net total of maturing debt, the PSBR and any underlying change in foreign exchange reserves by sales of debt outside the banking and building society sectors. This policy neutralises the impact of the public sector on the monetary system. The progression from public sector borrowing to the net repayment of public sector debt does not affect this. Should the net total be negative "unfunding" is required, that is, the Government make purchases of debt.

PRIME MINISTER

Clifton-on-Dunsmore

Q39. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Clifton-on-Dunsmore, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Senior Private Secretary

Q41. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to introduce Civil Service regulations whereby no civil servant shall occupy a post of a senior private secretary in No. 10 Downing street for a period of more than three years.

The Prime Minister: No.

Retirement

Q104. Sir David Price: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she proposes to take to implement the concept of the decade of retirement, outlined in the Government's Green Paper, Cmnd. 9517, of June 1985.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 18 January 1988, at column 246.

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the budget for and the number of people employed by the Central Statistical Office over the past five years.

The Prime Minister: The net expenditure of the Central Statistical Office for each of the financial years 1984-85 to 1988-89 and the number of staff employed at 1 April in each year are given in the table:

Financial year	Number of staff	Net expenditure £ million
1984-85	191	3·8
1985-86	187	3·3
1986-87	[1]200	3·5
1987-88	173	3·0
1988-89	160	3·2

[1] Twenty-five computer staff were transferred to Treasury between 1 April 1986 and 1 April 1987.

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Prime Minister what funds have been spent by the Central Statistical Office buying in statistical services or market research from the private sector.

The Prime Minister: In the past, CSO has spent very little on buying in statistical or market research services. In 1988-89 it expects to spend around £1,000. However, in 1989-90, a programme of external studies and research into problem areas of the national accounts undertaken by individuals and organisations in the private sector amounting to over £100,000 has been planned.

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Prime Minister what income was generated last year by the Central Statistical Office from the commercial sale of its services to the private sector.

The Prime Minister: Information is not available in the precise form requested. In 1987-88 total income to the CSO from the sale of publications was £314,000. In the same year sales to the private sector from the CSO commercial databank service generated £34,000.

Pensioners

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Prime Minister if she will appoint a Minister for pensioners' affairs.

The Prime Minister: Pensioners' affairs already fall within the responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Mr. Rupert Murdoch

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the occasions since 1979 when she has met Mr. Rupert Murdoch at No. 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) on 13 February 1989, at column 1.

Engagements

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty The Queen.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Capital Allocations (Nottinghamshire)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from Nottinghamshire county council regarding (a) the adequacy of the 1989 capital allocations and (b) a meeting to discuss the above.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has received a letter from the chairman of the education committee of Nottinghamshire county council setting out the committee's views on the capital allocation for 1989-90 and seeking to bring a deputation to discuss this allocation covering both county and aided schools. I will be writing shortly to arrange a meeting with interested parties from Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is capital allocation to Nottinghamshire county education authority for (a) county schools, (b) aided schools and (c) any other categories; and what is the total allocation for each of the years since 1979 indexed using 1979 prices as a base of 100.

Mr. Butcher: Nottinghamshire's total prescribed capital allocation for education for the financial year 1989-90 is £3,215,000. Of this, £3,128,000 was notionally allocated for county and controlled schools. In addition, £237,000 was allocated for governors' expenditure at aided and special agreement schools within Nottinghamshire.

The information requested for the total allocations from 1981-82 to 1989-90 is set out on the table. Before 1981-82 local education authorities did not receive block allocations but were notified annually, in the context of a rolling programme, of a limit on the value of building starts in the following year.

TABLE: Capital allocations[1] to Nottinghamshire for 1981-82 to 1989-90

(all figures in £ thousands)

Year	Allocations for Governors' expenditure at aided and special agreement schools		Prescribed expenditure allocations (schools and further and higher education)
	Cash prices	Constant prices[2]	Cash prices	Constant prices[2]
1981-82[3]	—	—	6,756	6,756
1982-83	259	242	4,903	4,576
1983-84	619	553	2,493	2,225
1984-85	190	161	2,666	2,265
1985-86	22	18	3,421	2,758
1986-87	66	51	3,043	2,374
1987-88	322	239	2,379	1,763
1988-89	203	142	2,461	1,716
1989-90	237	157	3,215	2,136

Notes:

[1] The allocations shown are those announced before the start of the financial year in question and do not include subsequent revisions.

[2] Calculated at 1981-82 prices using the GDP deflator.

[3] Allocations for aided schools in 1981-82 were made on a different basis from those for later years and have therefore been omitted.

School Meals

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish figures showing the estimated cost of providing free school meals to (a) pupils and (b) teachers in (i) 1970-71, (ii) 1979-80 and (iii) 1984-85.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is given in the table.

Estimated cost[1] of free school meals—England

£ million

	1970-71 cash terms	1984-85 real terms	1979-80 cash terms	1984-85 real terms	1984-85 cash terms
Net cost of all meals	82	396	409	626	432
Cost of free meals to pupils	n/a	n/a	106	163	198
teachers	n/a	n/a	25	38	30

[1] The gross expenditure by local education authorities on all meals has been apportioned to the two categories in the ratio of the number of meals taken by each group to the total number of meals taken by paying and free pupils and adults.
Note: The figures for the earlier years have been converted to 1984-85 real terms using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.

It is not possible to give a full set of figures for 1970-71 because the number of meals served to adults, including teachers, is not available.

Leigh and Bransford School

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to be able to announce his conclusions regarding the public inquiry concerning access and other matters relating to Leigh and Bransford primary school, Worcester, held on 12 September 1988.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Transport are in the final stages of consideration of the public inquiry concerning compulsory purchase orders relating to the new site for and access to the combined Bransford primary school and Leigh Sinton Church of England (voluntary controlled) school and they expect to announce a decision very shortly.

Council of Europe Anniversary

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in what ways his Department is intending to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the Council of Europe in schools during 1989; and if the Council of Europe's special teaching kit is to be used.

Mr. Jackson: My Department intends to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the Council of Europe in schools by issuing a letter to chief education officers, drawing their attention to the programme of events which has been arranged and sending them sufficient copies of the materials now being prepared by the council for distribution to secondary schools and further education colleges in England and Wales.

Student Awards

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish tables to show the number of discretionary awards to students attending (a) drama schools, (b) dance schools, and (c) art colleges, made by each local education authority in England and Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available centrally.

Theatre in Education

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the local education authorities in England and Wales which give financial support to theatre in education companies.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information for England is not collected centrally. Provision in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Education Reform

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance he has given to local education authorities as to who is responsible for meeting legal costs of school governors involved in litigation relating to opting-out procedures or other litigation arising out of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department wrote to the chief education officers of all local education authorities in England on 13 February on the question, inter alia, of costs relating to legal action against governors in connection with applications for grant-maintained status under the Education Reform Act 1988. The relevant paragraph stated:

> "This is a matter which could only be determined finally by the Courts. But the Secretary of State's view is that, where the governing body has acted in good faith in pursuance of its duties, any legal costs it may incur in such circumstances would qualify as part of the expenses of running the school to be defrayed by the local education authority in accordance with section 114(2) of the Education Act 1944. The costs would therefore fall to be met by the local education authority: there would be no personal liability on individual governors".

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the names, the areas and type of those schools in respect of which he has received a notification concerning a governors' resolution or parent petition for a ballot for a grant-maintained school.

Mrs. Rumbold: There is no duty on governors to notify the Department when ballots on grant-maintained status are pending. Ballots have been completed at 29 schools. In addition, the Department is aware that governors have passed the necessary two resolutions, or have received a written request from parents, in respect of the following schools:

Under-fives

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply of 6 February to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East, Official Report, column 462, what has been the total annual amount of grant related expenditure in respect of the additional educational needs of under-fives in each year from 1976-77 to 1988-89, in cash and real terms.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the grant-related expenditure for nursery education in England from the start of the current local government finance system. The additional educational needs element of nursery education forms approximately half of the control total. Expenditure on under-fives in primary classes does not fall within the control total for grant related expenditure for nursery education, but is contained within the overall grant related expenditure for primary education.

Private Sector (Grant-aid)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total cost to his Department of grant-aid schemes to the private education sector for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: My Department's Votes cover expenditure in England on the assisted places scheme and the music and ballet scheme. The information requested is as follows:

Total Department of Education and Science expenditure

University Grants Committee

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will announce the recurrent grants allocated to universities for the academic year 1989-90 by the University Grants Committee.

Mr. Jackson: The University Grants Committee's initial allocation of recurrent grant to universities in the academic year 1989-90 is shown in the table. Responsibility for making the payments will fall to the UGC's successor body, the Universities Funding Council, whose chairman has accepted the announced distribution. Copies of the general letter of guidance that the chairman of the UGC has sent to all universities have been placed in the Library of the House. The general letter will be followed within the next few weeks by a set of institutional annexes providing further details for individual universities. The annexes will also be placed in the Library.

The total grant distributed by the UGC as announced in the table does not include items which it is the UGC's practice to allocate separately, such as local authority rates and the overseas research student awards scheme. These items amount to £140 million. Nor does the distribution include provision which is to be allocated separately in the targeted programme of restructuring for which my right hon. Friend has provided £184 million over four years.

The distribution does not include the £67 million third instalment of additional funding in the financial year 1989-90 towards the cost of the 1987 academic pay restructuring settlement. The release of this funding will be subject to continued satisfactory progress on staff appraisal, probation and promotion arrangements.

Lecturers (Pay)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average university lecturer's rise in salary for each of the last 10 years (a) in absolute cash terms, (b) in real terms and (c) in relation to the rise in average earnings.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to her reply, 9 February 1989, c. 749]: The average salary of full-time lecturers in universities for each of the last 10 years for which data are available is given in the table. The actual percentage increase is also tabulated for each year, as well as the percentage increase relative to the retail prices index at April each year and average non-manual earnings. The index used covers employees in professional and related, administrative, clerical, managerial, selling, security, literary, artistic and sporting occupations.

The average is calculated by dividing the aggregate salary by the number of lecturers in universities. The annual increases thus reflect other factors as well as pay settlements, such as any change in the proportions of lecturers in the various grades.

As at December	Average salary	Annual increase	Annual percentage increase: Actual	In real terms (RPI-based)	In relation to non-manual average earnings

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average polytechnic lecturer's rise in salary for each of the last 10 years (a) in absolute cash terms, (b) in real terms and (c) in relation to the rise in average earnings.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to her reply, 9 February 1989, c. 749]: The average salary of full-time lecturers in polytechnics for each of the last 10 years for which data are available is given in the table. The actual percentage increase is also tabulated for each year, as well as the percentage increase relative to the retail prices index at April each year and average non-manual earnings. The index used covers employees in professional and related, administrative, clerical, managerial, selling, security, literary, artistic and sporting occupations.

The average is calculated by dividing the aggregate salary by the number of lecturers in polytechnics. The annual increases thus reflect other factors as well as pay settlements, such as any change in the proportions of lecturers in the various grades.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average college of further education lecturer's rise in salary for each of the last 10 years (a) in absolute cash terms, (b) in real terms and (c) in relation to the rise in average earnings.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to her reply, 9 February 1989, c. 749]: The average salary of full-time lecturers in colleges of further education excluding polytechnics for each of the last 10 years for which data are available is given in the table. The actual percentage increase is also tabulated for each year, as well as the percentage increase relative to the retail prices index at April each year and average non-manual earnings. The index used covers employees in professional and related, administrative, clerical, managerial, selling, security, literary, artistic and sporting occupations.

The average is calculated by dividing the aggregate salary by the number of lecturers in colleges. The annual increases thus reflect other factors as well as pay settlements, such as any change in the proportions of lecturers in the various grades.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average rise in salary for each of the last 10 years, expressed in relation to the rise in average professional earnings, for (i) university lecturers, (ii) polytechnics lecturers and (iii) college of further education lecturers.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 10 February 1989]: The percentage rise in the average salaries of full-time lecturers in universities, polytechnics and other colleges of further education, relative to the index of non-manual earnings, for the most recent years available are as given in the table. There is no recognised index for average professional earnings. The index used covers employees in professional and related, administrative, clerical, managerial, selling, security, literary, artistic and sporting occupations.

The average has been calculated by dividing the aggregate salary by the number of lecturers. The annual increases thus reflect other factors as well as pay settlements, such as any change in the proportions of lecturers in the various grades.

ENERGY

British Coal (Redundancies)

124. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will consult British Coal on the implications for policy on redundancy of arrangements and promises made to its employees over the age of 50 years who were persuaded to accept redundancy from 1984.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I consult British Coal regularly on all aspects of the coal industry.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to ask Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate to conduct a review of corrosion and cracking problems at the Central Electricity Generating Board nuclear plants at Heysham, Hartlepool and Dungeness B.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are issues which the Health and Safety Executive takes fully into account as part of its duties.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will request Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate to conduct a study of the tolerability of risk to United Kingdom citizens of the French nuclear power programme, in particular those plants sited on the Channel.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The safety of French nuclear installations is a matter for their regulatory authorities. I have no reason to doubt that French nuclear safety standards are as high as those in the United Kingdom. Nevertheless, in proposing a stringent level for societal risk, HSE was fully aware of the possibility of accidents outside the United Kingdom.

Aerogenerators

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will initiate a departmental assessment of the study by the Swedish energy consultancy VBB into the feasibility of the offshore siting of aerogenerators at sea.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As part of its wind energy research programme my Department is investigating the feasibility of siting wind turbines offshore. I hope to be able to obtain a copy of the VBB report so that its findings can be taken into account in our own studies.

Hinkley Point

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will submit evidence for cross examination on the tolerability of nuclear plant risk to the Hinkley C nuclear inquiry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The Health and Safety Executive has given evidence on the tolerability of risk from nuclear power stations to the Hinkley Point C inquiry.

Coal Production (Costs)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish the marginal costs of coal production of both opencast and deep mined coal for each year from 1981-82 to 1988-89, or for which the latest figures are available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health Authorities (Land)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for each health board (a) the square footage of unused properties and (b) the square footage or acreage of unused land and the estimated value of each category as a percentage of total land and property and as a percentage of the total land and property value of each board; and if he will make a statement as to his Department's policy on the sale of unused land and property.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not collected routinely by either the Department of Health and Social Services or by the four health and social services boards and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs. The total acreage of the health and personal social services estate and the acreage and estimated value of property (that is both land and buildings) which have been declared surplus to the requirements of each health and social services board at 6 February 1989 is as follows:

Board	Total estate (Acres)	Surplus estate (Acres)	Surplus estate Per cent.	Estimated value of surplus estate £ million
Eastern	1,428·11	196·305	13·74	2·9
Northern	634·82	194·232	30·59	0·8
Southern	332·29	30·154	9·07	0·75
Western	1,018·28	12·72	1·25	1·4
Total	3,413·50	433·411	12·70	5·85

The policy on the sale of land and property which has been declared surplus to requirements is that it should be disposed of in a publicly acceptable manner, and for the best price which in the opinion of the Valuation and Lands Office can reasonably be obtained.

Land Registry

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the extent of monthly backlog of cases over each of the last three years in the Land Registry Office in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Details of the stocks of work held are as follows:

	1986	1987	1988
January	11,964	13,461	15,181
February	11,851	13,233	15,410

November	14,718	14,844	14,764
December	14,864	15,289	14,686

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases at present await clearance at the Land Registry Office in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: 14,766 at the end of January 1989.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish an indicative list of charges made by the Land Registry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is contained in the Land Registry (Fees) Order (Northern Ireland) 1988 (SR 1988 No. 410), a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any proposals to speed up Land Registry transactions in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: A comprehensive efficiency review of the Land Registry functions in Northern Ireland is to be undertaken. It is anticipated that the review will be under way by mid-1989.

Housing

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much extra funding has been provided so far to implement the findings of the Policy Studies Institute report on housing in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member of 23 January, at column 396, I am advised that the research to which he refers, commissioned by the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights, is not yet complete.

Social Security Payments

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the measures the Government are using to monitor the effects of the new social security system on those claimants who were targeted by the new legislation and on the Government's assessment of the position of single parents since the benefit changes of April 1988.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 February 1989]: Monitoring of the effects of the new system is based on a range of statistical information and will also have regard in due course to various research findings. It is estimated that the large majority of single parents were better off or no worse off in cash terms as a result of the changes in their weekly benefits. Estimates are not available of the overall impact taking account of the introduction of the social fund.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the number of social fund applications made by single parents, the numbers which are successful, and the amounts given in loans and payments to these applicants.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 February 1989]: Information for the period 11 April 1988 to 31 December 1988 (the latest for which it is available) is as follows:

	(a) Applications received	(b) Number allowed	(c) Amount awarded
Loans	12,682	11,163	£2,443,294·62
Community Care Grants	2,396	1,614	£556,315·99
Funeral and Maternity payments	1,558	1,504	£199,001·83
Total	16,636	14,281	£3,198,612·44

The balance of applications in each category were withdrawn by the applicant, or refused, or are still to be considered.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the numbers of single parents who are having deductions made from their benefits in respect of social fund loans, rent arrears, fuel arrears or overpayments.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 February 1989]: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what support his Department is giving to local authorities which wish to reduce or eliminate their use of CFC's.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him earlier today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, the hon. Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley).

Mental Handicap Nurses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list, for each health authority, the number of mental handicap nurses from each of the old grades who have been assimilated to each of the new grades.

Mr. Grist: This information is not held centrally.

DEFENCE

Torpedoes

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what United States supplied alternatives to the Spearfish and Stingray torpedoes were considered at the time of the decision to proceed with those programmes; and what were their costs.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United States MK46 and MK48 torpedoes were evaluated as alternatives to Stingray and Spearfish respectively. The estimated total programme cost for the MK46 was £200 million (at September 1979 prices) and for the MK48 it was £475 million (at September 1980 prices).

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the original estimate of the cost of the Spearfish torpedo; what was the value of the joint fixed price contract with Marconi for the completion of development and initial production of Spearfish and Stingray torpedoes; and what has been the expenditure on Spearfish and Stingray torpedoes to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Sainsbury: The original estimated total programme cost of Spearfish was £155 million (at current prices). The fixed price contract for the development and initial production of Spearfish and Stingray was let in 1981 at a value of £496 million.

Total programme expenditure to 31 January 1989 was £594 million on Spearfish and £1,443 million on Stingray, both figures at current prices.

Tigerfish

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the original estimate for the cost of the Tigerfish torpedo; what was the estimate when Marconi became principal contractor; and what was the final cost when Tigerfish came into service.

Mr. Sainsbury: The original estimate of the cost of Tigerfish MOD "O" was calculated in 1959; records of this estimate are not immediately available. The MOD "O" Tigerfish entered service in 1974 when its total programme cost was £450 million (at current prices).

Marconi became principal contractor for the improved MOD 1 Tigerfish torpedo in 1972; the estimated programme cost at that time was £226 million (at current prices).

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when development of the Tigerfish torpedo was begun; when was it originally expected to come into service; when it received fleet weapon acceptance; and when Marconi became principal contractor for the programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Development of Tigerfish began in 1959 with a view to an in-service date of 1967. The MOD "O" torpedo entered service in 1974 and received fleet weapon acceptance in 1979.

Marconi became principal contractor for Tigerfish MOD 1 in 1972.

Foxhunter

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the original estimate of the cost of the Foxhunter radar system; when it was due to come into service in full; when it came into service in full; and what was the final cost on delivery.

Mr. Sainsbury: The original forecast in-service date for the Foxhunter radar was 1982. Radars to an agreed interim standard entered service in 1985. Final deliveries under the programme of work placed under firm price contractual arrangements with Marconi Defence Systems last year will take place in the early 1990s.

It is not normal practice to publish a detailed breakdown of costs for defence equipment. Total estimated costs of the Foxhunter radar programe were given in the 1988 "Statement on Defence Estimates (Volume 2)" as some £800 million; on the same basis, the original estimate for Foxhunter would be some £600 million.

Contacts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all his Department's contracts with (a) Zeus and (b) Securipol Ltd. since 1979; and if he will give the purpose of each contract.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no record of any headquarters contracts having been placed with Zeus Security Consultants or Securipol Ltd. since 1979.

Pension Scheme

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he anticipates the Defence Council instruction enabling additional voluntary contributions to the Armed Forces pension scheme will be issued.

Mr. Neubert: A DCI was published on 3 February 1989 explaining the opportunities open to members of the armed forces to make additional voluntary contributions to enhance the benefits payable under the armed forces pension scheme.

Royal Air Force

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the total number of airmen/aircrew who have applied in each of the past 10 years to leave the Royal Air Force before completion of their period of contract, indicating for each year the number of such applications which were based on exceptional circumstances; and how many of these have been successful.

Mr. Neubert: Information about premature exits of Royal Air Force airmen and aircrew over the past 10 financial years is summarised in the following table:

Notes:

1. Officers:
   (a) PVR—Premature voluntary release on giving certain preiods of notice.
   (b) OEP—Optional exit points related to decisions at specified career points.
   (c) Applications do not necessarily lead to exits in the same financial year (FY).
   (d) Applications and exits related to exceptional circumstances are not available.
2. Airmen:
   (a) Records of airmen aircrew PVR applications are not available prior to April 1983.
   (b) PVR—Premature voluntary release by purchase, or to pension or by notice general right after nine years.

(c) Applications do not necessarily lead to exits in the same financial year and more than one application may be submitted.
(d) Other exits include exits on compassionate grounds, on nine year notice engagements after three years at 18 months notice and other administrative categories under which airmen may apply to leave the service. Numbers of other applications are not available.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Royal Air Force airmen served in each of the following categories: (a) armament engineering, (b) mechanical engineering, (c) electrical engineering and (d) electronic engineering, in each year since 1979;

(2) how many Royal Air Force airmen became qualified to serve in the following branches (a) armament engineering, (b) mechanical engineering, (c) electrical engineering and (d) electronic engineering, in each year since 1979;

(3) how many Royal Air Force airmen left the Royal Air Force in each of the following categories: (a) armament engineering, (b) mechanical engineering, (c) electrical engineering and (d) electronic engineering; and how many of these failed to complete their engagement, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: The numbers of ground airmen (including airwomen) in each category in each of the specified groupings of trades, in each year since 1980, are given in tables 1 to 3. The numbers for 1979 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many trained fast-jet pilots took premature voluntary release in each financial year between 1969-70 and 1978-79.

Mr. Neubert: Information about exits by trained pilots on premature voluntary release was not maintained prior to 1 April 1975; since that date overall numbers of pilot exits on PVR were recorded and role-related statistics were introduced on 1 April 1979. For the period 1 April 1975 to 1 April 1979 the overall numbers of PVR exits by trained pilots were as follows:

	Number
1975-76	77
1976-77	86
1977-78	92

Pay Scales

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate has been made of savings likely to accrue as a result of the downbanding recommendations made by the joint services job evaluation team in relation to pay-scales for airmen/aircrew and air electronics operators.

Mr. Neubert: There will be no immediate savings arising from the downbanding of air electronic operators. This is because the individuals concerned will retain their existing rate of basic pay on a mark-time basis until such a time as pay review awards lift the lower pay band scale above this rate. In the longer term the reduction in the annual paybill resulting from the change is estimated to be £438,000.

Ethnic Minority Personnel

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) blacks, (b) Asians, (c) men and (d) women are currently serving in (i) the Army, (ii) the Royal Navy and (iii) the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Neubert: The number of men and women serving in the United Kingdom regular forces as at 31 December 1988 was as follows:

	Males	Females
Royal Navy and Royal Marines	61,286	[1]3,365
Army	149,651	6,383
Royal Air Force	85,785	6,274

[1] Royal Navy only.

It is our policy not to keep records of the ethnic origins of serving members of the armed forces.

Air Combat Training

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial provision he has made for the years 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95, respectively for the use of the planned British Aerospace air combat manoeuvring installation in the North sea;

(2) what understandings he has entered into with British Aerospace as regards future use of their air combat manoeuvring installation in the North sea.

Mr. Neubert: British Aerospace's proposal to construct an instrumental air combat facility in the North sea remains under consideration by the Government. MOD has no current plans to utilise such a facility, if constructed, and has therefore made no financial provision for its use.

Air Publications and Forms Store

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proposals he has to replace the roof of the building now occupied by the air publications and forms store at Woolwich arsenal; and at what estimated cost;

(2) when the building now occupied by the air publications and forms store at Woolwich arsenal is expected to be vacated; and what new use will be found for it;

(3) what specialist refitting has been undertaken to the building now occupied by the air publications and forms store to provide for its present use; and at what cost;

(4) how many existing employees of the air publications and forms store at Woolwich arsenal will be offered the opportunity to transfer to the proposed new location in North Wales; and how many new staff will be recruited locally;

(5) what arrangements will be made to train new employees recruited for the air publications new location in north Wales;

(6) what is the estimated cost of transferring the air publications and forms store from Woolwich arsenal to north Wales.

Mr. Neubert: Consultations have recently taken place with trades unions on a proposal to transfer all service forms and publications stores from their existing locations to create a centralised organisation at the former Royal naval store depot at Llangennech, Dyfed. Under that proposal, vacation of the building now occupied by the air publications and forms stores at Woolwich arsenal would be expected in 1991. Any further use of the building would be dependent on a future decision on the location of the directorate general of defence quality assurance.

As the hon. Member is aware, the original intention was to replace the roof of the air publications and forms store, which was to be a major undertaking estimated to cost in excess of £1·5 million. In the light of the Llangennech proposals, however, the work and expenditure involved could not be justified, although any essential repairs required in the intervening period would be carried out.

To provide for its present use, in 1968 the building now occupied by the air publications and forms store was installed with a Dexion three-tier racking system, including associated conveyor belts, an internal classified store, fitted with mobile racking, a conveyor system in the distribution area, and a fire detector and sprinkler system. In 1969 fans were incorporated into the existing heating system to ensure that adequate storage conditions could be maintained. Due to the length of time since the various works were undertaken, cost figures are not available.

Under the Llangennech proposal, careful consideration would be given to any individual request for transfer there from civil servants currently employed in the four existing stores. Nevertheless, it is expected that most of the 250 staff that would be required for the Llangennech operation would be recruited locally. A comprehensive training programme would be designed to meet the needs of all employees of the new organisation. The cost of centralisation at Llangennech is estimated to be about £5·7 million. It is not possible to say how much of this is attributable to the air publications and forms store alone.

Territorial Army (Ammunition Theft)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Territorial Army proposes to take following the conviction of Warrant Officer Nigel John Hicks for stealing ammunition.

Mr. Neubert: It must first be said that Mr. Hicks was not, in fact, convicted of theft of ammunition. Within the Territorial Army, strict regulations apply to the issue, use and storage of weapons and ammunition. The circumstances relating to Mr. Hicks' case are now being reviewed to see if any further action is required.

Race Relations

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South, Official Report, 6 February, column 513, how many of the complaints cases submitted to the service boards, records of which are kept centrally, involved allegations of racial discrimination or abuse.

Mr. Neubert: None.

War Stocks

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the current level of Royal Air Force war stocks meets all of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation requirements;

(2) whether the current level of Royal Navy war stocks meets all of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation requirements;

(3) whether the current level of Army war stocks meets all of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation requirements.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 22 December 1988, at column 371.

Nuclear-Powered Vessels

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a study of possible radioactive contamination at Holy Loch, Faslane and Rosyth caused by nuclear-powered defence vessels.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a study of possible radioactive contamination at Holy Loch, Faslane and Rosyth caused by nuclear-powered defence vessels.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a study of possible radioactive contamination at Holy Loch, Faslane and Rosyth caused by nuclear-powered defence vessels.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a study of possible radioactive contamination at Holy Loch, Faslane and Rosyth caused by nuclear-powered defence vessels.

Mr. Younger [pursuant to his reply, 7 February 1989, c. 655]: I wish to point out that I should have referred to a level of radiation exposure of "consistently less than 1 per cent." rather than of "consistently less than 0·1 per cent".

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

13. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the British tourist board to discuss the promotion of British tourism abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend and I regularly meet the chairman of the British Tourist Authority to discuss all aspects of the authority's work in promoting tourism to Britain. My right hon. Friend last met the chairman on 8 February. We have no plans as yet for a future meeting.

19. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he hopes to announce his proposals following the current review of tourism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The tourism review report is currently under consideration and an announcement will be made in due course.

35. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has for participation in the European Tourism Year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I recently chaired a meeting of the national tourist board chairmen and representatives from the territorial departments to begin to plan the United Kingdom's participation in European Tourism Year in 1990. At that meeting it was agreed that the British Tourist Authority would take the lead in co-ordinating the United Kingdom's campaign. To promote the interest and active involvement of the United Kingdom tourism industry, I propose to chair a United Kingdom standing conference of senior figures in the industry. This conference will take place on 25 May.

42. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the effect of the single market in 1992 upon tourism.

Mr. Lee: Although tourism within the European Community is a relatively open sector, I believe that the completion of the single market presents a major opportunity for the industry's further development. This should be apparent in increased flexibility of travel, particularly air and coach travel. The Channel tunnel, due for completion in 1993, should complement and augment this development.

69. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people employed in the United Kingdom in tourism and tourism-related industries.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated that in September 1988 there were 1·4 million employees in employment in tourism-related industries in Great Britain. There are no directly comparable estimates for the number of self-employed, but it is estimated from the labour force survey that there were 0·2 million self-employed workers in the hotel and catering industry in the spring of 1987.

77. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the effect of the Channel tunnel upon tourism in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: The completion of the Channel tunnel in 1993 will provide a major opportunity for the tourism industry in Great Britain. Estimates suggest that some 15 million people will use the tunnel in its first year of operation.

It is important that the United Kingdom tourism industry begins to plan now to ensure that the full potential offered by the tunnel is realised.

92. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the tourism review.

Mr. Lee: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) on 31 January 1989, at column 75.

108. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many tourist visits were made to the United Kingdom by citizens of the European Economic Community in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated that 3,530,000 visits were made to the United Kingdom by residents of the European Economic Community in the first six months of 1988 (the latest period for which figures are available). Of these, 2,430,000 were leisure visits (the remainder were business), representing 69 per cent. of all visits from EEC countries and 50 per cent. of all leisure visits in this period.

118. Mr. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the English tourist board to discuss the promotion of tourism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State frequently meets the chairman of the English tourist board to discuss a range of subjects, including the promotion of tourism in England.

Labour Statistics

14. Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the unadjusted and adjusted number and percentage of male, female and total employees in employment in part-time work in September 1988 in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Nicholls: The only available information on part-time employees is for females. In September 1988 there were 401,000 female part-time employees in employment in Yorkshire and Humberside. This represents 48 per cent. of female employees and 22 per cent. of all employees in the region. Employment estimates for regions are not seasonally adjusted.

18. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently employed in the United Kingdom; what are the comparable figures for other European Economic Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The current level of the work force in employment in the United Kingdom is, at nearly 26 million, at its highest ever level. Since 1983 it has grown by well over 2 million. Between 1983 and 1987 the increase in employment in the United Kingdom at nearly 1·7 million was greater than that for any other European Community member and was approximately equal to that in the rest of the Community combined.

21. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently employed in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Between March 1983 and September 1988 the work force in employment in the United Kingdom increased by 2,297,000 to 25,858,000, the highest level on record. This rising trend has now continued for more than five years.

25. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the figures for the work force in employment to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In September 1988 the work force in employment in Great Britain was 25,291,000, the highest level on record. This represents an increase of 2,294,000 since March 1983. This rising trend has now continued for more than five years.

27. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the levels of employment in the United Kingdom and other countries in the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The current level of the work force in employment in the United Kingdom is, at nearly 26 million, at its highest level.

Since 1983 it has grown by well over 2 million. Between 1983 and 1987 the increase in employment in the United Kingdom at nearly 1·7 million was greater than that for any other European Community member and was approximately equal to that in the rest of the Community combined.

31. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people aged 18 to 25 years were unemployed in (a) December 1985 and (b) December 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment figures by age are compiled on a quarterly basis. In October 1988, the latest available quarter, there were 606,348 unemployed claimants aged 18 to 25 years in the United Kingdom, compared with 1,034,023 in October 1985. A fall of 427,675 or 41·4 per cent. The comparison is slightly affected by the change in the compilation of the count in March 1986 to reduce over-recording.

52. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the unadjusted and adjusted number and percentages of male, female and total employees in employment in part-time work in September 1988 in Scotland.

56. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the unadjusted and adjusted number and percentage of male, female and total employees in part-time work in September 1988 in the north.

84. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the unadjusted and adjusted number and percentage of male, female and total employees in employment in part-time work in September 1988 in the east midlands.

103. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the unadjusted and adjusted number and percentage of male, female and total employees in employment in part-time work in September 1988 in Greater London.

107. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the unadjusted and adjusted number and percentage of male, female and total employees in employment in part-time work in September 1988 in the west midlands.

Mr. Lee: My Department does not seasonally adjust employment estimates for regions. Regional estimates of part-time male employees are not available for September 1988. The available information is as follows:

September 1988	Part-time female employees in employment	Part-time female employees in employment as a percentage of all female employees in employment Per cent.	Part-time female employees in employment as a percentage of all employees in employment Per cent.
Scotland	389,000	44	21
North	241,000	48	22
East Midlands	314,000	45	20
Greater London	505,000	32	14
West Midlands	412,000	44	20

76. Sir Marcus Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the rate of change in unemployment levels in the last 12 months in Yorkshire and Humberside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in Yorkshire and Humberside was 203,000 compared with 248,100 in December 1987, a fall of 45,100 or 18·2 per cent.

81. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: Between March 1983 and September 1988 the work force in employment in the United Kingdom increased by 2,297,000 to 25,858,000, the highest level on record. This rising trend has now continued for more than five years. The figures have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

83. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest number of employed and self-employed people at the latest available date.

Mr. Lee: In September 1988 there were 25,291,000 people in the work force in employment in Great Britain, of which 2,956,000 were self-employed. The work force in employment comprises employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

86. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in unemployment and the number of jobs created in east midlands region in the 12 months to September 1988.

Mr. Lee: In the 12 months to September 1988 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the east midlands fell by 32,400 to 137,100 from 169,500 in September 1987. Over the same period the size of the civilian work force in employment in east midlands, unadjusted, rose from 1,761,000 to 1,791,000, a net increase of 30,000. The civilian work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

99. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the rate of change in unemployment levels in the last 12 months in East Anglia.

110. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the rate of change in unemployment levels in the last 12 months in East Anglia.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in East Anglia was 41,200 compared with 60,000 in December 1987, a fall of 18,800 or 31·3 per cent.

101. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time and part-time jobs were created in the 12 months to September 1988 in Yorkshire and Humberside region.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. In the year to September 1988 the civilian work force in employment increased by 31,000 in the Yorkshire and Humberside region. This includes net increases of 12,000 in female full-time employees in employment, 7,000 in female part-time employees in employment and 3,000 in participants in work-related Government training programmes (who are counted as being in part-time employment). Comparable estimates are not available for male employees in employment or the self-employed.

102. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage fall in unemployment in the last 12 months in the south-west.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the south-west was 113,100 compared with 153,900 in December 1987, a fall of 40,800 or 26·5 per cent.

111. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the fall in unemployment amongst the long-term unemployed since June 1983.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment figures by duration are compiled on a quarterly basis. In October 1988, the latest available quarter, there were 885,504 claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for more than a year, 15·7 per cent. lower than the level of 1,050,487 in July 1983. The comparison is slightly affected by the change in the compilation of the count in March 1986 to reduce over-recording and the change in the coverage from September 1988 due to the new benefit regulations for those young people aged under 18.

116. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of unemployment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988 unemployment, seasonally adjusted, was 2,039,100, the lowest level for nearly eight years. Unemployment has now fallen for 29 consecutive months, by 1,094,000 altogether since July 1986, the largest fall on record.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by what proportion unemployment has fallen in Warrington since June 1987.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988 the level of unemployment in the Warrington local authority area was 5,427 compared with 8,914 in June 1987. These figures represent a fall of 39·1 per cent. The comparison is slightly affected by the change in benefit regulations for under 18-year-olds from September 1988 and also by seasonal influences.

Benefits (Fraud)

15. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his recent crackdown on fraudulent benefit claims.

Mr. Fowler: My Department's fraud investigations during 1988 led to savings of around £65 million and to 90,000 people withdrawing their claims to benefit. A serious problem of benefit fraud persists and we are maintaining the drive against this.

Single Union Agreements

16. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has received about single union agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: None. The Government believe that single union, no strike agreements can have an increasingly valuable part to play in improving future industrial relations. It is of course for employers individually to decide on what arrangements best suit their own circumstances.

61. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the general secretary of the Amalgamated Union of Engineering Workers to discuss the establishment of a single union agreement at the proposed Toyota factory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have no such plans. It is for employers to decide which unions, if any, they wish to recognise for collective bargaining purposes.

YTS

17. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many summer 1988 school leavers in the Bristol travel-to-work area have not yet been offered a YTS place if they have requested one.

Mr. Cope: None. The Training Agency has made more than sufficient YTS places available for all those who apply for one.

53. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to increase the non-work content in YTS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) earlier today.

60. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are currently training on the two-year YTS; and if he will make a statement.

87. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are currently on YTS training schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: At the end of December 1988 there were 419,900 young people in training on YTS. Of these, 396,800 were on a two-year training programme.

As the Government made clear in the recent White Paper "Employment for the 1990s", YTS is a highly successful programme. The task now is to increase still further the contribution which YTS can make to meeting the needs of the changing labour market.

67. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current number of YTS places in Barrow-in-Furness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: At 3 February 1989 there were 1,453 YTS places in the Barrow-in-Furness local authority district. There are sufficient YTS places available to meet both current and anticipated demand.

71. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young persons are on YTS in the Eccles area; and how many of them have their excess fares paid.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the precise form requested. At 31 December 1988 there were 1,844 young people on YTS in the Salford local authority district. Information on how many were in receipt of excess fares could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Job Creation

20. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time and part-time jobs were created in the 12 months to September 1988 in the east midlands region.

Mr. Nicholls: In the year to September 1988 the civilian work force in employment increased by 30,000 in the east midlands region. The only available information about full and part-time employment in the regions is for female employees in employment. This shows increases of 4,000 in female full-time employees and 16,000 in female part-time employees.

22. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time and part-time jobs were created in the 12 months to September 1988 in the south-west region.

Mr. Nicholls: In the year to September 1988 the civilian work force in employment increased by 31,000 in the south-west region. The only available information about full and part-time employment in the regions is for female employees in employment. This shows increases of 13,000 in female full-time employees and 9,000 in female part-time employees.

32. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in unemployment and the number of jobs created in the Yorkshire and Humberside region in the 12 months to September 1988.

112. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in unemployment and the number of jobs created in Yorkshire and Humberside in the 12 months to September 1988.

Mr. Lee: In the 12 months to September 1988 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in Yorkshire and Humberside fell by 43,200 to 218,100 from 261,300 in September 1987. Over the same period the size of the civilian work force in employment in Yorkshire and Humberside, unadjusted, rose from 2,092,000 to 2,123,000, a net increase of 31,000. The civilian work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

36. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in unemployment and the number of jobs created in the Greater London region in the 12 months to September 1988.

Mr. Lee: In the 12 months to September 1988 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in Greater London fell by 70,400 to 269,400 from 339,800 in September 1987. Over the same period the size of the civilian work force in employment in Greater London, unadjusted, rose from 3,925,000 to 3,950,000, a net increase of 25,000. The civilian work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

37. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in unemployment, and the number of jobs created, in the north-west region in the 12 months to September 1988.

72. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in unemployment and the number of jobs created in the north-west region in the 12 months to September 1988.

75. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in unemployment and the number of jobs created in the north-west region in the 12 months to September 1988.

Mr. Lee: In the 12 months to September 1988 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the north-west fell by 61,200 to 310,900 from 372,000 in September 1987. Over the same period the size of the civilian work force in employment in the north-west, unadjusted, rose from 2,606,000 to 2,611,000, a net increase of 5,000. The civilian work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

43. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the expected growth in total employment in the north of England over the next two years; and which sectors are expected to show the greatest increase.

Mr. Lee: My Department does not produce forecasts of employment growth, either in total, by region or by sector. However, last year's White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" (Cm. 540) described recent employment trends at national level.

47. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time and part-time jobs were created in the 12 months to September 1988 in Great Britain.

80. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time and part-time jobs were created in the 12 months to September 1988 in Great Britain.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. In the year to September 1988 the work force in employment in Great Britain increased by 399,000, of which 220,000 were in full-time employment and 179,000 were in part-time employment. The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self employed, Her Majesty's forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes. In classifying the work force in employment between full and part time, all programme participants are counted as in part-time employment.

48. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time and part-time jobs were created in the 12 months to September 1988 in the east midlands region.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. In the year to September 1988 the civilian work force in employment increased by 30,000 in the east midlands region. This includes net increases of 4,000 in female full-time employees in employment and 16,000 in female part-time employees in employment, offset by a net decrease of 1,000 in participants in work-related Government training programmes (who are counted as in part-time employment). Comparable estimates are not available for male employees in employment or the self-employed.

59. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time and part-time jobs were created in the 12 months to September 1988 in Wales.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. In the year to September 1988 the civilian work force in employment increased by 10,000 in Wales. This includes a net increase of 6,000 in female part-time employees in employment, offset by a net decrease of 1,000 in female full-time employees in employment, and a net increase of 1,000 in participants in work-related Government training programmes (who are counted as in part-time employment). Comparable estimates are not available for male employees in employment or the self-employed.

65. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage fall in unemployment in the United Kingdom during the past 12 months.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom was 2,039,100 compared with 2,568,600, in December 1987, a fall of 529,500 or 20·6 per cent.

113. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in unemployment and the number of jobs created in Great Britain in the 12 months to September 1988.

Mr. Lee: In the 12 months to September 1988 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in Great Britain fell by 516,800 to 2,080,100 from 2,596,900 in September 1987. Over the same period the size of the work force in employment in Great Britain rose from 24,892,000 to 25,291,000, a net increase of 399,000. The figures have been adjusted for the effect of seasonal variations. The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

117. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in unemployment and the number of jobs created in the south-east region in the 12 months to September 1988.

Mr. Lee: In the 12 months to September 1988 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the south-east fell by 165,500 to 461,900 from 627,400 in September 1987. Over the same period the size of the civilian work force in employment in the south-east, unadjusted, rose from 8,600,000 to 8,768,000, a net increase of 168,000. The civilian work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take special measures to tackle localised pockets of high unemployment.

Mr. Lee: My Department's training, enterprise and employment programmes are already available to help unemployed people in all areas.

106. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on employment prospects for Lincolnshire in 1989.

Mr. Lee: In the year to December 1988 unemployment in Lincolnshire fell by 6,303; 26 per cent. of the December 1987 figure. I see no reason why the position should not improve further in 1989.

Job Creation

50. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been created in the London docklands; and what is the employment potential for the other 10 urban development corporations.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply as English urban development corporations are the responsibility of my Department. Since the London Docklands development corporation was established in 1981 more than 20,000 jobs have been created or attracted to the area, and the increase in jobs is accelerating. There is considerable potential for all UDCs to stimulate employment. This is, of course, only one of the benefits that they will bring to their areas.

Closed Shop

23. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he intends to bring forward Government proposals to ban pre-entry closed shops.

Mr. Fowler: We announced in our White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" that we would examine the operation of the pre-entry closed shop over the coming months and review the steps employers take to use the freedom the law has given them to get rid of closed shop arrangements. This examination and review is currently taking place.

Channel Tunnel

24. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently working in jobs related to the Channel tunnel; what effect this will have on the economy of northern England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to estimate the total number of people currently working in jobs relating to the Channel tunnel, but I am aware that around 5,000 people are currently employed at the tunnel site in Kent. In addition, contracts worth £500 million have been awarded to date by the tunnel contractors: 90 per cent. of this work has gone to firms in the United Kingdom, 20 per cent. to firms in northern England. The Channel tunnel should have a beneficial effect on the economy of the whole of the United Kingdom.

Small Businesses

26. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the British Venture Capital Association to discuss the financing of small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss) on 17 January, at column 177.

57. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the general secretary of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the development of small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Franks) on 17 January, at column 177.

Labour Mobility

28. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy on encouraging the movement of employees in (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector from full-time to part-time working; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: We are in favour of encouraging flexibility in the labour market such as that provided by working part-time. In general, employers and employees should be free to work out the arrangements which best suit their individual circumstances. My Department's jobshare scheme aims to help employers in the public and private sector to adopt more flexible working patterns and open up job opportunities directly or indirectly for the unemployed.

Training

29. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide figures on training in 1979 and the estimate for 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Some 876,000 people entered training in 1987-88 under schemes funded by the Employment Department Training Agency (formerly the Manpower Services Commission) compared with 91,000 in 1979-80. This nearly tenfold increase underlines the importance attached by the Government to developing a skilled and flexible work force capable of meeting the challenges of the 1990s and beyond. The principal responsibility for training must lie with employers themselves, but the Government play an important role through the major training programmes they support, in particular the youth training scheme and employment training.

The White Paper "Employment for the 1990s", which I issued last December, sets out radical proposals for building on the achievements of the last few years. These include the creation of local employer-led training and enterprise councils over the next three to four years and the establishment of a new programme, "Business Growth Training" to help employers, particularly small employers, improve the effectiveness of their training activity.

34. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training continues to make excellent progress and at 27 January 1989 there were 131,000 people on the programme. There is considerable interest in employment training among longer-term unemployed people who clearly recognise the value of worthwhile training to help them get a job.

62. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently on Training Commission training schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available for all Training Agency schemes in the form requested. However, in December 1988, 527,900 people were in training on employment training and YTS. This huge investment reflects the central importance which the Government attach to creating a skilled and flexible work force which will contribute to Britain's economic prosperity in the 1990s and beyond.

YTS has been a great success and the new employment training, the most ambitious training programme for unemployed adults anywhere, has made an excellent start.

66. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of people on YTS and employment training, at the latest available date, for the north.

Mr. Nicholls: At 31 December 1988 there were 32,300 youngsters on YTS, and at 27 January 1989 there were 14,400 adults on employment training in the Training Agency's northern region.

68. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of people on YTS and employment training, at the latest available date, for the north-west.

Mr. Cope: At 31 December 1988 there were 65,700 youngsters on YTS, and at 27 January 1989 there were 18,500 adults on employment training in the Training Agency's north-west region.

79. Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently engaged in the employment training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of people on employment training at 27 January was 130,900. This is a tremendous achievement after less than five months of the programme's operation and is a reflection of the considerable interest shown by unemployed people in getting high quality training to help them get back into a job.

82. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide figures for spending on training in 1979 and 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Records are kept on the basis of the standard financial year for accounting for Government expenditure. This year runs from 1 April to 31 March.

The figures represent expenditure by the Department of Employment Training Agency (ex MSC, ex Training Commission) on training programmes in the relevant financial years.

1978-79	374
1979-80	451
1987-88	1,613

These figures include all related administrative costs, net of receipts.

Employer School Compacts

30. Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many areas have applied for development funding for employer school compacts to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Forty six areas applied for funding to establish a compact. Partnerships of employers and education authorities in 30 of those areas were granted development funding and are currently preparing applications for four years operational funding.

I have been very pleased by the positive responses from both employers and the education service and I look forward to the establishment of the first compacts later in the spring.

National Training Task Force

33. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made in establishing the national training task force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The membership of the national training task force was announced on 4 January 1989 and it held its first meeting on 31 January. The task force will be assisting in the establishment of a national network of training and enterprise councils and will have a leading role in promoting to employers the importance of investing in the skills of their workers.

Disabled People

38. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had regarding the level of disabled unemployment recorded in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys survey.

Mr. Lee: The recently published information in the report by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, on the financial circumstances of disabled adults living in private households does not provide sufficiently precise information about the unemployment of economically active people who have handicaps which are relevant to employment. My Department has recently commissioned a survey to provide such information. I expect the results to be available in the second half of this year.

Productivity

39. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the effect of higher productivity on the current level of pay settlements.

Mr. Nicholls: Pay, including its relationship with productivity, is a matter for the judgment of individual employers in the light of their particular circumstances, but moderation in pay settlements is essential for competitiveness and jobs. Our international competitors enjoy lower growth in unit labour costs because they have considerably lower growth in earnings.

89. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the increase or decrease in productivity for the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: Productivity in manufacturing, as measured by output per person employed, was 7·7 per cent. greater in the three months ending November 1988 than in coresponding period of 1987.

Productivity for the economy as a whole was 2·6 per cent. higher in the third quarter of 1988 than in the third quarter of 1987.

Construction Industry Training Board

40. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the future of the Construction Industry Training Board.

Mr. Nicholls: The White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" set out the Government's view that independent and voluntary arrangements are more likely to be effective than those imposed by statute. We are now consulting the construction industry training board and organisations representing employers in the construction industry about future arrangements for the industry.

Luncheon Club Meals

41. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many luncheon club meals will be lost to retirement pensioners in east Cleveland as a result of changes in the training programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Training Agency officials are currently discussing the east Cleveland luncheon club project with the local training manager. They will do all they can to help the service to continue, so long as the project can provide the training which unemployed people of east Cleveland need to help them get a job. I hope that the luncheon club will be able to continue under employment training and that no meals will be lost to pensioners in east Cleveland.

Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee

44. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which of the recommendations of the 1986 retail price index advisory committee he has currently under review.

Mr. Lee: As the hon. Member was told in a written answer on 17 January, the advisory committee is shortly to review progress on implementing the longer-term recommendations made in its 1986 report. The recommendations in question concern the treatment of holiday expenditure, charges for financial services, new car prices and quality changes, improvements to price collection procedures and the family expenditure survey, and the release of a technical manual on the index methodology. The Government will be ready to consider the committee's recommendations on these points in due course.

Elderly People

45. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his proposals to encourage people over the age of 60 years to remain in the labour force.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government believe that employers should see older workers as a valuable resource. "Agism" is unfair and, because of demographic trends, it is irresponsible to ignore the talents which older workers can contribute to the economy. Although recruitment decisions must be left to employers, in making them they should not discriminate unfairly on age grounds. They should also be considering how best to use workers who want to continue beyond 60. We are putting these messages across to employers through various media, thus creating opportunities for workers over 60 to remain in or return to employment if they so wish.

Wages Councils

46. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on his proposal to abolish the wages councils; and if he will make a statement.

51. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to publish the results of the consultation exercise on the Government's proposals to abolish wages councils; and if he will make a statement.

109. Mr. John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will summarise the responses which he has received to the recent consultative document on wages councils.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on the proposal to abolish the wages councils contained in the recent consultation document. He will publish a summary of the responses when these have been analysed and considered.

Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978

49. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will seek to amend section 53 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 so that in all circumstances a dismissed employee has the right to be provided with a written statement, giving the reasons for his/her dismissal.

Mr. Nicholls: No. To do so would add to the burdens on employers. A written statement of reasons for dismissal is intended to enable a worker to assess whether he/she has grounds for complaining of unfair dismissal to an industrial tribunal. Originally the qualifying period for both rights was the same. The current Employment Bill seeks to restore that position by increasing the qualifying period for a written statement to two years.

Self-employed People

54. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have become self-employed during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The number of self-employed people in the United Kingdom is estimated to have risen by 124,000 from September 1987 to September 1988, the latest period for which figures are available. It is estimated that over 3 million people are now self-employed and the number is still rising. The numbers of self-employed people have risen by over 60 per cent. since 1979 and they now represent more than one in nine of the employed work force.

Employment Service

55. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the Employment Service.

Mr. Lee: In the nine months since April, the Employment Service placed over 1·4 million people into jobs, including over 178,000 who had been long-term unemployed. New procedures such as more effective interviews with those making a new claim for benefit will continue to reinforce this trend. Since the establishment of the Employment Service in October 1987 unemployment has fallen by 626,500 overall, with particularly steep falls in long-term unemployment.

Industrial Relations

58. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress to discuss the current state of industrial relations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend meets the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Hotels (Investment)

63. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's estimate of the amount of investment in hotels and hotel building in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board's "Tourism Investment Reports" show that the total amount spent on hotel building, extension and refurbishment projects, with a value of £0·5 million or more, that were completed in 1988 was £319 million. Investment in such projects which were still under construction on 31 December 1988 was £730 million.

Health and Safety

64. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he expects the number of accidents at work to decrease in 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The statistical evidence is difficult to interpret, because of changes over time in industry structure and in reporting regulations, exacerbated by under-reporting. Forecasts of future rates would not be meaningful.

I welcome indications in the Health and Safety Commission's annual report for 1987-88 that, subject to these caveats, the rate of reported major injuries to employees in manufacturing may have levelled off. But the rate remains too high, while higher rates for workers in some other sectors, notably construction and quarrying, give particular cause for concern.

Responsibility for ensuring health and safety at work rests primarily with employers. I welcome the indications in the commission's report of increasing safety-related activity in industry. I believe this trend will continue, as employers become more aware of the economic as well as the human costs of accidents.

The Government support the work of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive to stimulate and guide industry towards higher standards. Ministers' decisions in the 1988 public expenditure survey will increase real provision for the commission in each of the next three years, enabling the executive to employ more inspectors and carry out more inspections.

88. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the relative current standards of (a) United Kingdom and (b) other European Community countries legislation on safety at work and health at work; and how much amending legislation will be necessary in the United Kingdom between now and 1992.

Mr. Nicholls: Direct comparisons are not possible because of differences in legal systems, enforcement arrangements and statistical systems. I am arranging for a copy of evidence given by the Health and Safety Commission to the Employment Committee (January 1987) on these issues to be sent to my hon. Friend.

The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 was a forward-looking enabling measure designed to maintain or improve existing health and safety standards while providing flexibility to adapt to changing technology. The Act and its associated regulations, codes and guidance provide for a high standard of protection and I believe offers a useful model for the EC in developing harmonised minimum standards.

We seek in negotiations to make our standards the basis of EC ones wherever practicable, thus limiting amendments needed to our own law. Some amendments will, however, be required, not least in areas—such as noise, or major chemical hazards—where a need for improved provisions is generally perceived and can best develop internationally.

A major United Kingdom aim, as the scope of EC health and safety law expands, will be to ensure that our high standards of enforcement are matched throughout the EC. We shall pursue this as appropriate in negotiations, and in studies and discussions with the Community institutions and other member states.

Strikes (Lost Working Days)

70. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many working days were lost through strikes in (a) December 1978 and (b) December 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The number of working days lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes in December 1978 was 542,000. The most recently available figure relates to November 1988, for which it is provisionally estimated that 173,000 working days were lost; the December 1988 figures will be published on 16 February in the "Labour Market Statistics Press Notice".

Restart Scheme

73. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundant miners have been interviewed in relation to the restart scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available.

93. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many long-term unemployed have been offered help under the restart programme to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Since 1 July 1986, just over 5 million interviews have taken place under the restart programme, of which just under 90 per cent. have resulted in an offer of positive help. It is not possible to state the number of people who have been interviewed, as some will have been interviewed more than once.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

74. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of individuals participating in the enterprise allowance scheme in Scotland and the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Cope: In 1988, 101,816 people joined the enterprise allowance scheme in Great Britain, of which 9,045 were in Scotland. Since the scheme began in 1982 over 414,000 unemployed people have been helped to start their own businesses, of which 36,832 were in Scotland.

Jobcentres

78. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the range of facilities available at jobcentres.

Mr. Lee: Jobcentres offer a wide range of facilities which are mainly designed to support the employment service key responsibilities of helping unemployed people back to work and providing a gateway to the Government's employment, training and enterprise programme.

Jobcentres have two main avenues of help to get people back to work. They provide facilities which are available to everyone for display of vacancies and submissions to jobs. They also undertake specialist measures designed to help longer-term unemployed and disadvantaged people. These include jobclubs, restart courses, the restart counselling programme, a range of services to help the disabled, and particular assistance to inner city residents. Jobcentres are usually the first point of contact for most inquiries about Government employment provisions. The list of employment, training and business help programmes gives some indication of the range of facilities available.

The jobcentre "gateway" role extends beyond the schemes and services provided by the Employment Department group. A key function of staff is to provide information and to direct inquirer to appropriate "external" organisations and agencies, for example citizens advice bureaux, local enterprise agencies and adult literacy centres.

Jobcentres also have display facilities for self-help material, for example leaflets, pamphlets and reference books, giving details of the services available.

M25 (Hotels)

85. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the extent to which there is a shortage of hotel accommodation in the M25 corridor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have no detailed information. However, I understand that the London tourist board and the hotel industry report a considerable demand for additional accommodation along the M25 corridor.

Training and Enterprise Councils

90. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress being made in the establishment of training and enterprise councils.

95. Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the setting up of training and enterprise councils.

114. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received in response to his proposals to create training and enterprise councils in the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Since the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" was published on 5 December over 600 individuals and organisations have been in contact with me or my Department to inquire about training and enterprise councils. I am very pleased about the positive response. I will publish a prospectus in March and I expect to announce the first training and enterprise councils before the end of the year.

Discrimination

91. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the outcome of his policies for taking discrimination out of employment.

Mr. Nicholls: There are encouraging signs that our policies are producing results. More girls and women are gaining the qualifications and experience necessary to fill higher level jobs. Recent trends also suggest that progress is being made against race discrimination. There is obviously still more to do—women and ethnic minorities are still under-represented in more skilled and higher paid jobs. I am, however, confident that the 1990s will provide even greater opportunities for equality in all areas where discrimination may occur. The Government welcome this.

Skilled Workers

96. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the anticipated shortfall in the availability of skilled workers in England and Wales in 1989-90; and what steps are being taken to increase the supply of skilled workers, especially in the manufacturing industry.

Mr. Cope: There is no overall measure of the shortfall in the availability of skilled workers. The steps being taken by the Government to increase the supply of skilled workers in all industries are set out in the training section of the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" published in December.

104. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has received recent representations from the Confederation of British Industry about skill shortages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I have received no recent representations from the Confederation of British Industry about skill shortages. My Department is working closely with employers to ensure that they are fully equipped to meet their skill needs in the 1990s. The training section of the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" published in December sets out the steps being taken to counter skill shortages.

EETPU Training Centre

97. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his visit to the training centre of the EETPU.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend visited the EETPU training centre at Cudham hall on 19 April 1988. We welcome the initiative that EETPU has taken to provide training for its members to meet the demands of rapidly changing technology.

Graduates

98. Mr. James Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the analysis of graduate employment in the latest labour force survey.

Mr. Lee: Relevant results from the spring 1987 labour force survey, the latest available, were analysed in an article, "Graduates and the labour market in the 1980s", published in the January 1989 edition of the Employment Gazette. The Employment Gazette is available in the House of Commons Library.

Business in the Community

100. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about his meeting with Business in the Community representatives.

Mr. Cope: I met Business in the Community representatives to discuss the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" published on 5 December last, and particularly the opportunities arising from it to improve services to small businesses. The local training and enterprise councils announced in the White Paper will become a focal point for local enterprise agencies and others in the network of organisations providing advice and support to small businesses and those wishing to start up on their own.

Enterprise Agencies

105. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many local enterprise agencies are currently operating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: We know of 434 local enterprise agencies operating in the United Kingdom. Of these, 393 are approved under provisions of the 1988 Income and Corporation Taxes Act (previously under provisions of the 1982 Finance Act), which allow business sector sponsors tax relief on their contributions to such bodies.

The local training and enterprise councils announced in the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" will provide a means for ensuring that the provision of small firms counselling and training relevant to local needs is extended and co-ordinated. There will be an important opportunity here for local enterprise agencies, as the councils will be able to sub-contract small firms work to agencies which can demonstrate a high quality of service.

National Vocational Qualifications

115. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many national vocational qualifications have been awarded since the scheme's start; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I regret that this information is not available. The National Council for Vocational Qualifications is developing a computerised system which will require awarding bodies whose qualifications have been accredited as national vocational qualifications (NVQs) to provide details of the number of awards made on a quarterly basis.

The council has accredited 83 qualifications to date.

Small Firms Service

119. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many counselling sessions were provided by the small firms service during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: In 1987-88 the small firms service in England conducted 39,138 counselling sessions.

121. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inquiries were dealt with by the small firms service during the last 12 months.

Mr. Cope: In 1987-88 the small firms service in England handled 266,174 inquiries.

Business Growth Through Training

120. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the business growth through training programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I have received no representations about business growth training, which I announced on 24 January in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) at column 550.

European Community (Unemployment)

122. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next be meeting other European Community Employment Ministers to discuss current levels of unemployment in the Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on Tuesday 17 January at column 175.

Redundant Mineworkers Scheme

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to make an announcement on the redundant mineworkers' payments scheme arising from discussions between officials from his Department and the Department of Energy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

Discussions between officials on the effect of restart on beneficiaries under the redundant mineworkers payments scheme are proceeding urgently. I hope it will be possible to reach conclusions shortly.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Potato Marketing Board

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to make a statement about the future of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce the result of the review of the potato marketing scheme.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South (Mr. MacGregor) is now considering and evaluating the responses to the consultation document issued in September 1988. We are not yet in a position to say when this process will be completed, but a decision will not be unduly delayed.

Salmonella

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many egg production units have been found to contain salmonella enteritidis; and what percentage this is of the national total.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The most recent figures show that there were 35 reports of isolation of salmonella enteritidis in 1988 in table egg laying and breeder laying flocks. There are estimated to be 38,534 holdings with table egg laying flocks and 11,403 with breeder laying flocks in Great Britain, but it is not possible to give as a percentage those flocks in which salmonella enteritidis has been reported as more than one report may relate to the same flock.

Mr Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many table poultry production units have been found to contain salmonella enteritidis; and what percentage this is of the national total.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The most recent figures show that there were 276 reports of isolations of salmonella enteritidis in broiler flocks in 1988. There were estimated to be 1,704 holdings with broiler flocks in Great Britain. In addition, birds will be sold for the table from laying flocks and breeding flocks, which are kept on an estimated 50,000 holdings. It is not possible to give as a percentage those flocks in which salmonella enteritidis has been reported as more than one report may relate to the same flock.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether salmonella enteritidis T4 has been isolated inside an egg destined for eating.

Mr. Ryder: Salmonella enteritidis PT4 has been isolated from the contents of eggs obtained from flocks supplying eggs for human consumption.

Market Research

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his definition of near market research in respect of the agriculture industry.

Mr. Ryder: Near market research is research which offers the prospect of commercial application or exploitation, whether as a product, process or system, within a short enough timescale to justify investment by industry.

Dioxins

Dr. David Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has made an assessment of the length of time traces of dioxins from pesticides remain in soil after application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I understand that where traces of dioxins have reached the soil they may remain for some years, depending on a variety of physical, chemical and biological processes favourable to degradation. My Department, in conjunction with the Department of the Environment and the Department of Health, has been working on a statement on dioxins in the environment which will be published shortly and will include a discussion of this aspect.

For pesticides, where reaction mechanisms and manufacturing process conditions suggest the possible co-production of dioxin contaminants, the approval of the pesticide is dependent on the manufacturer meeting an acceptable specification for his product. If necessary, maximum limits for dioxin contamination can be set. For example, an upper limit of 0·1 mg/kg for the presence of the most toxic dioxin, 2·3, 7·8—Tetra chloro dibenzo-p-dioxin (TCDD) in the herbicide 2, 4, 5-T was imposed in 1970 and this was reduced to 0·01 mg/kg in technical 2, 4, 5-T in May 1980 as soon as suitably sensitive methods of analysis had been developed and validated. This condition of approval has statutory force under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Retirement (Harmonisation)

123. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is considering to harmonise the retirement age of men and women.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 18 January at column 246.

Public Appeals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify each donation which his Department has made in each financial year since 1979-80 in response to public appeals for financial aid.

Mr. Moore: My Department has made no donations in response to public appeals for financial aid since its creation in July 1988. However the Government do make donations to a variety of organisations working in the social security field. For example, I announced to the House last October that the Government will be contributing £5 million to a special trust fund set up to celebrate the tenth anniversary of Motability, the scheme set up to help disabled people to obtain cars on favourable terms and up to £5 million has also been made available in the current financial year to the independent living fund.

Regional Boundaries

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the boundaries of social security regions prior to 1982 reconcile with those after 1982.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During the period August 1981 to April 1983, the number of social security regions was reduced from 12 to seven. This resulted from a departmental efficiency scrutiny published in July 1981.

Of the original 12 regions, only Scotland remained unchanged. The former Wales and south-west regions were combined, and the remainder were merged to form five new regions. Where possible the existing county, local authority, and other accepted boundaries were retained. Full details of the earlier regions and the areas which they served, and a map showing the current regional boundaries have been placed in the Library.

Availability for Work

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what, by standard Great Britain region, including Greater London, is the average length of time between an unemployed claimant receiving an adjudication officer's adverse decision as to availability for work and a subsequent appeal; and what proportion of appeals result in a decision revised in favour of the claimant.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Bridging Allowance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements were made to publicise the availablility of a bridging allowance to young people aged 16 to 18 years who lost entitlement to income support in September 1988; whether any plans were drawn up by his Department to instruct local offices to publicise both bridging allowances and the payment of child benefit to parents; and whether any offices caried out exercises to publicise such allowances.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From May 1988 a supplement was included in the leaflet FB23 "A young persons' guide to Social Security". The supplement was entitled "New Income Support rules for people under eighteen". It included sections on both bridging allowance and extended child benefit. Any young person leaving school could obtain the leaflet FB23 and the supplement free from careers offices, DSS local offices, and from schools and local authority social service departments.

Young people aged 16 or 17 years at 12 September 1988 who were receiving income support up to that date were sent a letter advising them that their income support was being withdrawn. The letter included details of the availablility of a bridging allowance. No mention was made in the letter of the payment of child benefit for an extended period since most of these young people would have left school at Easter 1988, or before, and their parents would not have qualified for payment.

Transitional Payments

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have applied for a transitional payment to date; how many applications have been (a) awarded, (b) refused and (c) are still outstanding; and what has been the average payment made.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Of the 423,657 applications for housing benefit transitional payments received at 8 February, 177,948 cases have been successful and 204,883 have been refused. Of the 40,826 applications outstanding, 25,737 are awaiting return of inquiry forms from the local authority. The average weekly payment is £3·89.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time taken to process an application for a transitional payment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The clearance times for applications for transitional payments will vary considerably from case to case and depend on how long the local authorities take to return the inquiry forms and whether further inquiries have to be made from the unit. For straightforward cases, it takes at present two days from receiving an application in the unit to sending the inquiry form to the local authority, 35 days for the local authority to return the inquiry form to the unit, and a further five days from receiving that inquiry form at the unit to deciding whether a payment can be made. The transitional payments unit has contacted a number of local authorities to encourage them to return the inquiry forms promptly.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many full and part-time employees there are in the transitional payments unit in Glasgow.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are 360 full-time employees at the transitional payments unit. Of these 158 are permanent DSS staff; the remainder are employed on a limited period contract. There are no part-time employees.

Income Support

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing current numbers of people claiming income support by local authority area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available on a local authority basis.

Information on the number of people claiming income support by local office is contained in my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 1 February 1989 at columns 286-92.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the numbers receiving housing benefit in each local authority in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 1 February 1989]: The information requested, for the years 1986-87 to 1988-89 has been placed in the Library. The table for 1988-89 is incomplete as returns have yet to be made by a small number of local authorities and the validity of others is still being checked.

Benefits

Mr. Graham Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants will not receive any overall increase in their benefit income in April 1989 (a) for the United Kingdom as a whole and (b) for his Department's local offices in the county of Nottinghamshire, both numerically and as a percentage of benefit claimants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 January 1989]: I regret that precise information is not available. Of some 20 million social security benefit recipients whose benefit increases in April 1989 around 570,000 income support recipients and an estimated 1,200 in receipt of housing benefit transitional protection payments will not receive any overall increase in their benefit income. Family credit awards are for a fixed period, normally six months, and they are not uprated during this period. The new rates take effect only from the following claim.

Information for Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Public Donations

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will specify each donation made by his Department in response to public appeals for financial aid during each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Forth: My Department keeps no separate record of donations made in response to public appeals. I am not aware of any such payments having been made by my Department since 1979-80.

Inward Investment Projects (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total number of inward investment projects brought to Nottingham, North by location in each year since 1979, giving the number of jobs involved and the volume of expenditure.

Mr. Atkins: My Department is aware of eight inward investment projects having been brought to Nottingham, North since 1979, all at Blenheim industrial estate, Bulwell:

Year	Number of projects	Jobs
1980	1	40
1984	2	95
1986	1	30
1987	2	25
1989	2	245

No information on the volume of expenditure is available.

Metrological Control of Equipment

Mr. Waller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will seek to implement all the recommendations of the Eden committee on the metrological control of equipment for use for trade which the Government accepted in their response dated July 1986.

Mr. Forth: Those recommendations accepted by the Government's response (Cmnd. 9850) to the report of the Eden committee which did not require primary legislation have already been implemented. It remains my Department's intention to introduce legislation to implement the remaining accepted recommendations when parliamentary time is available.

Air Combat Training

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussion his Department has had with British Aerospace regarding its planned British Aerospace air combat manoeuvring installation in the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My officials have discussed British Aerospace proposals for air combat manoeuvring installations and in particular the ensuing communications requirements.

Sanitary Products

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will meet representatives of the sanitary products industry to review urgently its manufacturing procedures;

(2) if there are any proposals to introduce specific legal standards governing the manufacture of sanitary tampons;

(3) what consumer safeguards exist to regulate the composition of sanitary protection products;

(4) what action he will take to publicise the danger to women of toxic shock syndrome when using sanitary tampons and printing such information on sanitary tampon packets.

Mr. Forth: Four years ago the Government set up a voluntary prior approval scheme with the sanitary protection industry, under which manufacturers submit to the government any new tampon or tampons to which there have been significant changes in design or materials, and toxicologists from the Department of Health scrutinise them to decide whether they pose a health hazard. I am satisfied that this scheme is adequate to safeguard the public and I commend it as a good example of a responsible industry voluntarily looking after the interests of its customers.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce a code of conduct or guidelines on the sanitary protection industry with regard to problems related to the disposability of their products.

Mr. Forth: I have no plans at present to introduce such a code of conduct or guidelines.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will make it his policy to encourage manufacturers of disposable soft tissue products to change to unbleached pulp for manufacture;

(2) when he last met representatives of the sanitary protection industry to discuss organochlorines and dioxins remaining in the product following wood pulping and bleaching of raw materials and their health implications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Chlorine bleaching of pulp is the process which gives the whitest finished product. It produces very small amounts of dioxins in the effluent, and minute quantities—parts per billion or less may be retained in the pulp itself. There is no evidence at present that this is a hazard to consumers, but the expert Committee on Toxicity, at the Department of Health, will shortly be advising the Government on the toxicity of dioxins generally, and we shall back any action needed. Organochlorine pesticides do not occur in wood pulp.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether cotton fibre intended for use in tampon manufacture is guaranteed free of herbicides and pesticides applied in the country of origin.

Mr. Forth: I have no reason to think that materials used in the manufacture of tampons are contaminated with herbicides or pesticides, but I am asking the industry to check this aspect of its supplies of imported cotton fibre.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what additives are used to enhance the absorbency of sanitary towels; and what are the health implications thereof.

Mr. Forth: I shall ask the Association of Sanitary Protection Manufacturers what chemicals are used to enhance the absorbency of sanitary towels and about their bioavailability. Toxicologists at the Department of Health will then consider whether they pose any hazard to health.

Paper

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on EEC initiatives for a chlorine-free paper industry.

Mr. Forth: I am not aware of any current EEC initiatives with this intent.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how may paper pulp mills in the United Kingdom use the Kraft process with chlorine bleaching;

(2) how many pulp mills in the United Kingdom use the sulphite process with chlorine bleaching;

(3) how many paper mills in the United Kingdom carry out further chlorine bleaching of imported paper pulp.

Mr. Forth: None.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what tonnage of paper pulp is imported into the United Kingdom annually;

(2) what is the percentage of paper pulp imported into the United Kingdom annually that is chlorine bleached.

Mr. Forth: Imports of paper pulp in 1988 were 2 million tonnes, of which 1·7 million tonnes (84 per cent.) were bleached or semi-bleached. It is not possible to identify what percentage of paper pulp is chlorine bleached.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what figures are available to his Department on the amount of chlorine gas required to bleach one tonne of paper pulp.

Mr. Forth: This process is not undertaken in the United Kingdom.

Research and Development

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table expressing as a percentage of gross domestic product the total (a) Government expenditure on civil research and development (b) other expenditure on civil research and development and (c) (a) plus (b), for each year since 1970.

Mr. Forth: The available information relates to gross expenditure on research and development in the fields of science, technology, social science and humanities, performed in the United Kingdom and the Government financing of it, as a percentage of gross domestic product. The data are available only for years in which a survey of research and development performed in industry was carried out and is as follows:

	Gross expenditure on research and development as a percentage of gross domestic product	Gross expenditure on research and development financed by Government as a percentage of gross domestic product
1972	2·1	1·1
1975	2·2	1·2
1978	2·2	1·1
1981	2·4	1·2
1983	2·3	1·2
1985	2·3	1·0
1986	2·4	1·0

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Davyhulme of 6 February, he will give details of the projects funded from the European regional development fund in (a) the city of Manchester and (b) the Trafford district of Greater Manchester in respect of each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: Commitments made from the European regional development fund were as follows:

European Single Market

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of the total number of registered businesses in the United Kingdom have made use of the Europe—Open for Business 1992 database; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Around 190,000 requests for information have been received since the Europe—Open for Business campaign was launched in March last year. Spearhead, the Department's on-line database of single market measures, has a subscriber base of around 100,000. In total there are just over 1 million registered limited companies in the United Kingdom.

Exports

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about steps being taken to help British companies compete in world markets.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) on 17 January, at columns 106-08.

Disposable Nappies

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will commission a study on the side effects of the manufacture of disposable nappies for infants styled superabsorbent.

Mr. Forth: I have asked the two brand leaders for full details of the chemical composition of the active ingredient in superabsorbent disposable nappies. Our toxicologists at the Department of Health will check whether they are liable to pose a hazard to health.

SCOTLAND

Salmonella

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the cases of salmonella food poisoning connected with eggs which were referred to in Government press advertisements, giving the number of people affected, the area of the outbreak and the most likely source of the eggs in question for each case.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figures referred to in the press advertisements related only to England and Wales. In Scotland five outbreaks of salmonella were reported during 1988. These involved 99 people. Details are as follows:

Area of outbreak	Number of people affected	Most likely source
Fife	5	Free range group of hens kept for domestic egg supply.
Argyll and Clyde	54	Supermarket—source could not be traced.
Borders	24	Free range poultry farm.
Lothian	3	Anecdotal evidence only that raw egg in a sponge mix was involved.
Lothian	13	Supplier receives eggs from a variety of sources so that precise source of eggs cannot determined.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the incidence of salmonella-infected hens in chicken flocks in Scotland; and if he has instituted a survey of such incidence.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of salmonella reported incidents in poultry units in Scotland during the past five years have been as follows:

	Number
1984	9
1985	27
1986	11
1987	12
1988	21

As is customary in these cases all incidents were investigated by the state veterinary service.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the number of salmonellae in eggs produced or marketed in Scotland, and on any survey he has instituted in order to compile such information.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Precise information on the extent to which eggs produced or marketed in Scotland are currently affected by salmonella is not available. The Government's concern is to eliminate the risk of infection at all stages of production and in the preparation of food in the home and in eating places. The steps which we have announced are directed to that end.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the incidence of transmission of salmonella into eggs by trans-shell and transovarian routes, respectively; and if he has instituted any research into this question;

(2) if he will make a statement on the frequency with which hens infected with salmonella lay infected eggs; and if he has instituted any survey on that subject.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As the recent report from the joint MAFF, DH and BEIC working group made clear, further information on both these aspects is required before definitive conclusions can be reached. Consideration is being given to how this might best be pursued.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the action that would be necessary to achieve a long-term solution to the problems associated with salmonellae in poultry and eggs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) on 18 January at columns 214-15. Action on a number of the proposals has already been taken. This includes further controls on protein processing plants; the imposition of restrictions on units where salmonella is suspected; and the compulsory slaughter of laying flocks where salmonella is confirmed. Taken together, these various measures underline our resolve to tackle the problem of salmonella.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the distribution of salmonella infection in chicken flocks in Scotland; and if he has instituted any survey of such infection.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Salmonella was reported on 21 poultry units in Scotland during 1988. In all cases the state veterinary service visited the premises and gave advice on hygiene and control measures.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date he received the information on eggborne salmonellosis in Scotland contained in appendix 2 of the joint report of the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Department of Health and BEIC working group; and if he will list the actions he has taken since then to advise the public about any risks and to promote the reduction of salmonella contamination in laying flocks.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Appendix 2 lists seven incidents of salmonella food poisoning involving eggs. These isolated incidents, spread over 1987 and 1988, represented a small proportion of all salmonella incidents reported to the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit, Ruchill. Advice on the consumption of eggs was given to community medicine specialists and directors of environmental health in August and November, 1988. A press release was issued in August 1988 and advertisements were placed in the national press in mid-December. Regarding laying flocks, proposals designed to reduce salmonella contamination were announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 18 January 1989.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what support his Department is giving to local authorities who wish to reduce or eliminate their use of CFC's.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mrs. Bottomley).

Student Awards

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish tables showing the number of discretionary awards to students attending (a) drama schools, (b) dance schools and (c) art colleges, made by each local education authority in Scotland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested by the hon. Member is not held by the Department and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Theatre in Education

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the local education authorities in Scotland which give financial support to Theatre in Education companies.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on this subject is not held centrally.

Rating Reform

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will arrange to collate centrally information on the processing of the community charge in relation to the proper completion of inquiry and registration forms and on the imposition of penalties for improper completion and for other offences.

Mr. Lang: My officials maintain regular contact with community charge registration officers to discuss general progress in compiling the community charge registers. I do not consider that a formal system for the central collection of data is practicable or necessary.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will give any advice or assistance to employers about payment of the community charge by employees in tied housing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The liability of people living in tied houses to pay community charges is no different from the liability of most other members of the community. I therefore have no plans to issue special guidance. Employers who provide tied housing will need to negotiate with their employees any changes in the conditions of employment under which such houses are provided, which may be required to take account of the effects of the abolition of domestic rates and the introduction of the community charge arrangements.

Nurses

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown by health boards in Scotland of the number of registered general nurses graded D who have more than one year's service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Debtors (Imprisonment)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are in prison in Scotland for non-payment of debts, excluding non-payment of fines.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 February 1989]: This information is not available in the form requested. In December 1988 the average daily population of civil prisoners in Scottish penal establishments was 0·6 persons. In the year 1987, 113 applications for civil imprisonment were disposed of by the courts; 98 of these were for non-payment of aliment.

Civil imprisonment has therefore been a relatively little used procedure for anything other than non-payment of aliment. Since the Debtors (Scotland) Act 1987 came into operation on 30 November 1988 there can be no civil imprisonment for rates, tax penalties or the majority of civil fines and penalties due to the Crown. Civil imprisonment has never been a competent penalty in respect of non-payment of community charges or of civil penalties imposed by community charges registration officers in Scotland.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state in respect of environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland (a) the total extent, in hectares, of each environmentally sensitive area, (b) the extent of agricultural land within each environmentally sensitive area, (c) the number of farmers eligible to enter into management agreements in each environmentally sensitive area, (d) the number of agreements concluded with farmers in each environmentally sensitive area and (e) the total area of land covered by agreements in each environmentally sensitive area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 February 1989]: The information is as follows:

	Total area (has)	Estimated extent of agricultural land (has)	Estimated number of eligible farmers/ crofters	Concluded agreements	Area covered by agreements (has)
Breadalbane	120,000	90,000	160	68	30,400
Loch Lomond	42,000	30,600	89	22	10,500
Whitlaw and Eildon	8,000	7,500	65	3	330
Stewartry	42,000	39,000	300	25	3,400
The Machair of the Uists, Benbecula, Barra and Vatersay	7,000	7,000	1800	69	900

[1] Plus 65 Grazing committees.

HEALTH

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects his Department's 1989-90 programme of research in the sexual abuse of children to be concluded and announced to the public.

Mr. Freeman: Current projects being undertaken cover the period 1987 to 1993. Each project will end as determined by its timetable. Projects in the 1989-90 programme have not yet been commissioned. Each individual project will be considered carefully and thoroughly through the Department's research commissioning mechanism. The precise start and finish dates are dependent on the research design and any changes needed in the light of professional, scientific or interdepartmental advice.

AIDS

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) for what specific medical or public health purpose it is necessary to collect and report on AIDS surveillance clinical report forms submitted by clinicians to the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre, the full names and addresses of people diagnosed with AIDS to the centre; what precautions are taken to protect this information during and after transmission to the centre; what information is stored in computer databanks and where; for what medical or public health purpose; and subject to what safeguards against unauthorised disclosure;

(2) what precautions are taken in respect of HIV and AIDS clinical report forms and data submitted by microbiologists or clinicians to the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre to ensure that such information is not accessible to temporarily employed staff;

(3) in respect of AIDS surveillance clinical report forms submitted by clinicians to the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre, to what extent the collection of data not necessary for specific medical or public health purposes has contributed to the national under-reporting of AIDS which has recently been identified and assessed by the centre and Office of Population Censuses and Surveys staff;

(4) in respect of AIDS surveillance clinical report forms submitted by clinicians to the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre, what steps he proposes to take to limit data collection to that necessary to ensure the most comprehensive possible reporting of AIDS diagnoses and deaths.

Mr. Freeman: The system for reporting HIV and AIDS cases to the communicable diseases surveillance centre (CDSC) is designed to provide the data necessary for surveillance while safeguarding confidentiality.

The information collected consists of personal and clinical data required to identify the health district of residence and the clinical condition. The forms used for data collection are kept under review in the light of experience, and are currently being revised.

CDSC takes a number of steps to safeguard confidentiality. It urges reporting clinicians to encode surnames and provide assistance to them on the use of the soundex code. Addresses are not usually given as only the health district of residence is required. If addresses are given, CDSC encodes them. Only certain members of the staff have access to the written reports which are stored in lockable cabinets in particularly secure buildings. Data held on computer contains no names and addresses and access to it is protected by special security software. On starting employment, all staff have to sign a form drawing their attention to their responsibility to protect confidentiality.

Current evidence suggests that the reporting of known AIDS cases is reasonably complete. To improve the completeness of reporting further, we announced on November 30 that we were asking Dr. Joe Smith, director of the public health laboratory service, to make proposals for reducing under-reporting to a minimum.

General Practice

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner practices with more than 11,000 patients there are in (a) Nottingham district health authority, (b) Nottingham, North constituency, (c) the city of Nottingham and (d) the Rushcliffe constituency.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We collect the information requested from family practitioner committees, which are not necessarily coterminous with health authority boundaries. As at 1 October 1987 (the latest date for which figures are available) the number of partnerships in the area covered by the Nottingham family practitioner committee (which includes Nottingham district health authority) with 11,000 patients or more was 19. Information on Nottingham, North constituency, the city of Nottingham and the Rushcliffe constituency is not available centrally.

Medical Advisers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulations govern the appointment of medical advisers to local authorities.

Mr. Freeman: There are no regulations governing such appointments, but the Department's advice on procedures for the appointment of community physicians extends to doctors who provide services to local authorities.

Select Committees (NHS Employees)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy regarding the attendance of National Health Service employees at Select Committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department's policy on the attendance of National Health Service employees before Select Committees is that this should happen whenever it seems likely to be of material assistance to a Committee's inquiry. To date, National Health Service employees have appeared on a number of occasions before the Public Accounts Committee and the Social Services Committee, either at the request of the Committee concerned or, with the agreement of the Committee, to join witnesses from the Department of Health. We believe that they have made a useful contribution to the work of those Committees.

Dental Videos

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the total cost of producing the second in the series of dental postgraduate education videos, "ALARA"; and whether this can be broken down, approximately, into cost per video;

(2) what was the total number of the dental education videos, "ALARA", distributed in Britain; and what was the regional distribution pattern in terms of dental practices supplied;

(3) what categories of dental personnel were involved in the making of the dental educational video, "ALARA"; and what were the total numbers;

(4) what arrangements have been made by his Department to collect and analyse responses to the second educational dental video, "ALARA"; and whether the results of such an analysis will be made available generally to the dental profession.

Mr. Freeman: The dental educational video, ALARA, was produced at a cost of approximately £41,500, just under £4 a copy, and distributed to all dental practices in England providing general dental services. The video has also been made available to dental practices in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Twelve members of the profession took part in the production, including the president of the British Dental Association, a professor of dental radiology, a consultant dental surgeon, a postgraduate dental dean together with general dental practitioners and senior dental officers of the Department.

Arrangements have been made by the British Postgraduate Medical Federation, which commissioned the video, to receive dentists' comments. These will be analysed and the results published.

Children in Care

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children there were in local authority care for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of children in local authority care for each year 1979-86 and provisional figures for 1987 are given in "Children in care of local authorities, year ending 31 March, England", published annually, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Over this period the numbers in care have decreased.

General Practitioners (Budgets)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide exemplifications of the total cost of indicative prescriptions budget for general practitioners in each National Health Service region.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I will be publishing shortly a working paper which discusses arrangements for the introduction of indicative drug budgets.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he proposes to take to ensure that general practitioner practices accept chronically sick or disabled people on to their registers when cash limited budgets are introduced;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect of cash-limited budgets for general practitioners upon chronically sick people in the community.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Practice budgets will be set to reflect the age and tendency to sickness of practice lists to ensure that doctors have no reason at all to refuse patients for financial reasons. In exceptional cases adjustments will be required in respect of individual patients who require more costly treatment. The practice budgets and drug budgets of GPs will therefore have no effect at all on the attractiveness of chronically sick or disabled people as potential patients.

Regional Health Authorities (Funding)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide exemplifications of allocations to regional health authorities on a weighted capitalisation basis for the 1988-89 financial year and also give the actual allocations made and the resources allocation working party targets for National Health Service regions in that year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The table shows the initial 1988-89 revenue allocations to regional health authorities, together with their distances from RAWP targets. A comparison with allocations on a weighted capitation basis as set out in the White Paper "Working for Patients" is not possible in the absence for that year of any negotiations between regions about payments for cross-boundary flows.

1988-89 Revenue Allocations and Distance from RAWP Targets

Sanitary Tampons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to change the status of the sanitary tampon and redefine it as a medical appliance.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Organochlorines (Human Milk and Tissue)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement following the World Health Organisation investigation into the levels of PCBs, PCDDs and PCDFs in breast milk.

Mr. Freeman: The draft report of the World Health Organisation into the levels of polychlorinated biphenyls, polychlorinated dibenzoparadioxins and polychlorinated dibenzofurans in breast milk is among the data being considered by the Department's committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment. It has been asked to advise on the possible health effects from all dioxins.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the presence of organochlorines in infant body tissues.

Mr. Freeman: Organochlorine compounds persist in body fat which is therefore a good indicator of exposure of body tissues. Surveys of human fat for these compounds were done in the United Kingdom between 1963 and 1977 as well as more recently between 1982 and 1983. These surveys dealt with persons aged five years and over but the 1982-83 survey also looked at four samples of fat from infants aged from five days to three months. The results confirmed that residues of organochlorine compounds (OCCs) might occur in newly born infants but the results were too few to allow further interpretation. A further survey of human fat is being planned and it is intended to look at samples from infants where available. The levels of OCCs found in these human fat samples show a downward trend and are unlikely to result in any adverse health effects.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available to his Department on the presence of organochlorines in breast milk and umbilical cord tissue.

Mr. Freeman: Surveys of organochlorine compounds in breast milk were carried out in the United Kingdom in 1979-80 and 1983-84, the results being published in MAFF food surveillance papers No. 9 (1982) and 16 (1986). Copies of these are in the Library.

There are no United Kingdom data on levels of organochlorine compounds in placental tissue and umbilical cord blood, but limited information from other countries, available in the published scientific literature, shows that organochlorine compounds do cross the placenta into the foetus. However, these compounds are highly fat-soluble and greater exposures occur postnatally via breastmilk than prenatally via the placenta.

The independent expert committee advising the Government on these matters, the committee on the toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment, has stated that the toxicological information available is not adequate to exclude the possibility of effects on infant health from exposure to organochlorine compounds in breast milk, and recommended continued monitoring of human milk samples in the United Kingdom. A further survey has been planned.

Meningitis

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been conducted into a possible link between sea water pollution and cases of meningitis.

Mr. Freeman: I am not aware of any such research. The research projects into meningitis supported by the Medical Research Council were listed in the reply given on 21 December by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science at column 292.

Sanitary Tampons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been undertaken on the effects on women's health of dioxins in sanitary tampons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Research in Sweden has shown that the level of dioxins in sanitary tampons is extremely low. These levels are likely to present a negligible risk to women's health. The relevant trade association has been asked to provide information on levels found in products on sale in the United Kingdom and data on the bioavailability of dioxins in tampons. A further assessment of risks to health will then be made.

Dioxins

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether there is a declared safe level for TCDD (tetrachlorodibenzodoxin);

(2) whether there is a safe level of dioxins with regard to human health.

Mr. Freeman: The Department's committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment has been asked to advise on the possible health effects from all dioxins. One of these, TCDD, has been classified by the International Agency for Research into Cancer as a possible human carcinogen.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct local authorities and health authorities to provide the recently developed Legionnaire's disease rapid testing kits for use in water cooling systems to their engineers and environmental health officers.

Mr. Freeman: The latest advice available to me on this matter is from the expert advisory committee on biocides. Its report, published on 8 February, welcomed the appearance of this kit but considered a thorough evaluation of it was essential.

Rutland Memorial Hospital

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received since September 1988 from residents of Rutland against the proposed closure of the maternity unit at the Rutland Memorial hospital, Oakham; what action he intends to take to prevent the Leicestershire health authority from proceeding with that closure; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have received 22 local representations on the matter.

Responsibility for the provision of local health services rests with the district health authority concerned.

Ministers are not involved in such decisions unless agreement cannot be reached locally.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Boswell To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the scientific basis for the assumption in the report of the joint working group on salmonella in eggs that a multiplication factor of 100 is appropriate in estimating total salmonella infections from recorded cases.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The report does not make this assumption, but it does quote some American practice of using a multiplication factor of 100.

The public health laboratory service considers that there is considerable under-reporting of salmonella food poisoning, because not all affected persons consult a doctor, and those that do may not have a culture taken. Even when doctors secure positive results, the cases may not be reported. However, it is difficult to assess the degree of under-reporting of salmonella food poisoning in England and Wales as no specific studies of this question have been made.

There is therefore no multiplier which can be specifically applied to this country.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to establish an independent inquiry into food poisoning.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: An expert committee is to be established on microbiological safety in food. It will report to me and my hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, but it will have an independent chairman. Its members will include outside experts and Government advisers—for example, scientists or those with practical experience in the production, processing, retailing or preparation of food in the home or in catering. It will investigate issues referred to it by Departments, but it will also be able to initiate its own investigations. Its reports will be published.

Ambulance Service

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the ambulance service under the proposals in the White Paper on the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on Wednesday 8 February at column 696.

National Health Service (Finance)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing the relevant figures in table 14.19 of Cm. 614 adjusted by the hospital and community health service pay and price deflator.

Mr. Freeman: Following is the information:

Hospital and community health services, United Kingdom—current expenditure

£ millions

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Cash figures table 14.19 Cm. 614
Gross	11,070	11,706	12,348	13,249	14,604
Net	10,767	11,398	12,018	12,892	14,219
Figures adjusted by hospital and community health services pay and price deflator
Gross	14,284	14,276	14,325	14,370	14,604
Net	13,893	13,900	13,942	13,983	14,219

The table sets out hospital and community health services current expenditure figures from 1983-84 adjusted by the hospital and community health services pay and price deflator for the years in which it is available. These figures do not take account of income from cash releasing cost improvements which, in the years shown, provided a significant contribution to the total resources available for service development.

Parkside Hospital

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is taken from patients in Parkside hospital area concerning patients' nationality and country of origin.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally. My hon. Friend, however, may wish to contact the chairman of Parkside health authority for further details.

"Working for Patients"

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any hospital wards which have been closed in the last two years will be reopened under the proposals of the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 February 1989]: Hospital wards may be closed for a variety of reasons including, for example, the development of better alternative facilities. But under the present funding arrangements a hospital which becomes more efficient and could treat more patients may be prevented from doing so because funds do not flow with the patients. The White Paper's proposals will make it easier for NHS hospitals to offer their services to their own and other districts in a way which enables them to attract the funds they need in line with the work they are asked to do.

Kidney Dialysis

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those district health authorities which have contracted out kidney dialysis services to (a) charities and (b) commercial companies.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 30 January 1989]: I am aware of only one district health authority which has contracted out hospital dialysis services in England. East Suffolk health authority has let a contract to Unicare Medical Services for provision of dialysis at Ipswich.

ENVIRONMENT

Public Health Act 1933

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend section 33 of the Public Health Act 1933.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that my hon. Friend is referring to section 33 of the Public Health Act 1936. I have no plans to introduce legislation to amend that provision.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the figures for 1979 to the present for mortgage repossessions in the north-west of England and each of the metropolitan boroughs of the north-west of England.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has no estimate for the numbers of mortgage repossessions in the north-west of England. The Building Societies Association publishes numbers of repossessions only for the United Kingdom, because the numbers are too small to break down by regions. My Department collects information on repossessions instigated in respect of mortgages made by local authorities, who made less than 1 per cent. of the total mortgage loans in the United Kingdom in 1987. In 1987-88 there were an estimated 90 repossessions in the north-west administrative region which were made by local authorities.

Thames Water Authority (Prosecutions)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate how many successful prosecutions were brought against the Thames water authority in (a) 1987 and (b) 1988, to the extent that information is available, for (i) causing pollution or (ii) in any other ways failing to meet their obligations as a water authority.

Mr. Moynihan: In 1987 there was one successful prosecution against Thames water authority for the failure of a sewage treatment works to comply with the terms of its discharge consent.

Tenants' Choice

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how the appointed teller described in his Department's consultation paper "Tenants' Choice: Consultation and Voting" will be able to communicate in the manner described with a seaman on active service overseas serving on Her Majesty's submarines for extended periods in times of international tension;

(2) whether a service man or service woman on active service overseas who does not respond to the tellers' inquiries as described in "Tenants' Choice: Consultation and Voting", will have his or her home transferred to another landlord.

Mr. Trippier: The numbers of service personnel affected by tenants' choice will be small. Any who are, including submariners, will be enabled by regulations to cast an advance vote at any point in the 13-week consultation period if they expect to be absent during the vote itself. In addition, the independent teller will be able to contact virtually all service personnel overseas through the British Forces Post Office. Where the tenancy concerned is a joint one, a vote may be cast on behalf of all the joint tenants, including any service personnel on overseas duty. Tenants eligible to vote who did not do so would become tenants of the applicant if a tenants' choice transfer went ahead.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what detailed advice he has given as to recommended procedures for balloting tenants to determine whether tenants wish to remain local authority tenants as provided under the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Trippier: A consultation paper "Tenants' Choice —Consultation and Voting" was issued to interested parties on 8 December 1988; copies were placed in the Library. Secondary legislation is being prepared to give effect to this and other provisions of part IV of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library information showing the form of questions put, to date, by local authorities to tenants, in ballots to determine whether tenants wish to remain local authority tenants.

Mr. Trippier; Copies of ballot forms from the three authorities which have so far applied for consent to the sale of their housing stocks have been placed in the Library.

Climatic Change

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the extent to which the current mild winter is a result of climatic change.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am advised by the Meteorological Office that the current mild winter in the United Kingdom is a result of unusually persistent south-westerly winds. There is no evidence that this pattern heralds a lasting climate change.

Rating Reform

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice is being given to district councils about the best time to canvass for the information necessary for the community charge registers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Charging authorities have been advised that we propose to bring the regulations which will place a duty on individuals to provide information to registration officers into effect on 22 May, following the distribution by the Government of a public information leaflet.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his best estimates of the costs of administration, per community charge account, of the community charge in England.

Mr. Ridley: Price Waterhouse estimated that the annual cost of collecting the community charge would be between £374 million and £430 million, an average of £9·40 to £10·70 per account. This is in line with the current unit cost of collecting rates.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average domestic rate for each district in Cambridgeshire for each year from 1983-84 to 1988-89; and what the community charge would have been for each year if the system had been in place.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 6 February 1989]: The information requested is given in the table.

The actual average domestic rate bill and poundage in each year is shown for each district together with the illustrative full community charge, where available.

Palace of Westminster

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what areas of the Palace of Westminster remain to be cleaned and repaired; what is his estimate of the cost of this work; when he expects the work to be done; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The repair, restoration and cleaning of the stonework of the Palace of Westminster is being carried out in a number of phases. The current phase, covering the Central Lobby tower, is scheduled for completion towards the end of this year.

The only sections of the external elevations then remaining to be tackled will be the Victoria tower and the south elevation, overlooking the Victoria tower gardens. These together will form the next phase of the programme. Work is scheduled to start early in 1990 and will take about two and a half years to complete. The cost is estimated at between £7 million-£8·5 million.

The final stage will be the repair, restoration and cleaning of the stonework in the inner courtyards. A preliminary estimate made last year indicated that the cost would exceed £15 million.

CFCs

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support his Department is giving to local authorities who wish to reduce or eliminate their use of CFCs.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities, in common with all other consumers, have an important contribution to make in achieving the objective of reducing use of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) and halons to the maximum possible extent. We welcome the steps they are already taking. The Department, in conjunction with the Scottish Office, Welsh Office and the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, will shortly be meeting representatives of the local authority associations to discuss practical ways of reducing CFC and halon use, including dissemination of information and guidance to local authorities.

Houses and Flats (Huyton)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by year for the last 15 years for which figures are available, the annual number of completions, within Huyton borough council area of (a) private sector houses and flats, (b) council houses and flats and (c) housing association houses and flats.

Mr. Trippier: Housebuilding completions, as reported by Knowsley metropolitan council for 1980 to 1987, appear in table 1 of "Housebuilding in England by local authority areas: 1980 to 1987". For earlier years figures appear in the following issues of "Local Housing Statistics".

Year	Issue number	Table
1974	33	5
1975	37	5
1976	41	5
1977	45	5
1978	49	5
1979	59	4(a)

Copies of these publications are available in the Library. Comparable figures for 1973 are not available because of the reorganisation of local government in 1974.

Water Cooling Systems

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra resources have been given to local environmental health officers to ensure that guidance notes and best practice advice are available to owners of water cooling systems.

Mr. Gummer: It is for local authorities to decide what resources to allocate to environmental health officers to enable them to meet the needs of their area. Central Government support local authorities' revenue spending by way of block grant. Entitlement to block grant is calculated on the basis of each authority's assessed expenditure needs, taking into account environmental health duties. The grant is, however, unhypothecated. It is for each authority to determine its expenditure priorities.

Dog Registration

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the desirability of establishing a dog registration scheme; whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to provide for such a scheme on the lines advocated by the RSPCA; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since 24 May 1988 when the Local Government Act 1988 came into force 110 letters have been received from hon. Members and 130 letters from members of the public, local authorities and animal welfare organisations. The majority of the letters refer to a registration scheme. We have no plans to introduce a registration scheme.

Radiological Monitoring (Cumbria)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the levels of radiological monitoring and public protection for people living in Ravenglass and along the River Esk in Cumbria.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the levels of radioactive contamination found recently on the banks of the River Esk in Cumbria.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am satisfied with the level of radiological monitoring undertaken by the authorising departments and British Nuclear Fuels plc. Data obtained from this monitoring confirms that members of the public living in the Ravenglass/River Esk area are exposed to doses of radiation that are well within internationally recommended limits.

Winsor Housing Scheme, Newham

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what approach or consultations he has had with the London Docklands development corporation concerning the cost of construction and level of rent of the Winsor housing scheme in the London borough of Newham; and if he will state his current determination of the level of affordable rent expressed as a range of percentages or a given percentage of mean or average income, or similar computation.

Mr. Trippier: The London Docklands development corporation has recently submitted proposals for the Winsor park housing scheme to the Department. All aspects of these are currently under consideration.

Water Suppliers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to require the Crown estates Commissioners to pay compensation for (a) the failure to supply water, (b) the provision of water of a harmful quality and (c) failure of water suppliers to respond to queries.

Mr. Moynihan: No.

South Bank Theatre of Dance

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the chairman of the London residuary body about the preservation of a site for a south bank theatre of dance.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Planning Appeals (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against Durham city council's planning decisions were made to him in each of the last five years; and what proportion of these were successful in each case.

Mr. Chope: The number of planning appeals made against decisions of the Durham city council since 1 April 1984 (the earliest date for which such information is available) is shown in the table, together with the number of such cases decided and the number and proportion of these for which planning permission was granted.

Year	Appeals received	Appeals decided	Appeals allowed	Per cent. allowed
1984-85	11	8	0	—
1985-86	8	6	1	16·7
1986-87	16	11	6	54·5
1987-88	17	17	6	35·3

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the London Docklands development corporation target for new jobs for residents in (a) the urban development area, and (b) the London borough of Newham, Tower Hamlets and Southwark in 1989.

Mr. Trippier: LDDC has set itself the target of bringing unemployment down to a minimum and at a faster rate than London and national trends. These and other employment aims are set out in an LDDC occasional paper, published on 10 February, which has been sent to the hon. Member. LDDC has not set targets for particular areas, but under its memorandum of agreement with the London borough of Newham it will help ensure that 25 per cent. of jobs in the Royal docks area will be taken by Newham residents.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what mechanism has been established to ensure that the memorandum of agreement between the London Docklands development corporation and the London borough of Newham is implemented.

Mr. Trippier: The memorandum represents a commitment by the LDDC and the London borough of Newham to work together to secure the benefits of regeneration for the area. Progress is reviewed by regular meetings at both officer and member level.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of London Docklands development corporation expenditure was spent in 1988; and what are the forecasts for future years on (a) community needs of the residential population and (b) transport infrastructure.

Mr. Trippier: Approximately half of LDDC's expenditure in 1988-89 will relate to transport projects. Firm forecasts are not available for future years. All of LDDC's expenditure on regeneration should benefit the local communities, directly or indirectly.

Thames House

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when Thames house, the temporary annexe of Newham community college, will be up and running; and what is the basis of its capital and revenue funding.

Mr. Trippier: The LDDC expects to complete refurbishment of its former Thames house office by mid-June, but parts will be available for college use before then. Opening dates will be decided by the college.

The corporation is paying the costs of refurbishment, and will licence the building to the London borough of Newham on a peppercorn basis. In addition it will contribute 20 per cent. of revenue costs for five years, up to agreed cash limits. Annual revenue costs are expected to be approximately £1 million.

Dogs

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what he estimates to be the non-working dog population, and the number of dogs destroyed as sick or unwanted during the last 10 years for which statistics are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department does not collect this information. I understand that the Pet Food Manufacturers Association estimate the total dog population in the United Kingdom to be 6·8 million. It is not known how many are working dogs, nor how many are destroyed as sick or unwanted.

D. Harvey

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how long the Nature Conservancy Council has been negotiating with D. Harvey, of Ninham Farm, Shanklin.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that its negotiations with Mr. Harvey over a variety of proposed uses of the land commenced in March 1986.

Polycyclic Aromatic Hydrocarbons

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what solutions his Department is seeking to reduce polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons in tap water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: At the request of the Department, water undertakers are conducting a major survey of their supplies to establish whether standards for polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAH) are being exceeded. If they are, remedial programmes will be needed comprising the flushing, relining or replacement of water mains.

Management Agreements

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average waiting time for management agreements to be entered into by the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that the average time for negotiating agreements involving payments of under £5,000 per annum is slightly under six months. In cases involving higher payments negotiations can be complex and can take up to two years, or more, to complete. In such cases short term interim agreements can sometimes be agreed.

Dioxins

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if there are any research proposals from his Department regarding sources of dioxin production;

(2) what research is carried out into the formation of TCDD from less harmful dioxins;

(3) whether the release of dioxins from hospital incinerators is monitored;

(4) what was the level of dioxins created by the chemical, plastics and pharmaceutical industries at the most recent date.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of dioxins arising from the manufacture and use of pesticides, herbicides and slimicides.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Detailed information is not available on the levels of dioxins created by hospital incinerators, the chemical, plastics and pharmaceutical industries, nor by the manufacture and use of pesticides, herbicides and slimicides. The Department of the Environment, in conjunction with the Department of Health, HSE, DTI and MAFF have been working for some time on a statement on the known sources of dioxins, their possible health effects and the expected exposure of the public to them. This statement will be published shortly.

There are 75 different dioxins of which 22 are TCDDs. Only one of these, 2,3,7,8-TCDD is considered particularly harmful. I understand that some research has been done on the formation of TCDDs from the other dioxins. It does not indicate that 2,3,7,8-TCDD is formed preferentially. This topic will be addressed in the report.

Sanitary Towels

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is currently taken to ensure that the legal provisions covering the disposal of sanitary towels are fully enforced.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no specific legal requirements. Disposal is conducted within the general statutory controls of local authorities under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 over waste handling and disposal methods and standards.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statistics are available relating to the disposal via the sewage system of sanitary towels and tampons and the persistence of these items in coastal waters and on beaches.

Mr. Moynihan: None.

Sea Water (Pollution)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken to deal with the increasing appearance of pathogens resistant to the natural disinfectant action of sea water.

Mr. Moynihan: I am not aware of any evidence to suggest that the number of pathogens entering the sea, which are resistant to natural disinfectant processes, is increasing. If the hon. Member has any information on the subject she might wish to send it to me.

The Department continues to sponsor research to investigate the survival of human pathogens from sewage effluent in sea water.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on pollution of the sea by plastics.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Discarded plastic at sea is a serious hazard to marine life, affecting seabirds, fish and mammals. The United Kingdom Government are committed to help prevent it. New regulations introduced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport under the Merchant Shipping Act make it an offence to throw plastic overboard from any ship or boat. These regulations give effect in the United Kingdom to annex V of the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships, 1973 and are being extensively publicised. Litter left on beaches or carried by rivers also contributes to this problem which everyone can help to tackle.

Paper Industry (Toxic Material)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to which countries have tried to reduce or eliminate the use of chlorine in paper manufacture;

(2) if he will undertake a study on the effects on the environment during the production of paper pulp for use in the manufacture of disposable nappies at all points in the process from tree felling to pulping and bleaching;

(3) what representations he has received from environmental organisations over the production of dioxins associated with chlorine-bleached paper pulp; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what information he has on the United States paper industry dioxin strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As far as is known, paper pulp for use in disposable nappies is not manufactured in the United Kingdom, and consequently a study on environmental effects is not called for.

Sweden and Canada have taken steps to reduce the use of chlorine in paper manufacture and are encouraging manufacturers to change to a mechanical pulp process which does not involve chlorine bleaching. This is primarily because of concern over the effluents discharged by pulp mills using chlorine bleaching. In the United Kingdom, pulp is manufactured solely by processes which do not involve the use of chlorine bleaching.

I have not received any representations from environmental organisations concerning the formation of dioxins during the chlorine bleaching pulp process.

Copies of the United States paper industry dioxin strategy are available and are being examined for their relevance to United Kingdom circumstances.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources are available to monitor toxic effluent from paper mills.

Mr. Moynihan: Arrangements for authorising and monitoring waste effluents from paper mills and other industrial premises are currently matters for the regional water authorities.

Re-Chem

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on environmental aspects of the closure of Re-Chem plants at Pontypool and Bonnybridge.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The plant at Bonnybridge was closed for commercial reasons in October 1984 before an independent review group, appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland reported in February 1985 that there was no substantive evidence of any abnormal environmental effects from the plant.

The plant at Pontypool is still in operation and is subject to an appropriate range of environmental controls.

Agent Orange

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has received copies of any United States studies on the effects of Agent Orange herbicide.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Considerable information on the United States studies on the effects of Agent Orange herbicide has been published in scientific literature which is available to the Department.

Disposable Nappies

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the percentage that disposable nappies form of domestic refuge as a whole.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No precise figure is available but it is estimated that disposable nappies represent less than 1 per cent. by weight of total household waste.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there have been any reports of viruses discovered in rubbish tips associated with soiled disposable nappies handled as normal domestic waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are not aware of any such reports. It would, however, be very difficult to determine whether or not viruses discovered in landfill sites are directly attributable to the presence of disposable nappies.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the closed-circuit television monitoring of sewers; and if he will estimate the annual cost of drains blocked by disposable nappies.

Mr. Moynihan: The water authorities use mobile closed circuit television equipment extensively and successfully to make detailed surveys of the most critical sections of their sewage systems. It is neither necessary nor practicable to extend its use to monitor all public sewers.

WCs and private drainage systems are not designed to deal with disposable nappies. Maintenance and repair of these systems are the responsibility of the owners and no information is available centrally on which to base an estimate of the annual cost of clearing blockages in them.

Drinking Water (Pesticides)

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 7 February, if he will list in the Official Report the number and location of breaches in the precautionary standard for pesticides in drinking water in 1988 in supplies provided by the Anglian water authority.

Mr. Moynihan: During the period December 1987 to November 1988 there were breaches of the standard of 0·1 microgram per litre for pesticides, specified in the EC drinking water directive, in water supplies leaving 14 of Anglian water authority's treatment works. These were:

Alton, Ardleigh, Bedford, Clayhill, Covenham, Drove Lane, Etton, Foxcote, Grafham, Heigham, Houghton, Marham, Pitsford and Wing.

Local Authority Pension Funds

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authority pension funds had implemented the results of an interim valuation before 28 July 1988 and will therefore be covered by the protection offered by him in his letter of that date.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is not available to the Department. I shall be writing in response to a letter which I have received from the hon. Gentleman on this subject.

Local Authorities (Funding)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish, for each local authority in England, as available, its (a) cash backed, (b) non-cash backed and (c) total capital receipts as at 31 March 1988.

Mr. Ridley: My Department has now received accumulated capital receipts returns for 1987-88 from 99 per cent. of English local authorities. On the basis of these it is estimated that at the end of 1988-89 local authorities in England held accumulated receipts of £11·7 billion. Some of these receipts such as leasing disposals, were notional. The cash from much of the remainder had been used for such purposes as repaying debt and financing capitalised housing repairs. After allowing for such factors only £6·4 billion out of the £11·7 billion could be converted to cash.

I have today placed in the Library a table showing for each local authority which has provided a return, (a) the accumulated receipts and (b) the amount which could be converted into cash.

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) of 1 February, Official Report, columns 56-60, whether he has received letters from Southampton or Fulham football clubs regarding the table of arrests for the 1987-88 football season.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 9 February 1989]: The chairman of Southampton football club wrote to me on 3 January about the 1987-88 arrest figures in respect of the club. I have received no correspondence from Fulham football club.

Water Charges

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide information showing (a) the range of rates paid, (b) rateable values and (c) water charges paid as a proportion of rates paid and rateable values prevailing in each water authority area in England and Wales (i) in 1979, (ii) in 1983 and (iii) for the last twelve months, to date; and if he will estimate, on the basis of recently announced increased water charges, the figures for the next 12 months.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 10 February 1989]: Information in the form requested by the hon. Member is not available centrally.

Rates Statistics

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the relationship of domestic rates to net equivalent household income, assuming a 100 per cent. rate rebate broken down in to (i) income bands of under £75, £75 to £100, £100, to £150, £150 to £200, £200 to £250, £250 to £300, £300 to £350, £350 to £400, £400 to £500 and over £500, all showing how many households fall into each income band and (ii) decile groups, showing how many households fall into each decile group.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 13 February 1989]: No. I have published illustrative community charge figures together with comparative figures for domestic rates on the basis of the latest tax and benefit rates. I have not been prepared to proceed by hypothetical example—either in forecasting the future or by "what-if" versions of history.

Sewage Works

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, he will list for each water authority in England the number of sewage works which breached their discharge consents in 1987-88.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 13 February 1989]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave him on 20 December 198 at column 194. Figures for 1988 are not yet available.

Environmental Health Officers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many environmental health officer posts on the establishment of each local community are currently unfilled;

(2) if he will make additional funds available to local authorities for the purpose of employing additional environmental health officers;

(3) what discussions he has had concerning the level of training places for environmental health officers;

(4) how many environmental health officers are employed by Westminster city council; and how many posts are on the establishment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 13 February 1989]: Decisions on the resources to be made available within local authority budgets for the employment of environmental health officers, on the numbers of such posts to be created, on recruitment, and the timing of appointments to those posts, and on the training of such officers are all matters for the local environmental health authorities.

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what indication he has had of the European Commission's view of the Government's proposals for a golden share in the water authorities after privatisation.

Mr. Howard: The Government have never been in any doubt about the legality of our policy on competition and merger in the water industry, and our proposals for a "Golden Share" to protect the new water plcs from takeover in their first five years in the private sector.

In view of the quite unjustified doubts raised by some critics of water privatisation, I welcome the European Commission's clarification of the position.

In a statement on 7 February, the Commissioner responsible, Sir Leon Brittan, said that having looked into the matter, the Commission

"has not found anything . . . which would raise problems as far as the Community law is concerned in the fields of competition or company capital structure".

This is exactly as we had expected, since our proposal involves absolutely no element of discrimination as between different categories of potential investors. I recognise that this will disappoint those opposed to water privatisation and therefore opposed to this sensible and temporary protection of the new plcs and their customers. Our proposals will simply avoid major and potentially damaging upheaval too early in their private sector existence, and provide a long-term safeguard against loss of comparative competition.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Warning and Monitoring Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley of 7 December 1988, Official Report, column 205, whether he will place a copy of the scientific research and development branch's technical review of the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation in the Library.

Mr. John Patten: No. The report is a classified document.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will meet the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to discuss the adequacy of the computer system in the missing persons bureau in New Scotland Yard for the tracing of missing persons; and whether he will place in the Library a copy of the report by the police working party referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, West of 19 December 1988, Official Report, column 142;

(2) whether he will discuss with chief officers of police the steps to be taken to seek EEC funding in order to comply with the Council of Europe recommendation R(79)6.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. We expect to receive a copy of the report commissioned by the Association of Chief Police Officers to review police procedures for dealing with inquiries relating to missing persons shortly. We will be happy to consider any recommendations which the police may put to us.

Publication of the report is a matter for the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the names, age and last known whereabouts of all persons missing in the Metropolitan area for more than three months and where such names have already been published by the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. I understand that the decision to publish details of a missing person would normally be taken by the division concerned and such cases are not separately identifiable from records held centrally by the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken during each of the years since 1979 to ensure compliance with the Council of Europe recommendation R(79)6.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to him on 19 December 1988 at column 143.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will take steps to require all police authorities to inform the police national computer bureau of every unidentified body found within their jurisdictions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to him on 19 December 1988 at columns 142-43.

Prisoners

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are remand prisoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 31 December 1988 there were about 8,850 untried and 1,490 convicted unsentenced prisoners in prison service establishments in England and Wales. A further 87 prisoners, most of whom were on remand, were held in police cells.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of prisoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 10 February 1989, 48,925 prisoners were held in prison service establishments in England and Wales. A further 209 prisoners were held in police cells.

Football (Arrests)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests were made inside the football grounds of (a) Newcastle United, (b) Sunderland, (c) Hartlepool, (d) Middlesbrough and (e) Darlington football clubs during 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information relates to all games played at home by the first teams of the football clubs concerned during 1988:

Club	Arrests
Newcastle United	149
Sunderland	39
Middlesbrough	85
Darlington	2

Information is not available in the same form for Hartlepool where there were 21 arrests at league matches during the 1987-88 season. The figures do not distinguish between arrests made inside the ground and arrests directly connected with those matches made outside the ground. The total of 21 arrests corrects the figure of 12 previously understated in a return from the police to the Association of Chief Police Officers and given on 19 December in a reply to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) at columns 55-60.

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, further to his answer of 7 February, financial resources for the programme of research into child sexual abuse will be backdated to the beginning of the financial year.

Mr. John Patten: Financial resources for the Home Office research and planning unit's programme of research, including those projects concerning child sexual abuse, for the financial year 1989-90 are available from 1 April 1989. The allocation of funds for individual projects is dependent on the starting dates of the projects and cannot be backdated.

Strip Searches

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many strip searches were made of female arrestees in police custody during each month of 1988, giving the number of persons involved; what items of evidential value used in subsequent proceedings, class A drugs, weapons or things which could have been used to cause physical injury, were discovered in any search; in how many cases arrestees declined to be strip searched, and with what outcome; and what were the reasons for each search.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Youth at Risk Programme

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the potential for combating juvenile delinquency and application in the United Kingdom of the youth at risk programme, details of which have been submitted to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have seen a summary of the objectives and content of the youth at risk programme which operates in the United States and Home Office officials have seen a video film. The programme offers a distinctive way of dealing with young offenders and other young delinquents. Intensive intermediate treatment schemes which offer no less constructive and demanding programmes for juvenile offenders are available throughout England and Wales.

Parking Schemes

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by the working party considering parking problems in outer London and elsewhere; and when he expects to be able to make a statement of the Government's policy towards the introduction of controlled parking schemes and the employment of traffic wardens by local authorities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: While I understand that the parking enforcement working party has not yet completed its report, I hope that it will be able to do so shortly.

WALES

Exchequer Grant

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the aggregate Exchequer grant paid to all local authorities in Wales in each financial year since 1978-79 (a) in cash terms and (b) at 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is given in the following table for all years from 1981-82 to 1988-89. It is not possible to provide figures on a comparable basis for years prior to the introduction of block grant in 1981-82.

Aggregate exchequer grant (£ million)

	in cash terms	at 1988-89 prices[1]
1981-82	873·1	1,251·9
1982-83	926·6	1,239·9
1983-84	962·9	1,232·5
1984-85	992·5	1,209·1
1985-86	1,022·7	1,182·2
1986-87	1,085·7	1,214·4
1987-88	1,167·2	1,240·2
1988-89	1,250·7	1,250·7

[1] Expressed in real terms using the GDP (market prices) deflator.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Laos

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to whether the former king and the former crown prince of Laos are still alive or held in captivity; what representations he has received regarding their fate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have no independent or reliable knowledge as to the fate of the former King and the former Crown Prince of Laos. There have been persistent but unconfirmed reports of their deaths. The Lao Government claim that they are alive and "in retirement".

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the continued occupation of Laos by Vietnamese troops; whether he will raise the matter with the Soviet and the Vietnamese governments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We received one letter from a member of the public in 1988 on this issue. According to the Vietnamese Foreign Minister, all Vietnamese troops were to be withdrawn from Laos by the end of 1988. We have no independent means of verifying this claim.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding allegations that Soviet military officers removed certain national treasures from Laos to the Soviet Union in 1975; and what response he is able to make.

Mr. Eggar: We received one letter from a member of the public in 1988 alleging that a statue was removed from the palace in Luang Prabang by Soviet military officers. According to a Lao official the statue is still on display in the palace museum.

Petty Officer John Black

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether Her Majesty's ambassador in Madrid has conveyed to the Spanish Government the report of the Metropolitan police regarding the death of Petty Officer John Black, RN; whether he has asked the Spanish Government to investigate the circumstances in which the allegedly defective water heater was removed from the apartment in which Mr. Black was found dead; and what response he has received;

(2) whether he will instruct Her Majesty's ambassador in Madrid to ask the Spanish Government to show the Metropolitan police report on the death of Petty Officer John Black to the two Spanish pathologists who gave evidence to the inquest in Portsmouth in May 1985; and whether the ambassador will request guidance from the Government of Spain on the conflict of evidence between the pathologists and the Metropolitan police officers.

Mr. Eggar: The report prepared by British police officers into the death of Petty Officer Black remains the property of and confidential to the Metropolitan police. It has not therefore been conveyed to the Spanish authorities.

Israel

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the use by Israeli armed forces of bullets consisting of a large steel ball bearing coated with rubber; how many fatalities have been caused by such bullets; and if he will raise the matter with the Israeli Government and the United Nations.

Mr. Eggar: We do not know how many fatalities have been caused by these bullets. The Israeli authorities are well aware of our concern at their use of excessive force against Palestinians in the occupied territories.

DEFENCE

Defence Exports

74. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his practice to publish figures on individual companies' defence exports.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to permit United Kingdom NIREX Ltd. to release its report on the radioactive inventory of nuclear waste produced in Ministry of Defence activities.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Petty Officer John Black

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further action he intends to take in the case of the late Petty Officer John Black, RN following the verdict of the inquest jury that he was unlawfully killed in Spain, and the Metropolitan police report that he died accidentally; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Although my Department initiated an investigation into the death of Petty Officer J. A. Black, which was carried out by officers of the Metropolitan police, it has no further standing in the matter.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any personnel from the Defence Export Services Organisation visited Turkey, Chile or South Africa during 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 9 February 1989]: Representatives of DESO travel extensively and visited numerous countries during 1988. Because of the confidentiality of many of the matters involved it is not the practice to list individual countries which have been visited.

Army Equipment Exhibition

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the British Army equipment exhibition was held in 1988; and whether it will be held in 1989.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 9 February 1989]: The British Army equipment exhibition was held at Aldershot during the week 26 June to 1 July 1988. It is a biennial exhibition and will not therefore be held this year.

International Organisations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those international organisations on which his Department is represented and the total cost of those commitments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 8 February 1989]: The Ministry of Defence is represented at numerous committees meetings under the auspicies of NATO, the independent European programme group, the Eurogroup and the Western European Union. In 1987-88 the MOD paid a contribution of £57,301,000 to the NATO military budget, and a net contribution of £113,640,000 to the NATO infrastructure budget.

Other international organisations to which the MOD pays subscriptions or grants are:

European Network of Ocean Stations
FINABEL Secretariat, Brussels
European Organisation for the Exploitation of Meteorological Satellites
International Hydrographic Organisation
World Meteorological Organisation
European Centre for Medium-Range Weather Forecasts
North Atlantic Ocean Stations Agreement
World Weather Watch Stations Overseas
International Institute for Scientific Studies
Commonwealth Advisory Aeronautical Research Council
International Institute for Strategic Studies
Ergonomics Society
British Commonwealth Ex-Servicemen's League
Inter Allied Confederation of Reserve Officers

In 1987-88 the cost of subscriptions and grants to these organisations was approximately £10,057,000.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Petty Officer John Black

Mr. Latham: To ask the Attorney-General whether, pursuant to recent reports of the Metropolitan police which have been submitted to Ministers, he intends to initiate action under the Coroners Act 1988 to recall an inquest, in the light of the verdict of the coroner's jury in Portsmouth on 23 May 1985 that Petty Officer John Black, RN, was unlawfully killed; and whether he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: To date, interested parties have neither made any representations to me about the inquest held on 23 May 1985 nor requested my authority under section 13(1) of the Coroners Act 1988 for them to apply to the High Court for an order quashing the inquest and requiring a new inquest to be held. I shall give careful consideration to any representations or requests which may be made to me.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

European Directives

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list all Bills and Statutory Instruments approved by Parliament over the last five years which implement European directives.

Mr. Wakeham: I am arranging for a list of the 149 statutory instruments made under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972 between 1 January 1984 and 20 November 1988 to be placed in the Library of the House. No list of statutes implementing a Community obligation or of statutory instruments implementing such an obligation but made under enabling powers other than section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972 exists. This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

EC Documents

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many European Economic Community documents from the Commission were deposited in Parliament in 1988 or the most recent 12 months for which figures are available; of these, how many were draft or final regulations, how many draft or final directives and how many draft or final decisions; and how many of these were debated on the Floor of the House and how many in Committees upstairs.

Mr. Wakeham: In 1988, 770 European Community documents from the Commission and other sources were deposited in Parliament. Of these approximately 45 per cent. were proposals for Council regulations, 15 per cent. proposals for Council directives and 15 per cent. proposals for Council decisions. In the same year, following recommendations from the Commons Select Committee on European Legislation, 31 debates covering 92 documents—some of which would have been deposited before 1988—were held on the Floor of the House and eight debates covering 17 documents were held in Standing Committee.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufacturing Productivity

81. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what amount productivity has increased among manufacturing firms in the north-west over the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Figures for productivity growth in the north-west are not available. Manufacturing industry throughout the regions has achieved significant improvements in productivity. In the three months up to November 1988, manufacturing productivity in the United Kingdom as a whole was 14½ per cent. higher than in the corresponding period two years earlier.

Productivity

82. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement about the trends in productivity in British industry.

Mr. Major: Manufacturing industry has made great efficiency gains in the 1980s. Productivity in the three months up to November 1988 was 58 per cent. higher than its average level in 1980. This is equivalent to an annual average growth rate of 5·6 per cent. significantly higher than the rate of 1·6 per cent. achieved in the 1970s and 3·1 per cent. in the 1960s. Since 1980 United Kingdom manufacturing productivity growth has been higher than in any other major industrialised country.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the balance of payments in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Major: The Autumn Statement provided forecasts of the current account for 1988 and 1989 only. This year the current account deficit was forecast to be £11 billion. As usual a new forecast will be published on Budget day.

Information Gathering

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans to seek improvements in the information gathered by his Department on the economy.

Mr. Major: The Treasury is directly responsible only for statistics on official reserves, though it is also responsible jointly with CSO for the public sector debt repayment figures. It is always looking to improve its information gathering.

Group of Seven

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his last meeting with his counterparts in the Group of Seven.

Mr. Lilley: This was a useful meeting at which my right hon. Friend and his colleagues discussed developments in the world economy and the international debt situation.

Cheque Cashing (Controls)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to seek to extend to building societies the controls on cheque cashing which currently apply to banks.

Mr. Lilley: Statutory limitations on banking services also apply to building societies carrying on banking services.

Car Tax

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total revenue from tax on new cars in 1987-88; and what is the estimated revenue for 1988-89.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer, 14 February 1989]: The total revenue from tax (VAT and car tax) on new cars in 1987-88 is estimated to have been £3·4 billion. The VAT element in this figure has been estimated from consumers' expenditure and businesses' purchases of cars, on which tax is not deductible.

Car tax revenue for 1988-89 is estimated at £1·3 billion. An estimate of VAT on new vehicles for 1988-89 is not available.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total revenue from value added tax on fuel in 1987-88; and what is the estimated revenue for 1988-89.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 14 February 1989]: The total VAT revenue on road fuel for 1987-88 is estimated from consumers' expenditure statistics to have been £1 billion. An estimate for 1988-89 is not available.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power

75. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what will be the eventual annual cost to industry of the higher electricity prices arising from the requirement to develop nuclear power.

76. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what will be the eventual annual cost to industry of the higher electricity prices arising from the requirement to develop nuclear power.

77. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what will be the eventual annual cost to industry of the higher electricity prices arising from the requirement to develop nuclear power.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Nuclear power makes an invaluable contribution to the secure supplies of electricity which are vital to keep industry running. The costs of nuclear power are already in the price of electricity; this will not change after privatisation.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has for the continuance of research and development in nuclear power following privatisation; what is to be the future role of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Research and development into nuclear power will continue to be needed by the privatised electricity supply industry. The UKAEA will continue to carry out contract research and development for the privatised esi as well as for its many other customers, as required.

Electricity (Advertising)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals exist within the Electricity Council for mounting a pre-flotation corporate advertising campaign; what is its current corporate advertising budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Corporate advertising is a commercial matter for the electricity industry. I have asked the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the current propects for the Severn barrage scheme in view of latest calculations on generation costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The studies on the Severn barrage are nearing completion, and a report is expected in a few months. The report will not include financing and related issues, which will be addressed in the timescale of electricity privatisation. Prospects for a barrage scheme will be a matter for commercial judgment under the terms of the Electricity Bill before the House. It would therefore be inappropriate for me to comment at this stage.

Pipeline and Storage System

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made concerning the transfer of the Government pipeline and storage system to the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Peter Morrison: An Order in Council transferring to the Secretary of State for Defence all property, rights and liabilities relating to the Government oil and pipeline storage system has today been laid before Parliament. The order is due to come into force on 1 April 1989 on which day my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will assume responsibility for the system.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Watercourses

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Taper Length river at Mill lane, Ballycarry, county Antrim, became a designated watercourse; for how long maintenance work thereon has been the responsibility of the Department of Agriculture (drainage division) Northern Ireland; what maintenance has been carried out during each of the last four years to this watercourse; if he plans to de-designate this watercourse; and what further maintenance-remedial work is planned for the Taper Length watercourse.

Mr. Viggers: The Redhall burn and Redhall branch drain (part of which is known historically as the Taper Length) were designated as minor watercourses by the Northern Ireland Drainage Council on 15 April 1969 and from that date the Department of Agriculture was responsible for deciding on the need for maintenance work.

No maintenance work has been carried out in the last 4 years.

The Drainage Council de-designated the watercourses on 7 November 1988 and from that date maintenance became the responsibility of the riparian landowners. The Department can therefore have no plans for further maintenance.

Land Registry

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average length of time required by the Land Registry in Northern Ireland to process a transaction.

Mr. Needham: The completion times for dealings vary a great deal depending on the type of dealing, its complexity, the form in which it was submitted and its dependence on other related dealings.

Statistics on processing times are not maintained but, on the basis of a random sample of cases, the average times are as follows:

	Working days
	Cases not queried	Cases queried
Dealings of whole	34	86
Transfers of part	81	143
Leases	94	200

Housing

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his reply of 11 January, Official Report, columns 697-98, if he will seek a report from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive as to why the lowest tender from a contractor, having been selected by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive as one of the 10 contractors suitable to tender for the scheme at Lower crescent, Comber, was not accepted.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. The chief executive has advised me that the lowest tender was not accepted as the tenderer had recently been awarded another Housing Executive contract which, together with the Lower crescent, Comber contract would have exceeded the financial capacity available to the tenderer.

Gipsy Caravans

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his reply of 24 January, Official Report, columns 489-90, what was the extent of support given towards the replacement of the two caravans which were burnt at the site at the junction of Middletown/Rookford roads, Armagh.

Mr. Needham: None.

Education and Library Boards

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the youth training programme financial allocations to the education and library boards in Northern Ireland for 1989-90.

Dr. Mawhinney: Details should be available next month, and I shall then write to the hon. Gentleman.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many dairy cows are being injected with bovine somatotropin in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: None.

Dogs

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the estimated costs of administration, per dog licensed, of the dog registration scheme currently operating in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 14 February 1989]: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Security Payments

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the number or total value of single payments made to single parents in the past four years.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 February 1989]: The available information is as follows:

	Single Payments[1]
	Number	Value £
May 1985 to May 1986	56,500	6,961,000
May 1986 to May 1987	58,900	6,146,000

[1] Estimates based on a 5 per cent. sample.

I regret that corresponding figures are not available for 1987-88.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Race Relations and Equal Opportunities

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will describe his Department's principal achievements in respect of race relations and equal opportunity since May 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold To enable women to maintain their careers the Department has developed arrangements for part-time working, job sharing, and working from home, and has a well-established scheme for the reinstatement of staff in all grades who resign for domestic or associated health reasons and wish to return to work within five years. The Department monitors the recruitment of ethnic minority staff.

To increase the awareness of staff, a majority of the training courses run by the Department now include sessions on equal opportunities. There are also a number of courses aimed specifically at women, including management training for women.

The Government have pursued a range of measures to improve the response of the education service to ethnic diversity. These include action on initial and in-service training to prepare teachers for teaching in a multi-ethnic society; measures to increase the supply of ethnic minority teachers; an Education support grant activity which has supported some 120 projects, many designed specifically to promote good race relations; measures to promote good practice in teaching English to pupils for whom it is not the mother tongue; GCSE criteria which require that syllabuses should be free of bias and should take account of ethnic and cultural diversity; and remits to the National Curriculum Council and the Schools Examination and Assessment Council which require them to take account of the ethnic and cultural diversity of British society and of the importance of promoting equal opportunities for all pupils regardless of ethnic origin and gender.

The Department is committed to equal opportunities for boys and girls in education and its policies for education are designed to reinforce them. Our White Paper "Better Schools" issued in 1985 made it clear that there is no place for discrimination in the curriculum on the ground of sex. Our policy statement "Science 5-16," also issued in 1985, emphasised that career opportunities should be kept open for both boys and girls. The national curriculum will ensure that all pupils experience a coherent education, and prevent premature specialisation by either girls or boys.

Astronomy

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he proposes to take as a result of resolution A2 on the adverse environmental impacts on astronomy passed at the XXth general assembly of the International Astronomical Union.

Mr. Jackson: Resolution A2 was sponsored by the Commission on the Protection of Observatories, of which the United Kingdom is a member. Britain has extensive experience of taking special measures to protect radio telescopes from harmful interference, under the oversight of a committee including representatives of the radioastronomy community. All the major British optical and infra-red telescopes are located abroad and special measures have been taken by the host states to minimise the level of background illumination. The United Kingdom, with its partners in the European Space Agency, is currently considering a report of a working group set up to consider the problems resulting from debris in space.

Crops Potential

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research his Department is sponsoring on the potential of crops to replace the use of wood or fossil fuels in producing materials such as paint, plastics and paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Over recent years the Department has provided funds to the Agricultural and Food Research Council, through the science budget, to carry out research in molecular biology. This has led to the development of genetic engineering techniques for plants, and, in particular, gene insertion. This biotechnology can now be used to develop crops for specific industrial uses. My right hon. Friend's recent allocation of increased science budget funds to the AFRC will further support the research base in genetic engineering for such purposes. Some of this funding will be used to establish a Government-funded LINK programme of co-ordinated research on crops for industrial use involving AFRC, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Science and Engineering Research Council and several universities and industrial companies. Depending on the companies involved, the programme will be concerned with fibre production for paper pulp and construction materials, oil production for paints, plastics and lubricants and with the production of high value pharmaceuticals.

Top-up Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many responses he has now received to the "Top-up Loans for Students" White Paper; how many of these were supportive and how many opposed; and if he will place the responses in the Library.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has received some 140 formal responses to the White Paper, expressing a variety of views. It is for the persons and bodies who have responded to decide whether they wish to make their views available to the House. The responses have given us no reason to believe that our plans are not well-judged. We have had helpful views and suggestions on matters on which we particularly sought comment. We shall take these into account as we proceed in our discussions with financial institutions and other bodies to develop a top-up loans scheme for introduction in the autumn of 1990.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has had from Manchester Education Committee in regard to his White Paper "Top-up Loans for Students"; what reply he is sending; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has received a letter from the chairman of Manchester Education Committee, which he is considering with all the other responses to the White Paper.

Olympus Satellite

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what direct funding has been made for provision of the Olympus satellite education channel to institutions and other bodies in this country; how much indirect funding has been made through such sources as training boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Department provides no direct funding for the Olympus satellite educational channel. The determination of any indirect funding would involve disproportionate cost. The satellite is due to be launched next summer. Free transmission time is being made available for nine hours per day to educational and training bodies for a period of two years.

Alpha Projects

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the extra money allocated over the next three years to research councils to fund individual projects is designed to increase the proportion of high quality alpha projects which may be funded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The extra money allocated by my right hon. Friend is intended to increase the number and value of high quality alpha projects funded by the research councils. Whether it will increase the proportion of alpha-rated projects which can be funded will depend on the total number of applications graded alpha and research council decisions concerning the sums to be allocated to research grants.

COMETT Program

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action the Government propose to take in the light of the European Council's decision by majority vote to adopt a second phase of the COMETT program on the basis of article 128 of the European Community Treaty alone.

Mr. Jackson: As reported by my right hon. Friend, the Minister of State for Employment in his statement to the House on 22 December 1988 at columns 468-79, the second phase of the community action programme in education and training for technology was agreed by a majority vote at the Labour and Social Affairs Council on 16 December 1988, with a budget of £130 million over the five years 1 January 1990 to 31 December 1994.

COMETT is a potentially useful programme, but the Government consider that the legal base on which the second phase was adopted to be inadequate. The original COMETT programme was adopted on the basis of article 128 and article 235 of the Treaty of Rome. Article 235 requires unanimity for the adoption of a decision while article 128 requires a simple majority only. COMETT II was brought forward for decision on the basis of article 128 alone. In the Government's view, and that of a number of other member states, article 128 alone cannot properly be used as a basis for a decision including detailed implementing measures for spending programmes over several years. The United Kingdom was unable to secure a more appropriate legal base and therefore had to vote against the proposal. It is now preparing to institute formal proceedings against the Council in the European Court of Justice to have the decision annulled. The United Kingdom will, however, stand ready to discuss the adoption of a second phase of the COMETT programme on an appropriate legal base.

Preparation for the implementation of the decision will continue while the case is before the court. Pending the decision of the court, the United Kingdom will co-operate fully with the Commission in the implementation of the programme.

TRANSPORT

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make vehicle licensing bureau records available to the Salvation Army free of charge for the forwarding of communications of missing persons on behalf of their families.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information about keepers of vehicles is released free only to the police, local authorities investigating offences and the keepers themselves. Other enquirers must be law show reasonable cause for their inquiry and pay a £3·50 fee. Data protection principles require all inquiries to be treated on their individual merits.

I am writing to the hon. and learned Gentleman.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wansdyke of 2 February, Official Report, columns 367-68, whether his projection of the extinguishment of all debt on the Severn bridge by the year 2006 takes account of the diversion of a proportion of traffic from the existing Severn bridge to the new planed Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons the budget for local authority current expenditure on technical and supervisory services was combined with the budget for roads in table 8.1 of the public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The separate subhead for professional and technical services has been abolished and the expenditure charged out to roads and public transport expenditure to bring its treatment into line with that on local transport capital expenditure and with most other services. The change was agreed with the local authority associations.

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the reasons for the underspend on local authority capital expenditure on roads and parking for 1987-88 being revised from £145 million to £65 million in chart 8.23 of the public expenditure White Paper in 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimated underspend given in Cm. 288-11 was based on recorded expenditure for the first quarter of 1987-88 only.

In its evidence to the Transport Select Committee the Department (footnote to table 3, page 14 of the Committee's report, HC 442) drew attention to the uncertainty attached to these estimates.

The revised figure shown in chart 8.23 of Cm. 621 is based on spending returns for the four quarters of 1987-8.

The consolidated outturn figures for 1987-88 are not expected before mid-1989. They will be published in next year's public expenditure White Paper.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what amount he plans to spend on road improvement schemes in association with the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We plan to spend more than £220 million on a large programme of major trunk road improvements in Kent, some of which will help improve access to the tunnel. These schemes, some of which were brought forward for the tunnel, include major improvements to the M20, the main route between London and the tunnel.

In addition, based on current estimates, we expect to pay Kent county council approximately £38 million in the form of transport supplementary grant towards Channel tunnel-related schemes in its programme.

The impact of the Channel tunnel is one of many factors taken into account in the design of motorway and trunk road schemes.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there is a standard definition of heavy goods vehicles, for statistical and administrative purposes in each of the 12 EEC countries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no standard definition of heavy goods vehicle for administrative purposes in the 12 EEC countries. Each country has its own definition, mostly based on gross vehicle weight—for example, 2·8 tonnes in West Germany, 3·0 tonnes in France and 3·5 tonnes in the United Kingdom. For driver licensing purposes, most countries require a special licence only for vehicles in excess of 7·5 tonnes gvw. The only statistical definition is that all goods vehicles over 6 tonnes gvw must be heavy goods vehicles. Again most countries adopt the same limit, which they use for administrative purposes.

OECD has proposed a standard definition in the road safety area that uses the 3·5 tonnes limit which is used in the United Kingdom.

A1 (Improvements)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a statement following the public inquiry into improvements to the A1 between Wetherby and Dishforth in North Yorkshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A decision will be announced when the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment have completed their consideration of the inspector's report.

Free Transport

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to which member states of the European Economic Community provide free transport for (a) pensioners, (b) disabled people and (c) unemployed people on (i) buses and (ii) trains.

Mr. Portillo: The authorities of member states of the European Community run a variety of concessionary travel schemes for pensioners and the disabled. I do not, however, have up-to-date detailed information on these schemes or on whether there are any schemes for the unemployed. There are also some commercially operated schemes. These include a scheme for reduced fares for the elderly operated by 18 European railways including British Rail which is open to the elderly of all the countries concerned.

Roads (Lane Rental Contracts)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the value to road users since 1984-85 of the use of lane rental contracts in road renewal programmes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Lane rental contracts for major maintenance schemes on trunk roads, including motorways, are estimated to have saved about 2,000 days of lane closures worth about £35 million in reduced delay costs to road users.

M1 (Closure)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why two lanes of the northbound carriageway of the M1 motorway were closed to vehicular traffic on 20 January in the vicinity of junction 2.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The closures were necessary, for safety reasons, to replace worn cats eyes. The work was over by 3 pm before the evening peak.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, due to the large volume of traffic attempting to leave London and travel north on Fridays, he will consider restricting maintenance work on the northbound carriageway of the M1 motorway to emergency workings only on such days.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Wherever possible to already avoid peak period working. It is not practical to remove traffic management controls, such as contraflows, on Fridays when major maintenance works are in progress.

Further major maintenance work on the M1 is planned later this year in Bedfordshire.

Railways (State Assistance)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the level of state assistance per head of population in pound sterling for each of the European Economic Community countries towards the publicly owned railway system in each country.

Mr. Portillo: The most recent information available to my Department on the public subsidy levels of European Community railway systems is contained in the ninth Commission report on the transposed annual accounts of railway undertakings for 1985, [COM (88)739 final], a copy of which is in the Library of the House. There are substantial variations between countries in accounting systems including the writing off of debt and in the arrangements for financial support, and the figures contained in the report provide only a broad comparison. Other things being equal, the railway which is the most efficient will need the least grant.

London Area Model

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the reasons for discontinuance of use of the London area model at the Transport and Road Research Laboratory; what are his responses to the report on sensitivity tests on the model; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department commissioned an audit by consultants. The results were received last spring.

These identified deficiencies with the London area model (LAM) including its representation of road and rail capacity levels, inadequate representation of peak demands, and an inability to reproduce travel patterns experienced in recent years—particularly the growth in travel demand which has taken place since travelcards were introduced.

It was decided to withdraw the model from further use. I will be placing a copy of the consultant's audit report in the Library.

The transport and road research laboratory's experimental London area model (LAM) was designed to assist in the analysis of strategic policy options. The London Planning Advisory Committee (LPAC) commissioned consultants to test four transport options using the model.

The base scenario portrayed in the report by LPAC's consultants did not represent current Government policies. The conclusions drawn were not a realistic assessment of the likely outcome. The base against which other policies are compared is ill-founded. The options described in the LPAC scenarios have included the impact of selective road improvements, stricter parking controls, selective radial rail improvements and new RER style railways. None was suitable for testing using LAM.

The sensitivity testing work was commissioned by LPAC. The Department received a copy of the report in late January. It is for LPAC to publish the results if they so wish.

London Underground (Crime)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action is being taken to increase the effectiveness of the British Transport police and staff of London Underground Limited in preventing crime on London Underground.

Mr. Portillo: New area police stations will be opened at Finsbury Park, Wembley Park and Hammersmith by April. The increasing practice of allocating officers to area police stations allows much quicker response times. The complement of the Underground division of the British Transport Police in 1985 was 280. This was increased to 350 following the publication of my Department's report on crime on the Underground and I announced a further increase in December to 400. About 80 officers of the Metropolitan and City police forces are carrying out duties on the Underground while the division is being brought up to strength.

Under the "customer care initiative", staff of London Underground Limited are being trained to become more aware of customers needs and more available to the public. Courses for new recruits and refresher courses will now include specific training in passenger security. London Underground Limited has also recruited 28 additional staff to help carry out anti-crime measures being tested at 13 Underground stations. These schemes are examples of the measures being taken by London Underground to combat crime.

M1-A1 Link

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to make any changes to the route of the proposed M1-A1 link road at Naseby; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It remains my right hon. Friend's intention to build the link road on the line authorised as a trunk road by the relevant orders. This will take the road north of Naseby. We are pressing on with the remaining statutory procedures for this section of the road. We expect to start site works in the spring for the section of road from east of Kettering to Thrapston.

Recent press reports stem from a judgement by the Court of Appeal which confirmed the validity of the decision by my right hon. Friend the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport to adopt the published route. They took this decision after considering all the evidence including the report of the inspector who conducted a long and searching public inquiry into the matter in 1984-85.

Alternative routings at Naseby, and the importance of the battlefield, were discussed at length. The hard choice was between preserving the whole battlefield area and protecting the environment elsewhere.

My right hon. Friends were satisfied that even the effects on the battlefield and its historic claims did not outweigh environmental and other arguments.

The roads will cross the southern edge of the battlefield at low level in a natural valley. We do not propose to reopen the debate now.

We intend to complete construction of the whole link road as soon as possible.

Clapham Junction (Accident)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when and where the public inquiry into the Clapham junction railway accident will be held.

Mr. Portillo: The formal investigation into the Clapham junction railway accident will be held before Mr. Anthony Hidden QC and will begin on Monday 20 February 1989 at 10.30 am in Westminster Central Hall, Storey's Gate, London SW1.

The investigation will be held in public. Advertisements are being placed in the press.

Transport Supplementary Grant (West Sussex)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the amount of transport supplementary grant paid to West Sussex county council for each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 13 February 1989]: The information is as follows:

Year	Grant (£ million)
1989-90	1·526
1988-89	2·730
1987-88	3·089
1986-87	3·622
1985-86	3·241

Most major schemes in the county's TSG-supported programme are now complete or nearly complete. Expenditure has therefore tailed off. Expenditure on new schemes has not yet compensated for this reduction. The A259 Rustington bypass has been newly accepted for support in 1989-90.

Military Airports (Scotland)

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many military airports there are in Scotland.

Mr. Neubert: I have been asked to reply.

There are four permanent Royal Air Force airfields in Scotland and one operated by the Procurement Executive of the Ministry of Defence. RAF Stornoway, which is normally operated as a civil airport by Highlands and Islands Airports Limited, is also activated as a military airfield for up to six weeks a year. In addition there are service units located at a number of other civil airfields from which regular military flying takes place.

SCOTLAND

Single European Market

73. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to prepare industry in Scotland for the advent of the single European market in 1992.

Mr. Lang: In addition to the Government's "Europe Open for Business" campaign which covers the whole of the United Kingdom, my Department is working closely with the Scottish Development Agency, enterprise trusts, chambers of commerce, and other organisations in Scotland, and both Ministers and officials are taking part in an extensive series of seminars and business meetings throughout Scotland. My right hon. and learned Friend has also established the single market committee of the Scottish Economic Council to examine the impact of the Single Market on the economy of Scotland and to submit proposals to encourage those concerned to prepare for it. Our aim is to ensure that every sector of industry and commerce in Scotland is fully prepared for the challenges and opportunities which the single market will present.

Academic Tenure

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to end academic tenure in the central institutions.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is at only three central institutions where the contractual conditions of service appear to contain restrictive grounds for dismissal of academic staff ("academic tenure"). The 1987 agreement on salaries and conditions in the grant-aided colleges contained a statement of intent by both management and staff sides to agree a common set of conditions of service applying to all academic staff in the sector. We look to the management side to deal with anomalies such as "academic tenure" in the context of that exercise.

Labour Statistics

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of unemployed young males and females in the Glasgow, Shettleston constituency and of the number of jobs, excluding YTS, available to them.

Mr. Lang: On 13 October 1988 (the latest date for which information is available) there were 1,248 male and 500 female unemployed claimants under the age of 25 in the Glasgow, Shettleston parliamentary constituency. Vacancy statistics are not available on a parliamentary constituency or age basis. However, the total numbers of vacancies notified and remaining unfilled on 7 October 1988 at the Glasgow, Central and Parkhead jobcentres, which inter alia serve residents of the Glasgow, Shettleston parliamentary constituency, were 1,379 and 445 respectively. It is estimated that only around one third of all vacancies nationally are notified to jobcentres.

This information is available in the Library.

Woodland Grants

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost to public funds of the repeat consultation which the Forestry Commission is conducting, in respect of those schemes approved under the forestry grant scheme which have been transferred to the woodland grant scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: These further consultations are normally very straightforward and consultees usually have little to add to their previous comments. Detailed records of the costs to public funds of these consultations are not kept separately, but they are marginal in relation to the total cost of operating the consultation procedures.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the number of trees that will be lost from planting in 1988-89, in consequence of the repeat consultation required in respect of those schemes approved under the forestry grant scheme which have been transferred to the woodland grant scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Plans of operations approved by the Forestry Commission under its grant schemes cover a five-year period and do not specify planting by individual years. It is not therefore possible to say how many trees which might have been planted in 1988-89 under the forestry grant scheme will not now be planted in that year because the applicants have decided to transfer to the woodland grant scheme.

Water Charges

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions have been held with representatives of (a) textile, (b) fish processing and (c) food processing industries about the implications of metered water charges to be levied from 1 April 1989 subsequent to the implementation of part V, section 25 and schedule 5 to the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Metered water charges are set by the water authorities, the regional and islands councils, who are free to consult industries in their areas. The extent of discussions between the authorities and the particular industries mentioned is not known.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to seek to amend part V, section 25 and schedule 5 to the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987; and if he will make a statement on the effect of proposed metered water charges on (a) existing industries and (b) inward investment to Scotland.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: There are no plans to amend part V, section 25 of and schedule 5 to the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987.

The new arrangements require water authorities to adopt an even-handed approach which will be fair to all classes of consumer. This will not increase the total operating cost of supplying water but the cost to each class of consumer may vary. Metered charges have risen but for businesses and industries with low water consumption and high rateable values there could be reductions in costs, resulting from the abolition of the public water rate. Also, many who pay the non-domestic water rate, typically commercial and small business ratepayers, can expect to benefit.

Scotland remains an attractive location for companies seeking a European base. I would not envisage that the increased metered water charges would have a significant effect on the ability to attract new industries.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the metered water charges to be levied per cubic metre in each Scottish regional authority area after 1 April 1989 subsequent to the implementation of part V, paragraph 25 and schedule 5 to the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987; and if he will show the percentage increase or decrease in each case from charges in the financial year 1988-89.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The new charges set by the regional councils and the percentage increases are:

	Metered water charge from 1 April 1989 pence per cubic metre	Increase over the charge in 1988-89 per cent.
Borders	28·00	27
Central	21·00	24
Dumfries and Galloway	28·20	64
Fife	26·00	18
Grampian	43·00	110
Highland	33·50	72
Lothian	28·70	53
Strathclyde	27·84	69
Tayside	32·00	39

In Borders, Dumfries and Galloway, Grampian, Highland and Strathclyde, the abolition of the public water rate will provide some offsetting savings in charges. For some consumers, these savings will more than compensate for the increase in metered charges.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number and source of representations he has received: (a) supporting, and (b) opposing proposed metered water charges to be levied after 1 April 1989, subsequent to the implementation of part V, paragraph 25 and schedules to the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Representations expressing concern about the planned meter water charges have been received on behalf of nine trade and business associations and six companies.

Water Supply (Aluminium Levels)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has commissioned into the effect upon humans of water supplies containing levels of aluminium in excess of the level stated in EEC directives.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Departments take note of research carried out by the water industry and other bodies and obtain the advice of a specialist medical committee on health aspects. Research into the effects of aluminium in drinking water has not been commissioned directly by the Scottish Office.

Local Authority Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each district council area in Scotland (a) the value of the grant safety net payable in 1989-90, (b) the estimate of population which was used when calculating the community charge which would be levied in 1988-89, (c) the needs assessments on which the projections of 1988-89 community charge levels were based and (d) the average rate bill per adult in 1988-89.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table. The figures in column 1 represent a transitional supplement to grant paid both to regional and district councils in respect of the population of the district area. This will be phased out within three to five years. The projections of community charge levels for 1988-89 were calculated on the basis of projected budgeted expenditure not client group assessments.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the aggregate Exchequer grant paid to all local authorities in Scotland for each financial year since 1978-79 (a) in cash terms and (b) at 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table:

£ million

	Cash terms	1988-89 prices
1978-79	1,125	2,453
1979-80	1,300	2,425

1987-88	2,092	2,222
1988-89	2,371	2,371

Notes:

1. The figures for 1986-87 to 1988-89 will be varied following the next rate support grant order. The figures reflect selective and general abatement of grant, except that for 1988-89 no adjustment has been made for grant penalties since they will be restored for authorities which bring their expenditure down to guidelines on outturn.
2. The GDP deflator has been used to convert RSG to 1988-89 prices.

Forestry

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has for the sale of Forestry Commission forests after 31 March when the present programme of rationalisation comes to an end; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the current criteria which define the conditions under which Forestry Commission forests may and may not be sold; and whether it is his intention to apply those criteria in respect of any proposed Forestry Commission disposals after 31 March.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission's land disposals programme is at present being reviewed. My right hon. and learned Friend will make a statement to the House when the review has been completed.

The main considerations that the Forestry Commissioners are currently required to take into account in selecting areas for sale have been set out in the form of ministerial guidelines. These are reproduced in appendix V to the commission's 1981-82 annual report, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Flood Damage

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is yet in a position to estimate the total cost of the damage and for reparation to those areas of banking which were breached as a result of the recent flooding at the river Conon, Rosshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My noble Friend the Minister of State has called for detailed reports of floodbank and other damage on the river Conon and elsewhere. He will wish to give these reports careful consideration before he is in a position to make any statement.

Universities

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has yet responded to the invitation from the chairman of the Standing Committee of the Scottish Universities to end the requirement that the courts of the four ancient Scottish universities should be chaired by the rector.

Mr. Rifkind: I replied yesterday to Principal McNicol's request by confirming that a provision is included in the Self-Governing Schools Etc. (Scotland) Bill, introduced today, to end the automatic right of the rector to chair the court of the universities of St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Glasgow and Edinburgh. Given the role of the court, I agree that it would be more appropriate that the court as a whole should be able to choose its own chairman from among those members who are neither staff nor students at the university.

Rating Reform

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police officers in tied housing by district in Scotland will have to pay the personal community charge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding reply 14 February 1989]: All police officers, whether or not they occupy accommodation provided by the police authority, will have a statutory liability to pay the personal community charge. On 31 December the total number of officers occupying accommodation provided by police authorities in Scotland was 2,169; the information held centrally does not provide a breakdown by district.

EMPLOYMENT

Engineers and Scientists

79. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which Organisation for Economic Co-Operation and Development countries have a greater number of engineers and scientists per 100,000 of the employed work force than the United Kingdom.

80. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which Organisation for Economic Co-Operation and Development countries have a greater number of engineers and scientists per 100,000 of the employed work force than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cope: International comparisons of numbers of engineers and scientists on a common definition are not available.

"Employment for the 1990s"

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received so far following the publication of the White Paper, "Employment for the 1990s"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: To date, over 600 organisations and individuals have made representations about the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s". The overwhelming majority have expressed interest in and support for the establishment of the new training and enterprise councils.

Youth Employment

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his proposals to remove the barriers to the employment of 16 to 18-year-olds.

Mr. Cope: Clause 8 of the Employment Bill will repeal the mass of archaic legislation restricting the hours young persons over minimum school-leaving age but under 18 can work. It will also remove other unnecessary restrictions on their employment and related administrative burdens on employers. This will increase the employment opportunities available to young persons and remove barriers to flexibility in business. Necessary health and safety protections for young persons will not be affected.

Working Women

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the differential between the number of full-time working women in Cornwall earning less than £100 per week and the figure for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Lee: Estimates from the new earnings survey in April 1988 indicate that some 31 per cent. of full-time female employees in Cornwall on adult rates, whose gross earnings were not affected by absence, earned less than £100 per week. The equivalent figure for the United Kingdom as a whole is 16 per cent. Differences in the mix of occupations and industries between Cornwall and the United Kingdom as a whole contribute to regional differences in the distribution of earnings.

Employment Training

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to revise the current operations of the employment training scheme, with specific regard to the position of those going into the scheme who are in receipt of income support or unemployment benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to do so.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of filled places on the employment training programme (a) nationally and (b) in north Staffordshire.

Mr. Nicholls: At 3 February 1989 there were 137,100 people on employment training in Great Britain. Figures are not separately available for north Staffordshire, but there were about 2,600 people training in Staffordshire as a whole on the same date.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the employment training programme's filled places are (a) project-based and (b) employment-based (i) nationally and (ii) in north Staffordshire.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the precise form requested. It is not possible to give information based only on the number on employment training and the estimates provided in the following table include those people on community programme conditions who are training with employment training managers. Figures are not separately available for north Staffordshire and have been provided for Staffordshire and a whole.

Employment Training: Estimated Division of Filled Places at 3 February 1989

	National	Staffordshire
Project-ased	98,133	2,183
Employment-based	37,839	615
Other	33,839	276
Total	169,195	2,074

Disabled People

Mr. Bowis To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the employment and training opportunities for disabled people.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 6 December 1988 at column 141.

Industrial Relations Training

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it is his policy to make industrial relations training available to local authorities.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no plans to make special provision for local authorities.

Restart

Mrs. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many restart interviews were conducted for each employment service region, between May 1988 and January 1989.

Mr. Lee: The number of restart interviews conducted in each employment service region between May 1988 and January 1989 is shown in the table.

Region	Number of interviews
Northern	110,000
Yorkshire and Humberside	150,000
East Midlands and Eastern	132,000
London and South East	330,000
South West	70,000
Wales	89,000
West Midlands	161,000
North West	242,000
Scotland	182,000
GREAT BRITAIN	1,466,000

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in the most recent 12 month period, how many claimants called for restart interview have failed to attend their interview; how many of those failing to attend are believed to have found work; how many of those failing to attend have not found work; how many failing to atend have had their benefit stopped; how many of these have successfully appealed against the benefit decision; and how many failing to attend have subsequently re-registered as unemployed.

Mr. Lee: Between January and December 1988, a total of 2,970,000 people were called for a restart interview, of which 339,000 were referred to unemployment benefit offices for failing to attend that interview; 24,000 (7 per cent.) of these had their benefit or credits disallowed.

The other information requested is not available.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what safeguards he has taken to ensure the confidentiality of personal information given to his staff by claimants during the course of restart interviews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: It is the employment service's policy that information given to it by its clients, whether written or oral, is always treated in confidence. This policy covers the information given as a result of the restart process.

YTS (Accidents)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of accidents on YTS, fatal, major and minor, for the period October to December 1988.

Mr. Cope: The table provides YTS accident figures for fatal, major and minor injuries for the period 1 October to 31 December 1988:

YTS Accidents 1 October—31 December 1988

Period	[1] Accidents
	Fatalities	[2] Major injuries	Minor injuries
1 October 1988 to 31 December 1988	[3]3	164	803

[1] Training Agency figures have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons. However, the Training Agency's figures will include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments and road traffic accidents which may not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed.

[2] Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.

[3] This figure includes two road traffic accidents.

Bridging Allowance

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds by region, were in receipt of bridging allowance at the end of November 1988, December 1988 and January.

Mr. Cope: Figures for the number of young people in receipt of bridging allowance by region are available only for the middle of each month and are provided in the table.

Bridging Allowance

	November (10 November 1988)	December (8 December 1988)	January (12 January 1989)
East Midlands	1,354	1,164	1,292

Northern	1,028	742	930
Yorkshire and Humberside	1,836	1,392	1,571
Scotland	2,158	1,793	1,813
North West	2,183	2,015	2,234
TOTAL	13,158	10,784	11,994

YTS

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS trainees were in receipt of board and lodging allowance to undertake training away from their home at the end of November 1988, December 1988 and January.

Mr. Cope: I regret that the information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment at the end of November 1988, December 1988 and January 1989, how many people of YTS eligible age, registered with jobcentres or the careers service were awaiting an offer of a YTS place; and, of them, how many were receiving bridging allowance or extended child benefit or income support.

Mr. Cope: I am satisfied that the Training Agency has more than sufficient YTS places available in all areas of the country for all those who apply for one.

Information on numbers receiving bridging allowance (which is available only for the middle of each month) or for those whose parents were receiving extended child benefit is provided in the table. Information on the number of young people receiving income support is not available.

	Numbers receiving Bridging Allowance	Number whose parents receiving Extended Child Benefit
November 1988	13,158	16,444
December 1988	10,784	15,641
January 1989	11,994	1,451

Unemployment Benefit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) for each employment service region, how many claimants each month have been referred to the unemployment benefit service due to doubts over non-availability or doubts about their restricted availability since May 1988;

(2) if he will show, for the 12-month period to end of December 1988, the decisions of adjudication officers on doubtful fresh claims, renewal claims and reviewed claims for unemployment benefit showing the numbers allowed, disallowed, referred to a local tribunal, revised in favour of claimants, revised adversely to claimants and not revised in the following categories of questions (a) employed to full normal extent, (b) engaged in employment, (c) availability, (d) restricted availability, (e) leaving voluntarily, (f) for misconduct, (g) neglecting to avail of employment, (h) refusal of employment, (i) refusal or premature termination of training, (j) refusal to carry out written recommendations and (k) restart.

Mr. Lee: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The relevant statistics have been compiled by the Department of Social Security on a six-monthly basis since January 1988, and no figures are yet available for the period ending December 1988. Statistics relating to individual regions of the employment service are not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

All decisions on claims for unemployment benefit are made by the independent adjudicating authorities and no statistics are kept as to the manner in which the entitlement doubt arose.

Figures on the numbers disallowed for failure to attend a restart interview are not compiled separately.

Subject to these qualifications, the table sets out the available information requested.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will show, from the 1988 labour force survey, by region, including Greater London, and by male and female, the numbers of people who were (a) without jobs and who looked for work in the four weeks before their labour force survey interview and were available to start work within two weeks, who wanted full time jobs, the number who wanted part time jobs and the number who had no preference, (b) unemployed according to the standard labour force survey definition who were looking for full time jobs and the number looking for part time jobs and the number who had no preference, (c) in part time jobs who were looking for a different job with longer hours or looking for an additional job, (d) looking for a different job with shorter hours, (e) claimants not unemployed by the definition using broad International Labour Organisation guidelines on the grounds that they were employed and (f) claimants not unemployed by the conventional labour force survey definition on the grounds that they were employed;

(2) if he will show, from the 1988 labour force survey by region including Greater London, and by male and female, the number of people not counted as unemployed by the definition using broad International Labour Organisation guidelines on the grounds that they had not looked for a job in the four weeks prior to interview, but who stated that they would like a job if one was available, and (a) were available to start work within two weeks and (b) were not available to start work within two weeks;

(3) if he will, from the 1988 labour force survey, publish a table for each Great Britain region and Greater London, by male and female, and claimant status, the numbers of people without work who had looked for a job in the four week reference period, and were available to start work within two weeks.

Mr. Lee: Results from the 1988 labour force survey are not yet available.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will show by region, including Greater London, and by male and female, the number of self-employed people in June 1979, June 1983, June 1984, June 1985, June 1986, June 1987 and June 1988, and show by region, including Greater London, and by male and female the number of people in the working population in June 1979, June 1983, June 1984, June 1985, June 1986, June 1987 and June 1988.

Mr. Lee: Table A shows the estimated numbers of self-employed people for the areas and dates specified. Table B gives the available information for the civilian work force, which is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, participants in work-related Government training programmes and claimant unemployed.

Tourism

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will announce the date for the publication of the review of the English tourist authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The tourism review report is still under consideration. A response will be made in due course.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the review on the section 4 aid scheme to the English tourist board will be completed; if he has any proposals for interim funding whilst aid is suspended; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The tourism review report is under consideration. There are no plans for interim funding.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what grants were made out of the section 4 aid scheme to the North-West tourist board for the last year that figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: During the financial year 1987-88 the English tourist board made offers of assistance under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 totalling £2·062 million to 73 projects in the North-West tourist board area.

Wages Councils

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report those respondents to the wages councils consultative document who supported total abolition of the system and, separately, those who responded otherwise.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not the Government's practice to disclose the positions of respondents to consultation documents except where the individuals or organisations concerned have themselves publicised their views.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the respondents to the wages councils consultative document supported total abolition of the system; and how many responded otherwise.

Mr. Nicholls: Nearly 400 responses have been received. Not all express a clear preference for abolition or retention. An analysis cannot be published until all the responses have been properly categorised.

Workplace and Environment

Mr. Oakes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors he estimates will be necessary to enforce the European workplace and environmental directives.

Mr. Nicholls: Until current draft directives emerge in their final shape from negotiations, it is not possible to state what, if any, implications they might have for requirements for factory inspectors. Resources for the Health and Safety Executive are reviewed annually.

Health and Safety

Mr. Oakes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors there were to enforce the Health and Safety at Work Regulations in each of the years 1986, 1987, 1988 and at the present time, respectively.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 April in each year the total number of factory inspectors responsible for enforcing health and safety at work regulations, who are employed in the Health and Safety Executive's area offices, were:

	Number
1986	540
1987	538·5
1988	514·5
1989[1]	533

[1] 1 February 1989.

In addition to those employed in area offices, at 1 February 1989, a total of 77 factory inspectors were working elsewhere in HSE, in management work in factory inspectorate headquarters, or contributing to policy and standards development. Recruitment to the factory inspectorate is currently under way.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of pensioners, and the percentage of all pensioners, claiming one or more means-tested benefits run by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 18 January at columns 241-42. There is no current way of identifying those pensioners who are in receipt of family credit, but the number is likely to be very small.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average time taken to reply to hon. Members' letters in each of the last six months for which figures can be calculated.

Mr. Moore: From August 1988 to January 1989 a total of 7,852 letters were received for ministerial reply. The average time taken to reply over this period is as follows, with DHSS figures for a year earlier shown in brackets.

(Calendar days)

Month	Average time	Previous year
August 1988	28	(31)
September 1988	31	(34)
October 1988	28	(35)
November 1988	29	(33)
December 1988	30	(39)
January 1989[1]	44	(53)

[1] January figures reflect the reduction in activity over the Christmas and new year holiday period. For replies issued in the first 10 days of February 1989, the average time was 33 days.

Income Support

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds, by region, had made applications for income support on grounds of extreme harship; how many had been granted at the end of November 1988, December 1988 and January; and how many at the same dates had been granted income support on grounds of being within exempted categories, shown by category.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds granted income support because they fell within one of the groups defined in regulations ceased to be collected after October 1988 and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The number of applications from 16 and 17-year-olds on grounds of "severe hardship", and the number of directions given to enable benefit to be paid at each of the dates specified are in the table:

2. Information relates to the number of applications received rather than to the number of individual young people involved. Some individuals may have received more than one direction.
3. Figures are cumulative to the last Friday in each month.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are receiving income support by way of the Department of Social Security offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow; and what were the comparable figures for those in receipt of supplementary benefit in (a) 1979 and (b) 1983.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 26 January 1989 at columns 708-10.

Benefits (Disqualification)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, further to his reply of 25 January, to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood, Official Report, columns 613-14, he will provide the information on referrals and disallowances with reference to non-availability for work separately for men and women.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These statistics are not kept separately for men and women.

Fraudulent Claims

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, in order to prevent fraudulent claims, he will consider requiring all claimants for social security benefit to attend to collect it in person at least once a month, or to provide a doctor's note stating why such attendance is not possible.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. This is not considered to be an effective or efficient means of preventing fraudulent claims.

Overseas Visitors

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what instructions he has given to social security staff on dealing with a claimant who is a visitor to Britain and who alleges benefit is necessary because his or her sponsor has withdrawn sponsorship;

(2) if he will take steps to withdraw eligibility for benefit from visitors from abroad whose sponsors have withdrawn sponsorship.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no provisions for a sponsor to withdraw sponsorship. A sponsored person enters Britain as an immigrant and is typically an elderly parent of the sponsor, who undertakes to provide him with full support including housing. Sponsorship creates a permanent legal liability for a sponsor to maintain the person he has sponsored and this liability is enforced wherever necessary. When, exceptionally, a sponsored immigrant claims income support, social security staff have instructions to contact the sponsor to ensure that he continues to fulfil his undertaking where he has the means. The Department can take proceedings to recover benefit from him if he withdraws support without good cause. These arrangements provide a good safeguard against abuse of the social security system and we have no proposals to change them.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures for public expenditure in 1987-88 prices on standard housing benefit between the years 1982-83 and 1990-91 in the manner of his answer to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North, Official Report, 31 October 1988, column 494.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is in the table. The figures are consistent with those given in my earlier reply. Standard housing benefit was introduced in 1983-84. Prior to this, assistance with housing costs was through the rent rebate and allowance scheme run by the Department of Environment.

£ Million 1987-88 prices Great Britain

	Standard Housing Benefit	Housing Benefit to people not on Income Support
1983-84	1,030	—
1984-85	1,100	—
1985-86	1,110	—
1986-87	1,160	—
1987-88	1,200	—
1988-89	—	1,130
1989-90	—	1,100
1990-91	—	1,100

The relevant information for 1982-83 is contained under the headings "rent rebate" and "rent allowance" in the table given in my earlier reply.

Social Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage of the annual social fund budget allocated for each month of 1988-89 for grants and loans in those offices covering the Nottingham, North constituency; what other social fund claims and payments have been made to date broken down into (i) the number for social fund claims issued and returned for each of grants, budget loans and for crisis loans, (ii) the number of awards, partial awards and refunds for other grants and loans, (iii) the average payment and (iv) the number of awards successful on review; and if he will give the loans for claimant groups E, A and pensioners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The local offices of the Department which serve the Nottingham, North constituency are Nottingham David lane and Nottingham Shakespeare street but their boundaries are not conterminous.

Details of the numbers of applications for social fund loans and grants processed and awarded, listed by local office, including information on budget allocations and expenditure, is available from the information held in the Library. Local offices do not have monthly budgets. To assist local office management there is a national profile of anticipated monthly expenditure which may be adjusted to reflect local demands. Details of the national profile were given in my predecessors reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 11 July 1988 at column 61.

No statistics are maintained on the number of claim and application forms issued to potential social fund claimants and applicants and their representatives. Details of claimants and applicants are not recorded in the format of claimant groups E, A and pensioners.

An analysis of loans awarded by client groups, and details of the number of applications successful on review for each social fund client group in the offices requested for the period to the end of December 1988 are shown in the tables.

Flooding (Highlands)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, following the recent flooding damage in the Scottish Highlands he will (a) now introduce emergency regulations to widen the criteria for eligibility to grants or loans under the current social fund allocation at Inverness Department of Social Security and (b) increase the size of the Inverness Department of Social Security's current social fund allocation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Social fund crisis loans are available to help people meet costs arising from an emergency or disaster where no other help is immediately available. It is not a requirement that the applicant has to be on income support. Budgeting loans and community care grants may also be available in certain circumstances. The manager of the Department's Inverness office has been in touch with the local authority and local police throughout the emergency and has arranged local radio and press publicity about the help available from the social fund. As at 13 February one application for a crisis loan had been made as a result of the flooding. A loan was offered, but the applicant subsequently refused to take it up. There have also been three applications for community care grants, one of which has been awarded, and the other two are under consideration. There is no indication that the office's social fund budget allocation for the current year will be insufficient and we have at present no plans to increase it nor to extend the eligibility criteria.

National Insurance

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has completed his review of national insurance contribution rates for 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: We have reviewed the national insurance contribution rates paid by serving members of Her Majesty's forces, by share fishermen and by volunteer development workers. Following a review by the Government Actuary, the special rates of national insurance contributions paid by members of Her Majesty's forces will be changed. The rate of abatement will be reduced by 0·15 per cent. for both employees and employers to 0·65 per cent. and 0·70 per cent. respectively with effect from 6 April 1989. The special class 2 rate of contributions paid by share fishermen will be reduced from £6·55 a week to £5·80 a week for the 1989-90 tax year.

The special rate of contributions paid by volunteer development workers will be set at the combined class 1 national insurance contribution payable by an employee and his employer at the lower earnings limit for each tax year. The rate payable in the 1989-90 tax year will be £4·30 a week.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Business Seals

18. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will outline steps he plans to take to improve markets for companies involved in the manufacture of business seals.

Mr. Maude: None.

British Shipbuilders

19. Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of British Shipbuilders; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Newton: I last met the chairman of British Shipbuilders on 12 January. We discussed matters of current interest to the corporation.

Inner Cities

20. Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's inner cities initiatives.

Mr. Newton: The inner city task forces have made good progress in meeting their objectives of securing more jobs and training for local people and encouraging local enterprise. Since the task forces began their work in 1986 they have committed about £33 million in support of nearly 1,100 projects. These will generate, or safeguard, nearly 4,000 jobs, facilitate over 23,500 training places and provide support for over 2,600 businesses. Over 450 private sector companies have supported task force projects.

27. Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many projects have been supported by his Department's inner city task forces.

Mr. Forth: The inner city task forces have made good progress in meeting their objectives of securing more jobs and training for local people and encouraging local enterprise. Since the task forces began their work in 1986 they have committed about £33 million to supporting nearly 1,100 projects. These will generate, or safeguard, nearly 4,000 jobs, facilitate over 23,500 training places and provide support for over 2,600 businesses. Over 450 private sector companies have supported task force projects.

66. Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contact he has had with voluntary organisations regarding their work in inner city regeneration.

Mr. Newton: I am in regular contact with voluntary organisations and am well aware of their important contribution to urban regeneration. Since taking up my post as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster I have had meetings with the National Council of Voluntary Organisations, and Outset, and I have spoken at Save the Children and Community Projects Foundation functions.

Companies (Decision-making)

21. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to increase the power of shareholders in company decision-making.

Mr. Maude: No, but the Government intend to bring forward amendments to the Companies Bill which will enable shareholders of private companies to decide whether certain internal procedures should apply in their company. Similarly the Government intend to bring forward amendments to widen the scope of section 459 of the Act so that a shareholder may apply to the court for an order on the ground that the company's affairs are being, or have been, conducted in a manner which is unfairly prejudicial to the members of the company in general.

Companies (Political Donations)

22. Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to bring forward legislation further regulating grants from companies to political parties.

34. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to bring forward legislation further regulating grants from companies to political parties.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the answer that I gave today to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. Hughes).

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to bring forward legislation further regulating grants from companies to political parties.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 9 February 1989]: No.

Consumer Credit

23. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the increase in personal consumer credit in the last year.

Mr. Maude: About £5·9 billion.

EC (Competition Policy)

24. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to meet the new European Community Commissioner responsible for competition policy.

Mr. Maude: I expect to see Sir Leon Brittan later this month.

59. Sir David Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what advice he is offering the European Commission on developing its policies for dealing with monopoly and restraint of trade.

Mr. Maude: My Department is in regular contact with the European Commission on a range of matters concerning the development and implementation of EC competition policy. In common with other member states, the United Kingdom also has a formal role in advising the Commission on individual cases and policy proposals through the advisory committee on restrictive practices and dominant positions.

61. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has discussed the harmonisation of monopolies and mergers legislation with the responsible European Commissioner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State discussed competition policy issues with Commissioner Sir Leon Brittan on 30 January.

Electronics and Telecommunications

25. Dr. Hampson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will rank the major American, Japanese and European companies in the electronics and telecommunications markets by total group sales.

Mr. Forth: According to the 1988-89 edition of "The Times 1000" publication, the international ranking by group sales or turnover of the top 10 major electronics and telecommunications companies, excluding postal and telephone systems operators, is as follows:

	Group sales £ billion
1. IBM (United States of America)	31·7
2. General Electric (United States of America)	22·9
3. Hitachi (Japan)	21·8
4. Matsushita (Japan)	18·0
5. Siemens (Germany)	16·5
6. Philips (Netherlands)	15·0
7. Toshiba (Japan)	14·5
8. CGE (France)	12·1
9. NEC (Japan)	10·7
10. Mitsubishi Electric (Japan)	9·2

Multi-fibre Arrangement

26. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the result of recent European Economic Community negotiations with China on the multi-fibre arrangement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The negotiations between China and the European Community for a new bilateral textile agreement under the multi-fibre arrangement were concluded in December 1988. The text of the agreement reached is set out in the annex to Council decision 88/656/EEC which is published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, dated 31 December 1988, reference OJL 380, which is available in the Library of the House.

Full details of the application of the agreement in each member state, in the form of an EEC implementing regulation, are still awaited from the Commission. The agreement has been provisionally applied by the Council of Ministers from 1 January 1989. The agreement will be submitted to Council for final approval in due course.

Manufactured Trade

28. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest estimate of the deficit in manufactured trade for 1988-89.

Mr. Alan Clark: The balance of trade in manufactured goods in 1988 is provisionally estimated to have been in deficit by £14·3 billion.

41. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest estimate of the deficit in manufactured trade for 1988-89.

Mr. Alan Clark: The balance of trade in manufactured goods in 1988 is provisionally estimated to have been in deficit by £14·3 billion.

"Action for Cities"

29. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many offers of assistance have resulted from the "Action for Cities" presentations.

Mr. Newton: More than 400 of the firms represented at the seven "Action for Cities" working breakfasts held during 1988 expressed an interest in supporting the Government's inner city initiatives.

Chatlines

30. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with Oftel regarding the provision of chatline services.

Mr. Atkins: Both my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I meet the Director of Telecommunications from time to time. At those meetings many significant telecommunications topics, including chatline services, have been covered.

Companies Bill

31. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the terms of the Companies Bill [Lords].

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 9 February at column 754.

42. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received on the terms of the Companies Bill [Lords].

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 9 February at column 754.

Securities and Investments Board

32. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend and I will be meeting the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board today. A range of topics concerning the regulation of financial services will be discussed.

Mergers

33. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has of spending on mergers by companies in 1989.

52. Mr. Ted Garret: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has of spending on mergers by companies in 1989.

Mr. Maude: Information for 1989 is not yet available. Statistics of acquisitions and mergers by industrial and commercial companies within the United Kingdom in 1988 were published in British Business on Friday 10 February.

Public Purchasing

35. Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will seek to ensure that public purchasing from abroad should be on terms which do not unfairly or illegally disadvantage home producers.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes, indeed.

EC Trade Mark Office

36. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress in London's bids to host the European Economic Community trade mark office.

Mr. Newton: Ten states originally submitted bids to host the Community trade mark office. London was included in a shortlist of four drawn up by the European Commission in 1987. The final choice, which requires unanimity, will be made by the Council of Ministers. It is not possible to predict when it is likely to reach a decision.

Personal Communications

37. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response he has had to his Department's consultation paper entitled "Personal Communications in the 1990s".

Mr. Atkins: The publication of this document on 26 January has stimulated much interest. More than 700 copies have been distributed on request. Recipients have until 28 April in which to return comments.

Overseas Companies

38. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many overseas companies set up operations in Britain in 1988.

Mr. Atkins: According to the latest figures known to the Invest in Britain Bureau, during the first three quarters of 1988, 263 inward investment decisions were made to locate in the United Kingdom. These include the establishment of a new business, expansion or acquisition of an existing business and involvement in joint venture.

New Businesses

39. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many new businesses started in the past year employed (a) up to 10 people, (b) up to 100 people and (c) more than 100 people; what are the comparable figures for the year up to 3 May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: In 1987, the latest year for which estimates were published, the number of new businesses registering for VAT in the United Kingdom was 205,000. In 1980, the earliest available year, the comparable figure is 158,000. Although information on the numbers of people employed is not recorded at registration, the estimates of turnover suggest that most employed less than 100.

Chambers of Commerce

40. Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of the chambers of commerce; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Newton: I met representatives of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce on 25 January. A wide range of matters were discussed.

Companies (Performance)

43. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures he proposes to take to enable investors to make fair comparisons of company performance.

Mr. Maude: The Companies Bill contains provisions that will make it easier for investors to compare the performance of different companies. The Bill will implement the European Community's 7th directive on company law, thereby harmonising disclosure requirements for consolidated accounts, helping to tackle the problem of off-balance sheet financing, and improving the presentation of the effects of mergers and acquisitions in some company accounts. The Government will also continue to support the efforts of the accountancy profession to make it easier to compare financial statements by the development of accounting standard.

Trade Deficit

44. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries are running a larger trade deficit as a percentage of gross domestic product than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: In 1987 Greece, Portugal, Turkey, Spain, Austria and the United States had larger visible trade deficits than the United Kingdom in relation to their gross domestic product.

The OECD figures for 1988 are not yet complete, but we already know that at least four countries will have deficits larger than the United Kingdom when measured on this basis.

Motor Industry

45. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of the Ford Motor Company (UK) to discuss the state of the motor industry.

Mr. Atkins: I have not met the chairman of the Ford Motor Company Ltd. since taking up office, but my Department is in regular contact with the company.

Export Promotion

46. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress on recent initiatives on export promotion.

Mr. Alan Clark: We have completed the export services review foreshadowed in the White Paper "dti—the department for Enterprise". Its constituent parts are detailed in the written reply given on 17 January by myself to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) at columns 106-8.

Recycled Paper

47. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimates have been made of the cost savings that could be made if his Department used recycled paper.

Mr. Atkins: My Department uses paper having recycled content where this is consistent with operational efficiency and offers good value for money. Recycled paper can be more expensive than other types of paper of comparable quality, but I am reviewing the scope for making increased use of recycled material in the light of recent market developments.

Liquidators

48. Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to control and regulate the activities of liquidators.

Mr. Maude: The Insolvency Act 1986, which came into operation on 29 December 1986, requires all persons to be suitably qualified and authorised before acting as insolvency practitioners. This includes being appointed to the office of liquidator.

There are no plans to regulate further their activities.

Industry-School Links

49. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps his Department has taken to improve links between industry and schools.

Mr. Forth: My Department has a keen interest in promoting partnership between business and schools. Last year we launched the enterprise and education initiative, which is an ambitious programme that will extend the benefits of partnership activity to all schools. Working with organisations already active in the partnership area, DTI's 145 local advisers on enterprise and education will approach employers to ensure that there are places for all pupils to have at least two weeks work experience before leaving school. In addition, we are setting up a programme under which 10 per cent. of teachers will each year be given the opportunity to gain first hand experience of the world of business. My Department also supports much other partnership activity, including initial teacher training, both on a national basis and through our regional office network.

Interest Rates

50. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the cost to industry of the rise in base rates since April 1988.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave today to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall).

70. Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has had from industry on the effect of interest rate policy on the trade deficit.

Mr. Alan Clark: Contacts which my Department has with industry often involve discussions concerning interest rate policy.

Regional Policy

51. Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any review of regional policy will take place in the run-up to 1992.

Mr. Atkins: Regional policy is under constant review.

Trade Barriers

53. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action the Government are taking to ensure that the European Community does not erect protectionist trade barriers.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Community's common commercial policy is determined by the Council of Ministers on the basis of proposals from the Commission. The United Kingdom plays a full and vigorous part in this process in the light of our experience of the beneficial economic effects of competition and deregulation. The Community is negotiating in the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations for a substantial liberalisation of trade worldwide.

Japanese Companies

54. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many people are employed in the United Kingdom by subsidiaries of Japanese companies.

Mr. Atkins: According to the census of production for 1986 there were 7,800 people employed by Japanese-controlled manufacturing enterprises in the United Kingdom.

Rural Post Offices

55. Mr. Amos: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on what directions he has given to the Post Office on the future level of provision of post offices in rural areas.

Mr. Forth: None; decisions on the appropriate level of service provision in particular areas are an operational matter for the Post Office chairman and board. As far as the general extent of the network is concerned, we have made it clear on a number of occasions that the Government remain committed to a network of offices adequate to enable the Post Office to fulfil its statutory duty to have regard to economy and efficiency and to the social, industrial and commercial needs of the United Kingdom.

Manufacturing Output

56. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries have shown a greater increase in manufacturing output since 1979 than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: Between 1979 and 1987 (latest available), the following OECD countries are recorded as showing a greater increase in manufacturing output than the United Kingdom:

Canada, USA, Japan, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Finland, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and Yugoslavia.

62. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures he has for the levels of output of the manufacturing industry.

Mr. Atkins: Manufacturing output in the fourth quarter of 1988 was at a level of 117·0, based on 1985 equal to 100. This was the highest ever quarterly level, over 10½ per cent. above its 1979 average level and nearly 6 per cent. above the previous all-time peak of 1973.

Internal Market

57. Mr. Graham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many standards set under the development of the internal market are based on British standards; and how many are based on (a) German standards, (b) French standards and (c) those of other European Community countries.

Mr. Maude: The European standards bodies, CEN and CENELEC, adopt, wherever appropriate, agreed international (ISO and IEC) standards. Very few European standards are based on an existing standard of any one Community country.

Single European Market

58. Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, what is the latest evidence he has of awareness in the business community about the opportunities presented by the completion of the single European market in 1992.

Mr. Maude: DTI's survey of business response to the single market show that over 90 per cent. of firms throughout the country are aware of the single market challenge.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current percentage of United Kingdom businesses exporting to European Economic Community countries; and what effect he expects the 1992 European single market campaign to have on that figure.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 14 February 1989]: It is not possible directly to answer the hon. Member's question in percentage terms. In 1988 European Community countries accounted for 50 per cent. of total United Kingdom exports. The effects of the 1992 single European market campaign on that figure depend on the extent to which United Kingdom businesses take full advantage of the opportunities opening up to them.

Industrial Regeneration (Sunderland)

60. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made on the package of measures he announced in December to assist industrial regeneration in Sunderland.

Mr. Newton: I am pleased to say that good progress is being made on the package of measures that I announced to the House on 7 December last.

My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, is at present consulting in the European Commission on the proposals for an enterprise zone. In the meantime discussions are taking place with local bodies in Sunderland on boundaries.

English Estates North has drawn up plans for building the first phase of a new business park on the Hylton riverside site in conjunction with the Tyne and Wear development corporation. Work will start in early summer and be completed by the end of the year.

A new company has been formed to undertake counselling, placement and training of employees affected by the NESL closure. A total of £5 million has been set aside for this. To date, over 1,000 people have received counselling and out of those more than 200 have been successfully placed. A further £5 million of the fund is to be administered via a recently launched initiative led by the private sector, with the participation of the Sunderland borough council and Tyne and Wear development corporation. This body, the Wearside Opportunity, will concentrate on local initiatives to help regenerate industry by encouraging local enterprise through project support and business leadership. An experienced official from my Department has been seconded to the Wearside Opportunity to provide administrative back-up. Progress is being made in identifying projects requiring support.

In addition to these measures, I have made available, via the city action team, a further £1·5 million during the current financial year for 13 enterprise and training projects in Sunderland.

Funeral Costs

63. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he is taking in response to the report published by the Office of Fair Trading on funeral costs.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 1 February at columns 263-64.

Imperial Weights and Measures

64. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what responses he has received in favour of the continued availability of imperial weights and measures.

Mr. Maude: Some 700 trade, industry, local authority and consumer organisations were consulted last autumn on proposals to phase out the remaining imperial units of measurement for most trade purposes by the end of 1994 subject to certain exemptions, including the pint for sales of draught beer and cider and milk in returnable bottles; the troy ounce for bullion dealing; and the mile for speed and distance measurement. Only two organisations responded opposing the general principle of further metrication. However, 22 requests were received to continue the use of imperial units for certain other specific purposes.

Knitwear and Hosiery (Leicester)

65. Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the current state of the knitwear and hosiery industries in Leicester.

Mr. Atkins: While I recognise the difficulties facing many firms in this sector, the hosiery and knitwear industries have made a major contribution to Leicester's economic and industrial development. I am confident that they will continue to adapt to technological and other changes to the further benefit of the local and national economies.

Cellular Radio

67. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps his Department has taken to relieve congestion in the cellular radio network.

Mr. Atkins: As I announced on 26 January we are extending the availability to the cellular radio operators of 400 radio channels, until now reserved for MOD use except in the area of central London, out to the area embraced by the M25 and five miles beyond. The use of these channels will be on a pre-emptible basis.

Enterprise Initiative

68. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications have been received for consultancy projects through the enterprise initiative.

Mr. Newton: Since the launch of the scheme in January 1988 over 18,000 applications for assisted consultancy had been received up to the end of January 1989.

Civil Research and Development

69. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Organisation for Economic Co-Operation and Development countries spend a greater proportion of gross domestic product on civil research and development than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: The available information is for 1985 and relates to gross expenditure on research and development (R&D), excluding R&D for defence purposes funded by national defence ministries as a percentage of gross domestic product. This showed that the following countries spent a greater proportion than the United Kingdom in 1985.

Federal Republic of Germany
Japan
Netherlands
Sweden
Switzerland
United States

Thirteen other OECD member countries spent a smaller proportion than the United Kingdom.

Balance of Payments

71. Mr. Wall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is now his estimate for the deficit on the balance of payments for 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: The deficit on the current account of the balance of payments for 1988 is provisionally estimated to be £14·3 billion.

Takeover Bids

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many takeover bids were considered by the Office of Fair Trading in 1988.

Mr. Maude: In 1988 the Office of Fair Trading considered 306 merger situations qualifying under the terms of the Fair Trading Act 1973 for reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many takeover bids were recommended for referral to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in 1988.

Mr. Maude: Ten qualifying merger situations were recommended for reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in 1988.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many takeover bids were referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in 1988.

Mr. Maude: Ten qualifying merger situations were referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in 1988.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many letters he received from hon. Members on takeover bids in 1988.

Mr. Maude: During 1988 hon. Members sent in a considerable number of letters on this subject, but a precise count is not feasible.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many parliamentary questions he answered on takeover bids in 1988.

Mr. Maude: In 1988 more than 50 parliamentary questions were answered on mergers and related issues.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list in order of priority the factors he takes into account in reaching decisions to refer takeover bids to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Maude: In making his decision on whether or not to refer a merger situation to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State takes account of all aspects of a merger which might have a bearing on the public interest.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many letters were sent by hon. Members to the Director General of Fair Trading on takeover bids in 1988.

Mr. Maude: The Director General of Fair Trading received a considerable number of letters from hon. Members in 1988 about takeover bids. A precise count is not feasible.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many deputations of hon. Members the Director General of Fair Trading saw on takeover bids in 1988.

Mr. Maude: The Director General received three deputations of hon. Members on takeover bids and also met other hon. Members during 1988.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consideration he gives to early-day motions on takeover bids.

Mr. Maude: I give due consideration to all such early-day motions.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Official Report data for regional preferential assistance in 1987-88 on the same basis as in table 12.9 in "Regional Trends 1988"; and whether he will also state the total assistance to each standard region since 1978-79 at both current and 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is as follows:

[1] All figures are gross and include payments to nationalised industries. Data are presented in terms of the old definitions of Assisted Areas for those payments resulting from applications made up to 28 November 1984, and in terms of the new definitions for the payments resulting from applications after 28 November 1984.

[2] Under Section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982.

[3] It has not been possible to provide a split by Assisted Area status for expenditure by the WDA. The comparable expenditure figures of £20·1 million for the SDA comprised £16·9 million in new development areas and £2·5 million in new intermediate areas.

[1] All figures are gross and include payments to nationalised industries.
[2] The Great Britain total does not always equal the sum of the component parts due to the inclusion of expenditure which cannot be allocated to regions and because of rounding.
[3] Includes some minor expenditure in west midlands in respect of Oswestry TTWA which ceased to be an assisted area in 1982-83.
[4] Certain TTWAs in the west midlands were designated as Assisted Areas on 29 November 1984.
[5] Expenditure on a 1987-88 price basis for each year is calculated by applying the appropriate deflator to expenditure at current prices.
[6] Includes expenditure in Cumbria, otherwise shown within the totals for the northern region.

The items included in the expenditure are regional development grants and regional selective assistance, expenditure on land and factories by the English Industrial Estates Corporation, the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies, the Development Board for Rural Wales, and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Inward Investment

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of inward investment to the United Kingdom has come from Japan in 1979, 1983 and 1988.

Mr. Atkins: The available information relates to direct investment. Net direct investment by Japanese companies in the United Kingdom was £51 million in 1979, £170 million in 1983 and £15 million in 1986, the latest year for which figures are available. Japanese direct investment accounted for 3 per cent., 8 per cent. and ½ per cent. respectively, of total net inward direct investment in those years.

Industrial Investment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member countries have shown a greater increase in industrial investment since 1979 than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: Comparable statistics for industrial investment are available only up to 1986 and do not cover all Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries. Of the countries for which comparisons are available, the following have shown a greater increase between 1979 and 1986 than the United Kingdom:

United States of America
Denmark
Finland
Iceland
Netherlands
Norway
Sweden

Franchising Companies

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many franchising companies he estimates there are in the United Kingdom retail sales and service sector; how many of these have been the subject of any investigation by his Department; and if he will make a statement upon the growth of the franchisor and franchisee business in the past 10 years.

Mr. Forth: There are no official statistics. Private studies estimate that there are some 230 business format franchisors with some 16,000 franchisees. Separate records are not kept of the number of franchise businesses investigated by the Department. A properly constructed franchise business operation can encourage enterprise.

Research and Development

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish tables showing the percentage of gross domestic product accounted for by (a) Government expenditure and (b) all expenditure on civil research and development for each Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country, for the years 1974, 1979, 1983, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 14 February 1989]: The available information relates to gross expenditure on research and development (R and D) in the fields of science, technology, social science and humanities and Government financing of it, as a percentage of gross domestic product (GDP). It is given in the following tables:

HEALTH

Hospitals (Northern Region)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the hospitals in the Northern regional health authority he expects to become self-governing under the proposals in the White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is too early even to estimate numbers. Over time, I expect that as many hospitals as are willing and able to do so will become self-governing.

Child Care Workers

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of his Department's appropriate grant aid budget has been allocated to the training of child care workers over the last five years to date.

Mr. Freeman: Training for child care workers is primarily the responsibility of local authorities, and information on the proportion of rate support grant used for such purposes is not held centrally. The Department introduced in 1986 a central training initiative on child abuse to fund a range of projects aimed at developing training for workers from a number of disciplines and professions concerned with child abuse. Expenditure on that initiative was £10,000 in 1986-87, £205,000 in 1987-88 and is expected to be £375,000 in 1988-89; and that programme is continuing.

In addition, my right hon. Friend, the then Minister for Health announced on 6 July 1988 at column 1062 the introduction of additional grants of £7 million in support of expenditure of £10 million for social services child care staff in 1989-90.

Hip Operations (Stockport)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the scale of hip operations by Stockport district health authority.

Mr. Freeman: Stockport health authority's record on the waiting list for hip replacement operations is one of the best in the country. Any income it obtains from the sale of hip replacement operations will be used to further improve services for National Health Service patients locally.

Out-patients

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many out-patients were treated by the National Health Service in 1987-88; and what was the figure in 1978-79.

Mr. Freeman: The information is given in the table.

New out-patient attendances, NHS hospitals, England. 1987-88 and 1978.

[1] Patients not seen by a doctor are no longer counted. The figure for 1987-88 is for the financial year.
[2] The figure for 1978 is for the calendar year.

Doctors

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of doctors in the National Health Service in 1979 and in the latest available year.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is set out in the table.

Table: Doctors in the NHS hospital and community health services[1] and family practitioner services: England, number.

	1979	1987
Hospital[2]	32,607	36,212
Community Health Services[3]	5,095	5,542
Family Practitioner Services[4]	23,062	27,023
Total	60,764	68,777

[1] Includes permanent paid and honorary staff as at 30 September each year.
[2] Excludes hospital practitioners and those employed under para 94 of the Terms and Conditions of Service ("clinical assistants") to avoid double counting of staff who are also family practitioners.
[3] Excludes Community Medicine and all occasional sessional staff.
[4] As at 1 October each year.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether, in the light of paragraph 3.12 of the White Paper, "Working for Patients", Cm 555, it is his intention to extend local settlements of pay and conditions to those employed in the general dental service;

(2) whether he envisages setting up an audit system for general dental practitioners similar to that proposed for general medical practitioners, with a role for dental practice advisers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government's policy for the General Dental Service was set out in chapter 4 of the White Paper on primary care (Cm 249) "Promoting Better Health". This included proposals to introduce part time practice advisers in a number of FPC areas as a means of improving quality control procedures and to begin discussions with the profession on changes to the dental practitioners' contract including new arrangements to assist dentists with the costs of setting up practices in area where there are too few dentists.

Doctors' and Dentists' Pay

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, in the light of the proposed local settlement of pay and conditions as outlined in paragraph 3.12 of the White Paper, "Working for Patients", it is his intention to terminate the operation of the doctors and dentists review board machinery.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Cockroaches

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement about the role of cockroaches in the spread of human disease.

Mr. Freeman: In the terminology of communicable disease, a "carrier" is a person or animal that harbours a specific infectious agent in the absence of discernable clinical disease and serves as a potential source of infection. Cockroaches may become carriers and can be deleterious to human health by mechanically transmitting infection. For example, a cockroach that has been in contact with infected material and then comes into contact with food can contaminate food. The Department is sponsoring research into the effectiveness of hydromethylnon in eradicating cockroaches and the development of juvenile hormone analogue which would aim to prevent the development of cockroaches to the adult stage. The results of this work are expected by the end of 1989.

Central Health Monitoring Unit

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply of 16 January, Official Report, column 34, if he will list the numbers, grades and hours of staff working in the unit set up to monitor the health of the nation; and if any additional resources are planned to collect new forms of morbidity data.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The central health monitoring unit is in the process of being established. A full-time director has been appointed at senior medical officer level but the final staffing arrangements have not yet been completed. The need for the collection of new forms of morbidity data is one of the issues the unit will address during the course of its work. The question of resources for any new data collection will be dealt with as issues arise.

NHS Funding

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central on 6 February, Official Report, column 495, if he will publish a table showing (a) the actual allocations made to regional health authorities in 1988-89, (b) the notional allocation to regional health authorities if the 1988-89 distribution had applied to the 1989-90 total, (c) the notional percentage cash increase to each region, (d) the actual allocation to each region made for 1989-90, (e) the actual percentage cash increase to each region and (f) a table showing the percentage cash increases in (c) and (e) adjusted for the effects of inflation between 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Hip Fractures

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of people aged 65 years or more admitted to hospital suffering from hip fractures in 1988 in each regional health authority area in England who were operated on within (a) 24 hours of admittance, (b) 25 to 48 hours of admittance, (c) 49 to 72 hours of admittance, and (d) over 72 hours of admittance.

Mr. Freeman: We do not currently hold this information centrally. From 1990, information supplied by regional health authorities will include duration of stay in hospital both on a pre and post-operation basis.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of people aged 65 years or more admitted to hospital suffering from hip fractures in 1988 in each regional health authority area in England.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested for 1985 (the latest year for which data is available centrally) is given in the table:

Mental Handicap Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific measures he proposes to encourage general practitioners to act as gatekeepers to social services, social security and housing for their patients with mental handicaps.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is the Government's aim that all the statutory authorities concerned with the provision of services for mentally handicapped people should co-operate in providing access to a comprehensive and integrated range of services to meet the individual needs of mentally handicapped people and their families. I am sure general practitioners will continue to help to achieve this aim.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to provide earmarked additional funding for the development of mental handicap services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No. The development of mental handicap services is already one of the priorities for the statutory authorities responsible for their provision. The statistical bulletin "Personal Social Services: Provision for Mentally Handicapped People in England 1976-86" a copy of which is in the Library and which was issued last year, describes the progress that has been made in increasing residential and day provision in the community.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a paper setting out the short and long term implications of "Working for Patients" for (i) the National Health Service contribution to mental handicap services, (ii) the National Health Service partnership with other statutory services, and (iii) voluntary sector mental handicap services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are examining the future organisation and management of services for mentally handicapped people as part of our wider consideration of community care policy, following Sir Roy Griffiths' report and taking into account the implications of "Working for Patients". We are also looking at ways of strengthening collaboration between the NHS and other statutory and voluntary agencies in the provision of those services.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will invite the Audit Commission to work closely with the national development team in monitoring the quality and quantity of health and local authority mental handicap services.

Mr. Freeman: The Audit Commission remains a wholly independent body but does, of course, have access to the published reports of the national development team as part of the body of knowledge to be taken into account when approaching value for money exercises on mental handicap services. The two bodies already have informal links.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether mental handicap hospitals will be eligible to form themselves into National Heath Service hospital trusts; if such trusts would have responsibility for community mental handicap services; and whether they would be authorised to charge for non-hospital residential care.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Any hospital which meets the criteria in chapter 3 of the White Paper "Working for Patients" would be eligible to become an NHS hospital trust, and trusts will be able to run community services, where this is sensible. NHS hospital trusts will be subject to the provisions on charging for residential care which apply to the NHS generally.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the National Health Service White Paper proposals for greater flexibility across health authority boundaries, and their effects on the Department's policy for comprehensive and integrated local services for people with mental handicap.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It remains my Department's policy to encourage the development of comprehensive and integrated local services for people with a mental handicap. The greater flexibility and other proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" will further assist the implementation of this policy.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, as a result of "Working for Patients", there will be any substantial extension of the role of the private health sector in catering for the general or special needs of people with mental handicap.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The private and voluntary sectors in collaboration with the statutory services play an essential role in provision for mentally handicapped people, and I hope this will continue to expand when its is for the benefit of mentally handicapped people and their families.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the revised funding arrangements proposed in "Working for Patients" will take account of the transitional and long-term costs of funding higher quality mental handicap services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The White Paper proposals will fund health authorities for the populations they serve rather than for particular services they provide. By providing greater choice and flexibility the new arrangements will promote access to better standards of service.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue up-to-date guidance to health authorities on the positive use, for the individual's own benefit, of accumulated funds held by health authorities on behalf of patients in mental handicap hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: We know that many hospitals are devising imaginative schemes within the existing guidelines to use patients' own money for their personal benefit and to enhance their quality of life. There are no plans to issue new national guidelines.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will extend the requirement for peer group review and professional audit to those parts of the mental handicap service which are led by psychologists, nurses or social workers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Not at present, although I would expect all professional staff providing services to mentally handicapped people to keep the quality and effectiveness of those services under continuous review.

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he proposes to improve liaison between health authorities and local authorities, following changes in the composition of health authorities and the abolition of some district health authorities, as proposed in "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Health authorities and local authorities are statutorily obliged to collaborate in the development of services, and mechanisms exist for encouraging liaison between them. Ways in which those mechanisms can be made to work more effectively are being examined as part of our consideration of the Sir Roy Griffiths report "Community Care: Agenda for Action", and we shall be taking account of "Working for Patients" in those deliberations.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions he has issued to determine when the charges for a doctor's prescription are to be at a single or multiple rate.

Mr. Freeman: Part XVI of the drug tariff sets out the circumstances where more than one prescription charge is payable. The drug tariff is issued monthly to all National Health Service general medical practitioners and pharmacy and appliance contractors.

Pharmaceutical Prices

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to review the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The revised pharmaceutical price regulation scheme, which began in October 1986, was scheduled to operate for six years, although provision is made for an interim review at the request of either party (Government or industry) after not less than three years. That stage has not yet been reached.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to make publication of specific budget targets in respect of prescription pricing policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Prescription Pricing Authority, in common with other health authorities, is set a cash limit each year and this is published in the supply estimates. The next estimates will be published in March.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there are any proposals to improve international comparisons on pharmaceutical products pricing policy to the standard of the United Kingdom PACT in the light of 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The European Commission intends to compile a data bank containing prices of medicines in different member states. On that, I have nothing to add to the reply by my hon. and learned Friend of 26 January to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, East (Mr. Sayeed) at column 712. The purpose of the PACT system is to provide NHS general medical practitioners with detailed information about their prescribing patterns and costs.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of abortions at 18 weeks, 19 weeks and 20 weeks gestation were performed during 1987 because the child was likely to be born handicapped.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table.

Notifications of abortions which took place with a gestation period of 18, 19 and 20 weeks, showing the number with a mention of ground 4 of the 1967 Abortion Act, which states

"there is a substantial risk that if the child was born it would suffer such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped" for England and Wales—1987.

Weeks	A All grounds total	B Ground 4 total	Percentage B of A
18	2,800	195	7·0
19	1,725	121	7·0
20	1,363	126	9·2
Total	5,888	442	7·5

Accident and Emergency Services

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether, under the health review, Calderdale district health authority will have to provide an accident and emergency operational facility in Calderdale;

(2) whether Calderdale district health authority will be able to direct its accident and emergency patients to Bradford and pay the Bradford authority for their treatment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 13 February 1989]: It will continue to be the responsibility of Calderdale district health authority to decide how best to meet the need for a locally available accident and emergency service for people resident within the district. The White Paper proposals do not alter this responsibility.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1), pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Halifax, 7 February, Official Report, column 799, if district health authorities and the self-governing hospitals will have to provide an operational base for accident and emergency within their locality;

(2) pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Halifax, 7 February, Official Report, column 799, whether district health authorities will be able to pay a neighbouring authority to treat patients in the operational accident and emergency facilities of the neighbouring authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 13 February 1989]: District health authorities will be required to ensure that accident and emergency services, which are core services, are available locally. They may, if they choose, arrange for these services to be provided in their own authority area or in a neighbouring authority area depending on what is more convenient for patients. Self-governing hospitals which provide accident and emergency services will continue to provide them unless the district agrees to their relocation.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what responsibility his Department has for ensuring that foodstuffs are safe for human consumption and carry no risk of food poisoning; in what way this responsibility is carried out; how many and what type of staff are required; what is the annual cost to his Department; and what has been the change in the number of staff and the annual cost to his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 15 December 1988]: My Department has joint responsibility with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for ensuring that foodstuffs are wholesome and fit for human consumption. We exercise this responsibility through legislation and the issue of guidance. Under the Food Act 1984, the food trade and industry has primary responsibility for ensuring that its products are safe.

Local authorities are primarily responsible for enforcing this legislation. Food safety issues which have more than a local impact will usually involve my Department in liaison with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the food industry, the public health laboratory service and other relevant interests. My Department also acts as the point of contact with the European Community on food safety issues related to food imported into or exported from the United Kingdom.

In addition, my Department provides medical and other professional advice directly or through providing support to various expert committees in areas such as microbiology, toxicity and nutrition. Further detailed information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Foodstuffs

78. Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the effects on employment, turnover and investment in the food retailing and manufacturing industry of the plans to complete the internal market in foodstuffs.

Mr. Ryder: The completion of the internal market will undoubtedly bring changes in the climate under which the food retailing and manufacturing industries operate. However, it is the individual companies themselves which are best placed to determine precisely what the impact will be on their own business and to invest accordingly. Government's role is in providing the information which companies need to do this, by promoting awareness of the changes in prospect and of the challenges and opportunities these changes present.

Broiler Birds (Excreta)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has any estimate of the proportion of excreta from broiler birds which is blown out of the broiler house as airborne dust and vapour.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Less than 1 per cent.

Deer

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether farmed deer are tested for tuberculosis or any other disease as a routine.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Farmed deer are not required to be routinely tested for any disease, but the industry has been asked to consider a voluntary deer health scheme based on tuberculosis attestation to which could be added monitoring for other diseases.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing for each of the last five years how many deer and of what species were imported into the United Kingdom; how many were imported for the purpose of deer farming or the improvement of stocks of British deer; from what countries they came; what procedures were carried out to determine if they were free from disease; whether any tests were carried out for tuberculosis and whether any strains of tuberculosis are specific to deer.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The table provides the number and species of deer imported into the United Kingdom and the countries of origin in the last five years. The purpose of these imports is not available.

		Country of origin
Year	Species	Austria	Denmark	West Germany	Hungary	Norway	Poland	Sweden	Yugoslavia	Yearly total

These deer were required to undergo a period of at least 60 days on-farm isolation on their premises of origin and, depending on the disease situation in the country of origin, a further period of not less than 14 days in officially supervised pre-export quarantine. Each consignment had to be accompanied by a health certificate signed by an official veterinary officer of the exporting country confirming that these requirements had been met and, depending on the disease status of the country of origin, that the deer concerned had been tested, with negative results, for the following diseases: avian and bovine tuberculosis, brucella abortus, foot and mouth disease, blue tongue, epizootic haemorrhagic diseast and leptospirosis. There are no tuberculosis strains which are specific to deer.

Milk

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what grounds he intends to stop the supply of unpasteurised milk direct from farm to consumer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My proposal reflects the fact that consumption of untreated milk poses a health threat since, even in the best run herds, clinical infections can be present in the milk even though no symptoms are shown by the cows. Effective heat treatment is the only way to minimise the risk of transmitting milk-borne diseases such as salmonellosis and cympylobacter infections to the consumer.

Frozen Foods

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies have been done by or on behalf of his Department, and what regulations exist, to set standards for the handling, and transport, of frozen foods.

Mr. Ryder: The Ministry has funded many studies on all aspects of frozen foods. In particular, one large study examined the temperatures and quality of frozen food encountered in different commercial cold stores and retail outlets. A further project is in progress examining temperature distribution in retail display cabinets.

The Food Hygiene (General) Regulations 1970 and the Food Hygiene (Market Stalls and Delivery Vehicles) Regulations 1966 lay down the handling and transport hygiene requirements for most foods, including frozen food. These regulations are currently being reviewed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. International trade in frozen food is subject to the provisions of the agreement on the international carriage of perishable foodstuffs. In addition, regulations are being made to implement the EC directive on quick frozen foods, adopted on 21 December 1988 which lays down provisions controlling aspects of labelling, manufacturing, processing and storage of quick frozen food. Apart from their specific regulations the general provisions of the Food Act 1984 apply, which, inter alia, prohibit the sale of food which is not of the nature, substance or quality demanded by the purchaser.

Radiation (Cumbria)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to protect farmers and other users of the river Esk in Cumbria, where findings recently of radiation doses three to four times above the generalised derived limits set by the National Radiological Protection Board have been discovered; and if he will make a statement regarding grazing cattle and sheep eating this contaminated vegetation and soil entering the human food chain with its subsequent dangers to health.

Mr. Ryder: As my hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley (Mr. Thompson) made clear in his reply to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 9 February, Hansard, column 780, substantial monitoring in this area has made clear that doses of radiation, even to those receiving the highest external exposure, are well within the internationally recommended limits.

Potatoes

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will direct the Potato Marketing Board to reconsider its refusal to increase the quota allowed to organic growers in those cases where they can show they are unable to meet demand.

Mr. MacGregor: Responsibility for managing the potato quota system rests with the Potato Marketing Board and it would not be appropriate for me to intervene.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make it his policy to study the Dutch system of potato marketing and its success in exporting to different countries before reaching a decision upon the future of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. MacGregor: I am already aware of the Dutch arrangements.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of potatoes the potato processing industry has used for each of the last five years; and how many tonnes have been imported from the Netherlands for processing for the same years.

Mr. MacGregor: The following tonnages were used by the United Kingdom potato processing industry.

Crop year	Thousand tonnes
(July-June)
1983-84	1,252
1984-85	1,404
1985-86	1,417
1986-87	1,466
1987-88	1,442

The import figures do not distinguish between imports for processing and other imports.

Animal Feedstuffs

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had on the system of a statutory declaration of ingredients in animal feedingstuffs since 1 December 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: My Department consulted widely on the European Commission's proposal made in June last year to make compulsory some form of ingredient listing on the labels of animal feedingstuffs to supplement the detailed information already required. Representations from the National Farmers Union and the United Kingdom Agricultural Supply Trade Association have been received among those of many other organisations, and consultation is continuing as the discussions in Brussels progress.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ban the use of farm excrement in compound feeds.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 February 1989]: The Diseases of Animals (Protein Processing) Order 1981 requires all protein material of animal origin for animal feedingstuffs to be manufactured free from salmonella. I have at present no plans to do so. However, discussions are under way between my officials and representatives of the animal feedingstuffs industry to consider the application of the present controls and any further measures which may be needed to reduce salmonella contamination in feedingstuffs.

Common Agricultural Policy

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will update the figures on the common agricultural policy given in his predecessor's answer to the then hon. Member for Billericay on 17 February 1983, Official Report, column 459.

Mr. MacGregor: Following the European Council agreement in February 1988, the rate of growth of agricultural market support spending is legally restricted to 74 per cent. of the rate of growth of Community gross national product and its proportion of the EC budget is forecast to fall to about 59 per cent. by 1992.

Fruit and Vegetable Marketing Standards

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to have completed his review of the enforcement of fruit and vegetable marketing standards.

Mr. MacGregor: It is expected that the review, which will be concerned with the impact of EC regulations on business, will be completed towards the end of the year.

Efficiency

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the benefits that consumers have derived from increases in the efficiency of the British agricultural industry in recent years.

Mr. MacGregor: Food prices are now 17 per cent. lower in real terms than in 1979 and consumers have a wider choice of foodstuffs at all price ranges than ever before.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council in Brussels on 13 and 14 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I attended this meeting, together with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary.

The Council discussed the Commission's proposals on farm support prices and related measues for 1989-90. The discussion was limited to an initial exchange of views, and the Council will return to these questions at its March meetings.

During the discussion, I took the opportunity to urge the need to combat the fraudulent use of funds under the common agricultral policy, to which the Commission had referred in bringing forward its proposals on farm prices. I pressed the Commission to make specific proposals in this area, on which member states could then take action; and I called for systematic follow-up to reports from the European Court of Auditors.

The Council agreed, subject to the opinion of the European Parliament, an amendment to its measure, adopted last year, for payments to farmers who extensify their production. The amendment, for which I had pressed on practical grounds, will enable member states to operate these arrangements on a pilot basis until the end of 1990.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to compensate those egg-producers banned from selling raw eggs due to infection of their flocks with salmonella; for how long such bans will be operational; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 8 February 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South (Mr. MacGregor) gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hereford (Mr. Shepherd) on 10 February 1989 at column 831.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the frequency with which hens infected with salmonella lay infected eggs; and if he has instituted any survey on that subject.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 February 1989]: Any hen infected with an invasive strain of salmonella such as salmonella enteritidis is considered capable of producing a salmonella-contaminated egg, but information is not available on the frequency with which this actually occurs.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the distribution of salmonella infection in chicken flocks; and if he has instituted any survey of such infection.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 February 1989]: Since salmonella enteritidis does not cause overt clinical disease in adult poultry it is not possible to determine the extent of the infection without extensive testing which, in the absence of a simple, rapid and sensitive test for salmonella enteritidis, is not possible.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning the action that would be necessary to achieve a long-term solution to the problems associated with salmonellae in poultry and eggs.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 February 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) on 18 January (Hansard columns 214-15), and 1 February (Hansard column 247), to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 27 January (Hansard column 806) and my hon. Friend the Member for Hereford (Mr. Shepherd) on 10 February (Hansard column 831).

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the incidence of transmission of salmonella into eggs by trans-shell and transovarian routes respectively; and if he has instituted any research into this question.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 February 1989]: On transovarian infection of eggs, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) on 22 December 1988 (Hansard column 440).

It is clear from research which has already been conducted that, though the frequency of contamination by either route is not known precisely, transmission through the shell from faecal contamination is more common than transovarial transmission.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the number of salmonellae in eggs produced or marketed in England, and on any survey he has instituted in order to compile such information.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 February 1989]: No extensive testing has been undertaken specifically on the number of eggs infected with salmonella in England.

From the 15,411 eggs from 500 flocks which have been examined for various purposes, however, in only one instance was salmonella enteritidis detected.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the incidence of salmonella infected hens in chicken flocks; and if he has instituted a survey of such incidence.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 February 1989]: Since salmonella enteritidis does not cause overt clinical disease in adult poultry it is not possible to give precise figures of the extent of the infection without extensive testing, which in the absence of a simple, rapid and sensitive test for salmonella enteritidis, is not possible. However, the Zoonoses Order 1975 requires isolations of salmonella to be reported. Provisional figures indicate that 370 isolations of salmonella enteritidis in 1988 were reported.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to give statutory backing to the code of practice for the control of salmonellae in commercial laying flocks prepared by his Ministry jointly with the British Poultry Federation.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 February 1989]: As I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) on 18 January Hansard columns 214-15 I propose to introduce a requirement on operators to carry out regular bacteriological monitoring, together with strenghthened statutory requirements about the control of rodents, with provision for compulsory cleansing and disinfection and requirements for the hygienic handling of eggs.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a salmonella enteritidis eradication scheme for the poultry industry based on a slaughter policy with compensation.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 February 1989]: Salmonella organisms are widespread in the environment and their total elimination is virtually impossible. However, as one of the measures to deal with the problem of salmonella enteritidis, as I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hereford (Mr.

Shepherd) on 10 February Hansard column 831, I shall shortly be making an order to provide where necessary for the compulsory slaughter of laying flocks in which salmonella has been confirmed. Compensation will be paid as required by the Animal Health Act 1981.

Dioxins

Dr. David Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the research projects he is funding to investigate the potential hazards of dioxins in food; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he is investigating the presence of and potential hazard of dioxins in food arising through contact with packaging from bleached paper products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 14 February 1989]: I am currently funding three research projects on dioxins in food:

(i) an investigation into the possible occurrence of dioxins in food arising from the use of paper-based packaging materials;
(ii) a survey of dioxin levels in retail fatty foods;
(iii) a pilot study on dioxin levels in encompassing the major food groups in the United Kingdom diet.

Religious Slaughter

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes have taken place in Halal and Shechita slaughter since the publication of the Farm Animal Welfare Council report on the welfare of livestock when slaughtered by religious methods (1985).

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding reply 14 February 1989]: There have been no changes to the statutory provisions governing the religious slaughter of animals. I have been considering representations on the Government's response of 29 October 1987 to the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on religious slaughter. I expect to issue proposals for new regulations on the welfare of all animals at slaughter shortly.

ENVIRONMENT

Public Works Contracts

72. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many small firms have gained contracts as a result of major public works contracts in the south of England in the most recent period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not held centrally.

Race Relations and Equal Opportunity

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will describe his Department's principal achievements in respect of race relations and equal opportunity since May 1979.

Mr. Ridley: Apart from the internal management of the Department itself, my Department's main involvement in equal opportunities is in housing and inner cities policy.

In 1986, we commissioned research by Brunel university into local authorities' policies and practices in combatting racial harassment in housing and expect shortly to be publishing a good practice guide as a result. The Department co-funds the local authorities race relations information exchange and funds schemes aimed at encouraging the recruitment and training of ethnic minority staff in local authority housing departments and housing associations. The Housing Act 1988 extended section 71 of the Race Relations Act 1976 to cover the Housing Corporation and HATS, and gave the Commission for Racial Equality power to issue codes of practice on rented housing, which would be admissible in court proceedings. This power would be extended to all housing under a provision in the current Local Government and Housing Bill.

The urban programme enables my Department to support projects benefiting ethnic minorities and women in the inner cities. We give priority to projects designed to benefit disadvantaged minorities. Since 1980-81, around £220 million has been directed towards projects of specific benefit to ethnic minorities. In 1988-89, such projects account for approximately 11 per cent. of UP expenditure, supporting more than 1,100 projects at a cost of £29 million. Projects targeted on ethnic minorities cover a wide range of activities with expenditure being concentrated on economic development, training and health and welfare. The particular problems of women are recognised as priority issues in many local authority urban programme strategies, as is reflected in projects aimed at training and child care.

In the internal management of the Department, we have published policy statements on race relations and on equal opportunities for women; we have asked staff to participate in a survey of their ethnic origins as a basis for checking that our practices in recruitment, posting and promotion are fair; and we have taken a number of steps to help women combine a career with domestic responsibilities, including the provision of child care facilities, in cooperation with the trade unions concerned, on some residential training courses in the summer of 1987. This is to be repeated in the summer of 1989.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what volumes of (a) low-level radioactive waste and (b) intermediate-level radioactive waste, arising from reprocessing of imported spent nuclear fuel at Sellafield, will be deposited in NIREX repository by the year 2030; and what proportion of the total waste in each category is this expected to constitute.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since 1976, BNFL's contracts for the reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have contained options for the return of wastes. The Government intend that reprocessing contracts with overseas customers should continue to contain such options, that the options should be exercised and that the wastes should be returned.

The total volumes of waste which are likely to arise from BNFL's pre 1976 contracts are 3,000m for intermediate level wastes and 20,000m for low level wastes representing respectively approximately 1 per cent. of the total operational wastes arising in the United Kingdom by the year 2030.

Aerial Surveys (Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the three counties of Yorkshire make use of aerial surveys to monitor mineral workings; if he will list all encroachments that have occurred during the last five years: what action has been taken by his Department where infringement has taken place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Day to day planning for mineral working, including the taking of measures to deal with unauthorised extraction, is the responsibility of the appropriate planning authority.

In North Yorkshire, the county council is the mineral planning authority. In the former metropolitan counties of South and West Yorkshire, this function is the duty of the respective metropolitan district councils.

My Department deos not collect information or keep records on the use made by local authorities of aerial surveys to monitor mineral working or the number of encroachments. Unauthorised working is not reported to my Department as a matter of course, but cases may come before the Secretary of State if there is an appeal against an enforcement notice or stop notice issued by a mineral planning authority.

Radiation (Cumbria)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what data his Department has on radioactive contamination of the River Esk near Ravenglass, Cumbria, including by isotopes of americium and caesium; how and by whom the monitoring is carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Data on levels of environmental radioactivity, including caesium and americium in the river Esk, Ravenglass estuary is provided by British Nuclear Fuels plc (BNFL) to my Department as a statutory requirement of their certificate of authorisation to discharge radioactive wastes. The most recent data supplied by BNFL is summarised on page 26 (table 7) of their annual report entitled "Radioactive Discharges and Monitoring of the Environment 1987". The most recent data from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Foods's extensive environmental monitoring programmes is summarised on page 26 (table 10) of their aquatic environment monitoring report No. 19 for 1987. Both reports are published and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

As part of the national environmental monitoring programme sponsored by my Department, mud from the Ravenglass estuary including the river Esk has been sampled for radiological analysis. This programme was started in 1988 and the results have not yet been published. When they are, a copy of the report will be placed in the Library of the House.

Radioactive Substances (Slough)

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sites in the borough of Slough are licensed under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is as follows:

Thirty-three premises in the Slough area are registered under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 to keep and use radioactive materials. These are as follows:

3M United Kingdom Limited, Photogard Laboratories, Unit 8, Building No. 1, Banbury Avenue, Slough.

Acton Plastics, Poyle Trading Estate, Colnbrook.

Asda Stores Limited, Telford Drive, Slough.

Auriema Limited, 442 Bath Road, Slough.

[1]Celltech Diagnostics Limited, 240-244 Bath Road, Slough.

Cecil H. Greville Limited, 60 Chalvey Road East, Slough.

Crane Packing Limited, 210-214 Bath Road, Slough.

CRC Information Systems Limited, 750-751 Deal Avenue, Slough Trading Estate, Slough.

Great Mills DIY Superstore, 217A Bath Road, Slough.

Guardian Royal Exchange Properties Limited, High Tech Industries Development, 185-187 Bath Road, Slough.

ITW Limited, 470-474 Bath Road, Chippenham, Slough.

Johnson & Johnson Limited, 6298/630 Ajax Avenue, Slough.

Kodak Limited, Colour Snaps, 144 High Street, Slough.

Mars Limited, Dundee Road Trading Estate, Slough.

Master Models (1983) Limited, 5 David Road, Poyle Trading Estate, Colnbrook, Slough.

McDonalds, 179 High Street, Slough.

McMichael Limited, Wexham Road, Slough.

Nevin Electric Limited, Arkwright Road, Colnbrook.

Nicholas Laboratories Limited, 225 Bath Road, Slough.

Non-Destructive Testers Limited, 514 Ipswich Road, Slough.

Satchwell Control Systems Limited, Farnham Road, Slough.[1]

Slough College of Technology, Wellington Street, Slough.

Slough Enamellers Limited, 128 Edinburgh Avenue Trading Estate, Slough.

Thames Water Authority, Wood Lane, Slough.

Vita-Tex Limited, 73 Buckingham Avenue Trading Estate, Slough.[1]

Wexham Park Hospital, Slough.

W. H. Smith Do It All Ltd., Farnham Road, Slough.

Wormald International Electronics, Station Estate off Mill Street, Slough.

Wykeham Farrance Engineering Limited, Weston Road Trading Estate, Slough.

Xenova Ltd., 545 Ipswich Road, Slough.

[1] Premises also authorised for the disposal of radioactive waste.

A list of all premises in England and Wales authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 to dispose of radioactive waste was published by the Department in April 1988 and a copy was placed in the Library of the House.

Caravan Sites

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if statistics are held centrally, on the number of caravan sites not licensed by local authorities operated under the auspices of voluntary organisations in England.

Mr. Trippier: Precise figures are not available. However, recreational organisations holding an appropriate certificate of exemption from the Department of the Environment have currently approved approximately 5,000 sites in England for no more than five caravans for use by their members. In addition they occupy about 145 sites in England on a permanent or seasonal basis for any number of touring caravans, for which they have obtained the informal approval of the local authority. Further sites are used on a temporary basis for holiday meetings and rallies for club members of up to five days, but no central records are kept of these temporary uses.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of caravan sites licensed under the Caravan Sites (Control of Development) Act 1960 by local authorities in England.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Stock

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress made in improving the housing stock since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: The results of the 1986 English house condition survey, published in November last year, showed that, overall, the conditions of the stock had improved since the last survey in 1981. Less than 3 per cent. of the stock lacked basic amenities compared with 5 per cent. in 1981. The proportion of the stock classified as unfit had been reduced from 6·3 per cent. to 5·6 per cent. The proportion in serious disrepair had remained broadly the same at about 6 per cent.

A copy of the report of the survey is available in the Library.

Liverpool Urban Development Corporation

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution the urban development corporation in Liverpool has made to fighting urban decay.

Mr. Trippier: The Merseyside Development Corporation has made a significant contribution to fighting urban decay. The corporation was set up in 1981 to regenerate 865 acres of mostly derelict and disused docklands in the urban development area. To that end it has spent £186 million since its inception; 387 acres of land have been reclaimed; 2·3 million sq ft of buildings have been refurbished, including the Albert Dock, the largest collection of grade 1 listed buildings in the country; 259 business units have been provided, including the Brunswick business park in the South Docks where 0·5 million sq ft have been let; 2,500 jobs have been created, 1,100 safeguarded and on average 1,000 jobs every year have been generated by construction and related projects; 340 dwellings have been completed including the first phases of 240 residential flats provided by refurbishment and conversion schemes in partnership with the private sector at Albert Dock and Wapping Warehouse; £50 million of private sector investment has been secured so far and this is expected to double within the next year.

In November last year the designation order extending MDC's area came into effect. This will enable another 1,500 acres in Liverpool and Wirral to benefit from MDC's direct and determined approach.

More details of the Merseyside Development Corporation's activities are contained in its annual reports, copies of which are laid before Parliament.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the potential to reduce the cost of local government services by means of competitive tendering.

Mr. Gummer: Experience of voluntary competitive tendering indicates that savings of 20-30 per cent. of previous costs may be achieved. With expenditure on the services covered by the Act approaching £3 billion, it is clear that major savings are available.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines he has issued concerning the joint funding of projects by both the urban programme and employment training, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has issued a set of ministerial guidelines to partnership and programme authorities to help them in the preparation of their inner area programmes. These stress that that the urban programme should not generally be used to fund projects which are eligible for assistance under other programmes but that it may be used to complement expenditure, for example, under the employment training scheme.

Dog Wardens

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many district councils provide a dog warden or similar scheme for the control of strays; and how many do not.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected by the Department. I understand that the Joint Advisory Committee on Pets in Society estimates that some 200 of the 401 local authorities at district level in England and Wales provide dog warden services.

St. Martin's Estate

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will respond to the current application for inner area programme funding for the St. Martin's estate community project B9/207.

Mr. Trippier: I understand that Lambeth is currently reviewing a revised bid for the St. Martin's estate community project. If formally submitted to the Department, this will now need to be considered along with many other bids being proposed for inclusion in the 1989-90 Lambeth IAP, on which decisions are expected by April.

Housing (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households were registered on local authority housing waiting lists on 1 April 1988 in (a) Greater London, (b) the south east outside London, (c) East Anglia, (d) the east midlands, (e) the west midlands, (f) the south west, (g) the north west, (h) the north, (i) Yorkshire and Humberside and (j) England as a whole.

Mr. Trippier: This information is reported by local authorities in their annual Housing Investment Programme return (HIP 1). It is shown at column B51 of the "Grossed Estimates for Standard Regions—1988 HIP 1", a copy of which is in the Library.

Local Authority Dwellings

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide the number of local authority dwellings (a) let to new secure tenants and (b) let to new secure tenants who were homeless households, between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988, in (1) Greater London, (2) metropolitan areas outside London, (3) non-metropolitan areas in the south east, (4) all non-metropolitan areas and (5) England as a whole.

Mr. Trippier: Following are estimates derived from local authorities' annual housing investment programme returns (HIP 1):

	New secure tenants	of which homeless households	New non-secure tenants	of which homeless households	National mobility scheme	of which homeless households	Nominations to Housing Associations[2]	of which homeless households

Public Sector Housing

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many applications have been made to date to the Housing Corporation for approval under part IV of the Housing Act 1988 to seek to acquire public authority housing, from (a) registered housing associations, (b) unregistered housing associations, (c) housing co-operatives, (d) commercial companies, (e) private individuals and (f) other bodies; how many approvals have been granted by the Housing Corporation; and to which local authority areas these applications and approvals have related;

(2) how many approaches have been received to date by the Housing Corporation from council tenants in England (a) asking to be put in touch with another landlord who might take over their homes and (b) asking the Housing Corporation not to approve another landlord to take over their homes; and if he will list the local authority areas from which any such approaches have been made.

Mr. Trippier: I have asked the Housing Corporation to reply to the hon. Member.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he received the reports from the consultants appointed to investigate the proposed designations of housing action trusts in (a) Lambeth, (b) Southwark, (c) Tower Hamlets, (d) Sunderland, (e) Leeds and (f) Sandwell; what was the cost of each of these reports; and when he intends to publish these reports and make a statement on the Government's intentions in respect of housing action trusts.

Mr. Trippier: We have yet to receive all the consultants' final reports but expect to do so shortly. When we have completed our consideration of the reports, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends to publish them and announce his conclusions.

For reasons of commercial confidentiality, fees for individual consultancies are not normally disclosed.

Seal Products (EC Ban)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what negotiations have taken place within the European Economic Community with regard to a renewal of the ban on the importing of white coat pups of harp and hooded seals, except those from traditional hunting by the Inuit people, under European Community directive 83/129/EEC; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on his policy towards the European Community directive 83/129/EEC, and towards its extension beyond 1 October 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government fully supported EC directive 83/129/EEC, and the subsequent extension of the ban on the import of harp and hooded seal pup skins and products, on conservation grounds. I understand that the European Commission is considering the future of the ban. We have not yet been formally consulted. We shall give careful consideration to any proposals for a further extension of the ban.

Urban Programme

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made to date in achieving the objectives of the urban programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Each of the local authorities who receive urban programme grant produce an annual report on achievements in their areas. Annual reports on the programme as a whole have been published each year since 1985-86 setting out details of the operation and achievements of the urban programme. The most recent "DoE Inner City Programmes 1987-88", reporting on the whole range of DoE inner city policies and programmes, was published in December 1988. The Department has also published a number of research reports on the effectiveness of the urban programme; details are set out in an annual publications list. I am forwarding a copy of this, and of the 1987-88 annual report to my hon. Friend.

Housing Act 1988

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at what dates the remaining provisions of the Housing Act 1988 will be fully implemented.

Mr. Trippier: I expect the remaining provisions of the Housing Act 1988 to be brought into force by late spring this year.

Wildlife Habitats

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has given the Nature Conservancy Council concerning the curtailing or encouragement of field sports on land which is the subject of applications for grants in respect of wildlife habitats.

Mr. Nicholas Ridley: The council's policy—which I support—is that traditional country pursuits should not be interfered with wherever they are not in conflict with the conservation of species or habitats. Where NCC propose to give grants for the acquisition of land for conservation purposes, they normally expect the new owner to allow traditional rights and uses of the land to continue, and to alter the level or practice of these activities only when it is required for the management of the site for nature conservation.

Water Directives

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many 169 letters have been received by his Department from the European Commission since the beginning of January with respect to the drinking water directive and bathing water directive; and for which specific breaches of those directives.

Mr. Ridley: None.

Rate Capping

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further progress there has been, since his reply to the hon. Member for Banbury on 2 February, Official Report, column 356, in the finalising of rate limits for rate-capped authorities in 1989-90.

Mr. Ridley: I announced on 2 February that Tower Hamlets had accepted the proposed rate limit that I announced in December and that I was seeking the agreement of Hackney and Southwark to limits—113p and 97p respectively—which were higher than those I proposed in December. Southwark accepted the limit I proposed; and I have now agreed a rate limit of 122p with Hackney. In the four cases where I was not minded to agree an increase over the rate limits I proposed in December, I looked very carefully at all the relevant information and representations I had received. I was not persuaded, however, that I should take a different view from that which I announced on 2 February. I therefore yesterday laid an order before the House in draft. I have also now considered some later information I received from Camden, but remain unpersuaded that an increase in their limit would be appropriate. I shall therefore be seeking the approval of the House to the rate limits specified in the draft order.

Hospital Waste (Rixton)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department was notified by Cheshire council waste authority of the dumping of yellow incinerator-only hospital waste bags at Rixton, Cheshire; and what advice it gave.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [Holding answer 13 February 1989]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution was telephoned in April 1988 by Cheshire county council, which was seeking advice on the action to be taken over a substantial quantity of clinical waste that had been landfilled. As the clinical waste had been covered by other wastes the inspectorate advised that it should be left undisturbed. The inspectorate also confirmed that the landfilling of clinical waste had ceased at that time.

Environmental Health Officers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the World Health Organisation guidelines on which the ratio of environmental health officers to population is based.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 13 February 1989]: Decisions on the number of environmental health officers to be appointed are a matter for local environmental health authorities. They are able to take into account the publication of the World Health Office regional office for Europe No. 18 "Development of Environmental Health Manpower" to which I assume that the hon. Member refers.

Green Belt

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the effect of his latest planning circular on Her Majesty's Government's green belt policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 14 February 1989]: The Government remain fully committed to their green belt policy set out in planning policy guidance notes published in January 1988. No subsequent Departmental publication has affected that policy. PPG2 reaffirms earlier advice and provides a clear basis for planning decisions to uphold the green belt principles which have been an essential element of planning policy for over 30 years.

Housing Associations

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received asking to introduce legislation to oblige housing associations to establish local management committees and for tenants to have the right to elect representatives to those management committees.

Mr. Trippier [Holding answer 14 February 1989]: None.

Local Authorities (Funding)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish, for each local authority in England, its capital allocation, in total for 1989-90, showing the percentage change from (a) 1988-89, and (b) 1981-82;

(2) if he will publish, by region and in total for England, capital allocations to local authorities for 1989-90, showing the percentage change from: (a) 1988-89, and (b) 1981-82.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 14 February 1989]: The information requested for 1989-90 is not yet available by region and individual local authority. Table 1 gives the total of capital allocations in 1989-90 for England and the percentage changes over 1981-82 and 1988-89. Local authorities can spend a proportion of their capital receipts in addition to their allocations. Therefore, table 1 also includes information about spending power.

Table 1

	1989-90 £ million	Percentage change over 1981-82	1988-89
Total allocations	2,762	−21	−10
Spending power	7,674	+28	−1

Information on capital allocations issued which is available by region for 1981-82 and 1988-89 is as follows:

Table 2

Region	1981-82 £ million	1988-89 £ million	change Percentage
South East	1,531	1,109	−28
South West	217	208	−4
East Anglia	98	83	−15
West Midlands	314	265	−16
East Midlands	240	178	−26
North West	489	386	−21
Yorkshire and Humberside	331	271	−18
Northern Region	274	176	−36

A significant proportion of the total allocations in 1988-89 (£386 million) has not been issued.

Table 3 giving information on capital allocations issued for 1981-82 and 1988-89 by local authority has been placed in the Library of the House.

TRANSPORT

Fishing Vessels

73. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his officials have held recently regarding the transitional period for the registration of fishing vessels under the terms of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The transitional period is prescribed in the Merchant Shipping (Registration of Fishing Vessels) Regulations which came into force on 1 December 1988. To date, nearly half the 13,000 transfer applications sent out for the new register have been returned. Officials at the registry of shipping and seamen are dealing with queries as fast as they can. Remaining qualified owners who return their applications in good time should be able to transfer their vessels before the end of the transitional period on 31 March.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total amount of revenue accruing to his Department in the last financial year as a result of the levying of light dues on United Kingdom registered fishing vessels; and what was the original estimate.

Mr. Portillo: Responsibility for collecting light dues is vested in the general lighthouse authorities. They have so far received about £120,000 in light dues paid for United Kingdom registered fishing vessels for the financial year 1987-88. Income for the year was originally estimated as about £1 million; the authorities are considering what further action to take to recover the outstanding dues.

Highway Maintenance (Expenditure)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the reasons for the underspend on local authority current expenditure on highway maintenance for 1987-88 being revised from £147 million to £91 million in the public expenditure White Paper 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Prior to the 1989 public expenditure survey, expenditure by local authorities on professional and technical services for road maintenance has been included with similar expenditure on public transport under the separate head of professional and technical services. For the 1989 survey it was agreed with the local authority associations that this expenditure should be charged out to the services concerned. The change is referred to in paragraph 83 of Cm. 288. Because expenditure on professional and technical services for 1987-88 was above the planned figure, the effect was to reduce the underspend on the new definition of road maintenance expenditure. The figures in the 1989 survey (Cm. 608) are also based on revised estimates of expenditure which were not available when the 1988 White Paper (Cm. 288) was published.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average time from the date of the decision to hold a public inquiry to the date when he announces his verdict on the inspector's report.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The length of time between the announcement of a public inquiry and the issuing of the decision letter by the Secretaries of State for Environment and for Transport depends on a number of factors. The main ones are the length and complexity of the scheme, the duration of the inquiry, the length of the inspector's report and the time taken to deliver it, and the implications of the inspector's recommendations.

Twenty-nine inquiries into trunk road schemes were held in 1987 (the last year for which all inspectors' reports have been received). The Secretaries of State have yet to issue decisions on five major schemes: M3 Bar End-Compton, M40 Waterstock-Wendlebury, A1 Bramham-Wetherby and Wetherby-Dishforth (consecutive inquiries) and A6(M) Stockport North-South bypass. Of the remaining 24, the distribution of times taken between announcement of the inquiry and issuing of the decision letter was as follows:

Announcement—Decision

Months	Number of Schemes
9-12	8
13-18	4
over 19	1

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of public inquiries held during the last year into road proposals; what was their average duration; and what was the total cost.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Thirty-two inquiries into trunk road schemes were held in 1988. The following is a breakdown of lengths of inquiry:

Length	Number of Inquiries
1 day	6
2-5 days	8
1-2 weeks	5
2 weeks-1 month	5
1-3 months	6
3-6 months	1
6 months-1 year	1

The direct costs of the facilities necessary for these inquiries (accommodation, photocopying etc.) came to £700,000. The figures for individual inquiries range between £285 and £370,000. Including counsel's and inspector's fees, the costs to the Department vary between £1 million and £2 million annually. It is not possible to assess the indirect costs of departmental and consultants' staff.

Bus Companies (Sale)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for a deadline by which municipal bus companies should be sold to the private sector.

Mr. Portillo: The Government are encouraging local authorities to sell their bus companies and do not rule out the possiblity of seeking powers to require them to do so.

Viaducts

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is yet ready to publish a further report on the midland links viaducts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A 1988 report is published today. We welcome this report for the reassuring news that it brings and for the information that it conveys. It is important to keep the wider public informed about these vital elements in our motorway network. Copies have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

The report confirms that the structures are sufficiently strong to carry the traffic which wants to use them.

The major problem is damage arising from chloride contamination. This is attributable to the original salt-laden water penetrating the structures during the de-icing of the motorways in winters before 1983. We are no longer adding to this problem, as we now use urea. Measures to tackle the consequences of this contamination will be a considerable part of the future programme.

The strategy for the future maintenance of the viaducts comes down to continuous monitoring, repair and maintenance. The accent will remain on value for money and will include further investigation into improving repair techniques.

Highway Authorities (Finance)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report for each highway authority in England (a) its bid for capital allocations and transport supplementary grant for 1989-90, (b) the allocation announced in each case, (c) the allocation as a percentage of the bid in each case and (d) the percentage of each authority's transport supplementary grant allocation attributable to minor works.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is given in the following tables:

Capital allocation for local roads 1989-90

Notes:

[1] Column F does not take into account any adjustments arising from underspends on accepted expenditure in previous years.

[2] Transport supplementary grant will be paid at a flat rate of 50 per cent. of net accepted expenditure (ie after adjustment).

[3] For London, accepted expenditure for transport supplementary grant includes boroughs' shares of expenditure on urban traffic control managed by the City of London on behalf of the Secretary of State which is excluded from boroughs' bid. Hence the gross accepted expenditure, before adjustments, of some London authorities is greater than their TSG bid.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has now received the report of an efficiency scrutiny into his Department's activities in relation to local authorities' capital expenditure on roads; when he intends to publish the scrutiny and his response to its recommendations; and whether he intends to seek the views of the local authority associations before doing so.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has received this report and will make a statement about its publication soon. The local authority associations have already been consulted on a number of the recommendations. Their views on some others which affect local authorities will be sought before final decisions on implementation are taken.

London Area Computer Model

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will set out the results of the London area computer model's evaluation of four transport options for London as developed by the transport and road research laboratory;

(2) what is his Department's policy regarding the use of the London area computer model developed by the transport and road research laboratory and run by two transport consultancies; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make available the report by Martin Vorhees Associates and Colin Buchanan and Partners regarding the computer model used to evaluate transport options for London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Lady to my answer of 15 February to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) at column 214.

Personal Injuries

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each police force area in England and Wales the total number of personal injury accidents during the Christmas period 1986 and 1987 and the percentage in each period which were caused as a result of alcohol.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following table shows the total number of injury accidents between 20 and 31 December, 1986 and 1987, and the percentage of these accidents in which at least one driver or rider failed a subsequent breath test. Data are not collected on the causes of accidents, so the fact that a driver or rider failed the breath test does not mean that alcohol caused the accident. Some other accidents will have involved drivers or riders who, because of the severity of their injuries, could not be tested.

Some police forces breath test a large proportion of drivers or riders involved in accidents, while others test only those who are suspected of drink-driving. This can lead to variations between police force areas in the proportions of drivers or riders who were found to be over the limit.

Because of the small number of accidents involved in some police force areas, differences between two years are not necessarily significant.

Accidents in England and Wales: percentage of accidents in which at least one driver or rider failed a roadside breath test: between 20 and 31 December 1986 and 1987

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in making unleaded petrol available at motorway service areas.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are pleased to report that unleaded petrol should be available at all motorway service areas in England and Wales by this spring.

A1

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the number of (a) road accidents and (b) fatalities on the A1 between Dishforth and Scotch Corner annually from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 13 February 1989]: The details requested for the section of the A1 between Dishforth and Scotch Corner in North Yorkshire are:

Year	Number of Recorded Personal Injury Accidents	Number of these Accidents which Involve Fatality
1980	38	1
1981	34	4
1982	36	3
1983	34	3
1984	36	3

Weighbridges

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the accuracy of all public weighbridges in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

Public weighbridges in Great Britain are verified and stamped by local authorities to establish their fitness for use. I am satisfied that these arrangements are adequate to ensure the accuracy of these installations.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Bangladesh

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many scholarships have been offered in the United Kingdom to citizens of Bangladesh in each of the last 10 years out of United Kingdom public funds.

Mr. Eggar: The number of new scholarships and awards financed each year is as follows:

Year	Number
1979	214
1980	222
1981	263
1982	283
1983	325
1984	302
1985	265
1986	265
1987	340
1988	n/a

Most of these awards (322 in 1987) have been provided through the Overseas Development Administration's technical co-operation training programme. Awards have also been provided through the Commonwealth scholarship and fellowship scheme, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office scholarships and awards scheme, the Department of Education and Science overseas students research awards scheme and through the British Council. Many awards are for a period of more than one year, so the total number of supported students and trainees in the United Kingdom in any year is much larger (more than 620 in 1987) than the number of new awards.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what levels of aid from multilateral and bilateral sources have been made to Bangladesh in each year since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested in respect of British aid is as follows:

Year	British bilateral aid	British aid through multilateral channels	£ '000 Total
1979	33,826	n/a	n/a
1980	66,190	13,340	79,530
1981	33,383	17,350	50,733
1982	23,537	23,450	46,987
1983	24,728	24,710	49,438
1984	35,656	27,170	62,826
1985	41,173	17,770	58,943
1986	38,321	17,820	56,141
1987	34,842	n/a	n/a

Gross multilateral aid for 1979 was not split by recipient. Figures for 1987 (multilateral aid only) and 1988 are not yet available.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid was offered to Bangladesh after the recent flooding.

Mr. Eggar: We have committed £25 million in emergency and rehabilitation aid in response to the recent floods in Bangladesh. This includes 50,000 tonnes of food aid, £5 million through British and local voluntary agencies and a commodity aid grant of £15 million to help meet rehabilitation requirements.

Soil Erosion

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid is given to India, Bangladesh and Nepal in respect of environmental issues to prevent soil erosion and flooding.

Mr. Eggar: In India, our forestry projects in Karnataka state promote tree planting which helps to improve degraded land. We are providing technical co-operation to the national bureau of soil survey and land use planning, one of whose roles is to help prevent environmental degradation. In Bangladesh, we have provided immediate flood relief and supported rehabilitation activities; and we are ready to play our part in any international or regional initiatives on flood alleviation which emerge from studies currently being undertaken by the United Nations and the World Bank. In Nepal, we are funding a study on the links between macroeconomic policies and environmental degradation and several projects to promote forest conservation and reafforestation. We have assisted in the production of a forestry master plan for the next 25 years.

We are keen to do more in these areas and are exploring the options with each Government.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

TUA (Entry Clearance)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department received authorisation to issue entry clearance to TUA (reference IMM/90912); and if he will make a statement about steps taken by his Department to action this entry clearance.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's embassy in Islamabad received authorisation for the entry clearance from the Home Office on 14 December 1988. On 19 December 1988 a letter was sent to the applicant inviting her to call at the embassy for entry clearance, which was issued on 5 January 1989.

Bangladesh

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support and aid have been given to the army and police forces in Bangladesh for each year since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom military training assistance scheme funds three instructors at the Bangladesh defence services command and staff college and attendance at military training courses in Britain.

Assistance to the Bangladesh police has comprised technical, professional and command courses in Britain and basic drugs-related training, as well as provision of communications and drugs-related equipment.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the amount of the largest case of unpaid Customs duty that has come to his attention in the last six years on St. Helena.

Mr. Eggar: The largest case, amounting to £200.10, dated back to January 1983.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on whether the senior customs officer and government secretary of St. Helena were at any time in default of paying Customs duties or wharfage charges.

Mr. Eggar: The senior customs officer was for a while in default in respect of customs duty and wharfage on a vehicle, confectionery, building materials, groceries and films. He paid in full by April 1987. The government secretary at the time was technically in default, but this apparently arose from incorrect advice given to him.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much was lost in uncollected Customs duties and wharfage fees in St. Helena in the last six years.

Mr. Eggar: Arrears of Customs duties totalling £124,671 were identified in January 1987. All arrears were collected by April 1987 with no losses.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the Westerdam based at St. Helena and any financial support given in the last 10 years.

Mr. Eggar: The MV Westerdam was purchased in 1981 by the St. Helena Fisheries Corporation as an offshore fishing vessel. The original purchase did not involve British Government funds but development aid funds totalling £140,000 were spent in 1985 to repair and refit her in preparation for an offshore fisheries survey, also financed from development aid funds. The vessel was sold at the end of 1988 and it is expected that the proceeds will be used by St. Helena Government on other fisheries-related projects.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases of unpaid Customs duties on St. Helena have come to his attention in the last six years; how many were eventually paid in full; and what was the result of any prosecutions.

Mr. Eggar: Fourteen cases of unpaid Customs duties were identified. All have been paid in full. No prosecutions were made.

WALES

Child Care Workers

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of his Department's appropriate grant aid budget has been allocated to the training of child care workers over the last five years to date.

Mr. Grist: Support for social work training is provided as part of the overall support for social services spending through the rate support grant arrangements. Information on the proportion of rate support grant used for such purposes is not held centrally. However in 1988-89 a direct grant of £62,813 is being made available to assist in training professional and other staff who deal with cases of child abuse. As regards 1989-90 I would refer the hon. Lady to the announcement made by my hon. Friend on 23 November 1988, Official Report, columns 6-7.

Caravan Sites

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of caravan sites not licensed by local authorities operated under the auspices of voluntary organisations in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Approximately 850 sites in Wales have been approved by recreational organisations holding an appropriate certificate of exemption for use by no more than five caravans. In addition exempted organisations have established about 25 sites, on a permanent or seasonal basis, for varying numbers of touring caravans for which they have obtained the informal approval of the local authority. Further sites are used by exempted organisations for temporary holiday meetings and rallies of club members lasting no more than five days. Information on the number of temporary meetings is not hold centrally.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of caravan sites licensed under the Caravan Sites (Control of Development) Act 1960 by local authorities in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not held centrally.

Health Visitors

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many qualified health visitors there were in post in Wales at 31 December 1988, on the most recent date for which the information is available; and, of those, how many were identified by the local health authority as being with a Welsh-speaking ability.

Mr. Grist: As at 31 December 1988, 659 (576 whole-time equivalent) health visitors were in post in the National Health Service in Wales. Information on the Welsh-speaking ability of these staff is not available centrally.

Children in Care

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children there were in local authority care for each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: The numbers of children in care on 31 March in each year were as follows:

	Numbers
1979	4,882
1980	4,861
1981	4,628
1982	4,575
1983	4,387
1984	4,044
1985	3,752
1986	3,593
1987	3,481
1988[1]	3,438

[1] Provisional figure.

Trunk Roads (Mid-Wales)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the state of trunk roads in mid-Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A considerable number of improvements have been undertaken in recent years. Our plans for further improvements will be set out in the Welsh commentary on the public expenditure White Paper, and in the forthcoming edition of "Roads in Wales".

Section 4 Grants

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many section 4 grants have been made for each of the past five years in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The section 4 scheme is administered in the Principality by the Wales tourist board. The information is as follows:

	Assistance offered (£ million)	Offers made
1984-85 outturn	2·2	87
1985-86 outturn	3·5	162
1986-87 outturn	3·5	145
1987-88 outturn	2·5	119
1988-89 forecast	3·4	150

Air Pollution

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether he will provide detailed information of the locations at which the lead content of air in Cardiff was measured during the past two years; what levels were recorded; and if he will give the dates on which measurements were made and the methods used;

(2) what evidence he has available of levels of lead pollution in the air in Cardiff over the last 10 years; what trends have been reflected in measurements taken during the period; and what steps he is taking to reduce lead pollution in the atmosphere in Cardiff and elsewhere;

(3) what information he has on the level of lead in the atmosphere which is considered acceptable in the urban environment and the level which is considered to be detrimental to the health of pedestrians and of the public at large.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him today by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley).

Caldy Island

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the local government services provided by (a) South Pembrokeshire district council and (b) Dyfed county council to the residents of Caldy Island, Pembrokeshire; and if he will indicate whether any specific payments are made by the residents for specific local government services.

Mr. Grist: This information is not held by the Department.

Wrexham Maelor Hospital

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many operations were postponed at the hospital's request at the Wrexham Maelor hospital in January.

Mr. Grist: This information is not available centrally.

PRIME MINISTER

Piper Alpha

Q33. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received regarding the recovery of the bodies of men trapped in the wreckage of the Piper Alpha oil production platform.

The Prime Minister: Some hon. Members as well as two bereaved relatives have written to me recently urging that debris should be removed to search further for the missing victims. I well understand the particular distress of the relatives of the victims whose bodies have not been recovered.

In addition, my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Energy and the Minister of State, Department of Energy met representatives of the bereaved and survivors on 15 February to hear their concerns personally.

EC Expenditure

Q51. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will invite the next meeting of the European Council to seek a report from the Court of Auditors about the budget and spending of the European Economic Community; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Court of Auditors' annual report on the Community budget is formally considered by the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers. I welcome the declared intention of the Spanish Presidency to ensure that concrete decisions are taken on the court's latest report.

Newton

Q81. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Newton, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Documents (Leaks)

Q86. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply of 31 January, Official Report, column 161, to the right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock) she will set out the criteria she uses in establishing inquiries into (a) the receipt and (b) the origination of leaks of official documents and (c) the stealing of such documents.

The Prime Minister: No. It is not my practice to comment on matters of this kind.

President Gorbachev

Q174. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister what dates have been fixed for a visit to the United Kingdom by President Gorbachev.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Gorbachev will visit the United Kingdom from 5 to 7 April.

Railways

Mr. Adley: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to improve co-ordination between the Departments of Transport and of the Environment relating to the construction of new railway lines and the relevance of environmental factors related thereto; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Departments of Transport and the Environment already co-operate on such issues. British Rail will be taking full account of environmental factors in putting forward its proposals for a new line between London and the Channel tunnel.

Food

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will restructure ministerial responsibilities so that one Department of State is responsible for the food chain from feed for agriculture through supply and distribution to final consumption, embracing both tourism interests and the catering industry; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Medical Treatment (Overseas Citizens)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the European Economic Community rules which require the United Kingdom to offer free medical treatment to residents of certain French overseas territories but not to residents of certain United Kingdom overseas dependencies; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. All the United Kingdom dependent territories which so wish have bilateral reciprocal health agreements with the United Kingdom. These provide that immediately necessary treatment is available under the NHS for conditions which arise during a temporary visit, on the same basis as to United Kingdom residents. Some of these agreements already also provide that some patients may be referred for treatment of pre-existing conditions free of charge under the NHS. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health will be discussing with some West Indian and Atlantic dependent territories with whom we have reciprocal agreements—Montserrat, Anguilla, Turks and Caicos Islands, British Virgin Islands and St. Helena and its dependencies—the inclusion in their agreements of a similar facility to refer a limited number of patients for pre-existing conditions free of charge.

The French overseas departments, as an integral part of France, are covered by the EC social security regulations. These allow for the provision of immediately necessary treatment on the same basis as residents of the host country. They also allow referral of patients specifically for treatment but the sending country must meet the full cost of the treatment in such cases.

Pay Review Bodies

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the latest reports of the pay review bodies.

The Prime Minister: The 1989 reports of the review bodies on the pay of nursing staff, midwives and health visitors, and professions allied to medicine, the doctors and dentists, and the armed forces, and of the Top Salaries Review Body, have been published today. Copies are now available in the Vote Office. The Government are grateful to members of the review bodies for these reports and for the time and care which they have put into their preparation within the new timetable, enabling decisions to be taken ahead of the new financial year.

The following table shows the increases in pay rates recommended by the review bodies, and their cost:

Review body reports	Pay bill increase	Range of increase	United Kingdom public expenditure cost
	Per cent.	Per cent.	£ million[1]
Armed Forces	6·8	5–8	272
Doctors and dentists	8·8	8–14·1	312
Professions allied to medicine	7·7	7·6–7·8	43
Nurses, midwives and health visitors	6·8	[2]6·7–6·9	420
Top salaries	6·5	[3]4·9–10·6	6

[1] The figures for public expenditure cost differ from those in the review bodies' reports. Their figures do not include some costs which count as public expenditure. The figure for doctors and dentists includes payments for GPs' expenses, not counted as pay. The figure for nurses includes £5 million for the flexible pay experiment and an estimated £3 million for a new grading structure for educational grades, which the review body has not yet costed.

[2] Three chief area nurses grade 4 in Scotland will get increases of 10–13·6 per cent.

[3] This figure does not allow for the recommendation to increase from 25 per cent. to 35 per cent. the quota of civil servants in grades 2 and 3 eligible for discretionary increments. The figure for the pay bill increase does however allow for this. The figure given for the range of increases also excludes restructuring for 13 immigration adjudicators who receive increases of 27·1 per cent., and for the chief immigration adjudicator and the vice-presidents of the immigration appeal tribunal, who get 28·3 per cent.

The Government have decided to accept in full the review bodies' recommendations on armed forces, on professions allied to medicine, and on nurses, midwives and health visitors.

The Government have also decided to accept the recommendation of the review body on doctors and dentists for a basic increase of 8 per cent. for all the groups covered. In the Government's view the creation of 100 additional permanent consultant posts over the next three years, as proposed in the White Paper, "Working for Patients", which was published after the review body report was received will best achieve the objective of improving the long-term career structure for hospital doctors. The creation of these posts will therefore take the place of the increases recommended, in addition to the 8 per cent. basic increase, at the top of the consultants' scale and in the size of consultants' distinction awards. Subject to this, the Government accept the review body's recommendations.

The Government have decided to accept the recommendations of the Top Salaries Review Body in full, except that they consider that the pay of 2-star officers should be around 85 per cent. of the normally attainable maximum of grade 2 civil servants (which is also the pay point for 3-star officers) rather than linked to a performance point for grade 3 civil servants. This will give the 2-star officer a salary at the level recommended by the TSRB.

The full cost of the awards by the Armed Forces Pay Review Body and Top Salaries Review Body groups will be met from within existing public expenditure programme totals for this year. In the case of the health services however, the Government recognise that the full costs could not be accommodated without adversely affecting services to patients. The Government have therefore decided to provide an extra £142 million for health authority cash limits from the reserve for next year. Of the remaining cost, £417 million is already fully covered within the allocations made for this year, leaving a balance of £44 million to be covered from cost improvements. The Government have similarly decided to provide an additional £62 million to the family practitioner services from the reserve for this year, bringing the total addition from the reserve to £204 million. Together with the increases in allocation already announced, the increase in provision for the National Health Service in 1989-90 over 1988-89 will therefore be £1,900 million. In total, taking account of lower employers' superannuation contributions, additional receipts and efficiency savings, the resources available for the National Health Service in 1989-90 will be £2,460 million more than in 1988-89.

The pay rates and scales resulting from the decisions will be promulgated as soon as possible for all the groups concerned.

Engagements

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

Mr. McLoughlin To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the President of Bangladesh.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Estate Agents

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will make a statement on existing legislation and voluntary codes of behaviour which govern the practices of estate agents:

(2) if he will introduce tighter controls over estate agents to eliminate unethical practices.

Mr. Forth: I am currently exploring with estate agency bodies and other interested parties whether and how it might be appropriate to supplement the existing consumer protection provisions of the Estate Agents Act 1979, which includes the consideration of a self-regulatory code of practice. I am also considering the review of the Act recently published by the Director-General of Fair Trading. I hope to be in a position to announce the conclusion of my review soon.

Credit

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to monitor the credit market and in particular, the rates of interest available to personal borrowers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My Department publishes the statistics of United Kingdom credit business monthly in the "Business Monitor", which is available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office. Rates of interest are a matter for commercial decision but the Consumer Credit Act (Total Charge for Credit) Regulations 1980 (SI 1980/51) prescribes all of the charges that must be included in the annual percentage rate of charge, so that this can be made known and that prospective borrowers can make fair comparison before entering into a credit agreement.

Footwear Imports

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the EEC Commission investigation into the imports of footwear from the far east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have received several letters from hon. Members on this issue and also correspondence from members of the footwear industry. The results of the Commission's investigation are expected in the spring. We shall need to see the Commission's findings and recommendations before deciding our own position.

Companies Act Investigations

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to publish the report of the investigation under section 442 of the Companies Act into dealings in Consolidated Gold Fields shares which was commenced in December 1986.

Mr. Maude: As my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary said on 24 January it is his intenion to publish this report as soon as possible. However, it would not be appropriate to do so until the issues raised by the report have been full considered.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table showing for all investigations under the Companies Acts since 1979 the date when the investigation was ordered, the date when the report was given to the Secretary of State, the date when published and the average time between the receipt of such reports and their publication.

Mr. Maude: Such a table could be provided only at disproportionate time and cost to my Department. Details of the appointment of inspectors and publication of their reports are contained in the annual report on companies which is presented to Parliament pursuant to section 729 of the Companies Act 1985 and which is published through Her Majesty's Stationery Office. A copy of each published report is also placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the report of the inquiry under section 442 of the Companies Act to investigate dealings in the shares of Consolidated Golds Fields ordered in December 1986 was released to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission during its recent consideration of the Minorco bid for Consolidated Golds Fields.

Mr. Maude: Yes.

Scottish and Newcastle Breweries

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will require the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to report to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, in connection with its investigation into the proposed acquisition of Scottish and Newcastle Breweries plc by Elders IXL, on the structure of the shareholdings in Elders IXL, an examination of the financial standing of Elders IXL and its major shareholders, an assessment of borrowings of Elders IXL, and the structure and financing of the proposed bid for Scottish and Newcastle Breweries plc; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will require the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to report to him on the resources to be deployed by Elders IXL in connection with its proposed offer to purchase Scottish and Newcastle Breweries plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission is an independent body and it is for it to determine the direction of its investigation of a reference subject. Section 84(1) of the Fair Trading Act 1973 requires the commission to take into account all matters which appear to it in the particular circumstances to be relevant.

Argentine (UK Imports)

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he is taking in response to Argentine resolution 3620/88 ANA which formalises discrimination against imports from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Resolution 3620/88 ANA published on 3 January 1989 in the Official Bulletin publicly confirmed Argentina's unilateral discrimination against the United Kingdom. Argentina has kept British imports out by a variety of administrative measures since 1982, and still refuses to accept our shipping and air services. The United Kingdom does not discriminate against imports from Argentina; we lifted our embargo in 1985.

We are committed to seeking more normal relations with Argentina and have proposed a series of initiatives to that end. The Argentine response has so far been disappointing and the publication of resolution 3620/88 ANA will do nothing to promote better relations.

Our protecting power has already delivered a note of protest. We have drawn the resolution to the attention of the World Bank, since in our view it conflicts with the trade liberalisation policies being supported by a World Bank loan. The European Commission with which we are in close touch on this issue share our concern and have made it clear to the Argentine authorities that there is no scope for developing EC/Argentine relations as long as discrimination against our exports and air and shipping interests continues. Both these organisations have a role to play in persuading Argentina to drop this discrimination.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the British Railways board's Provincial service will be published.

Mr. Maude: The report is published today.

The commission expressed satisfaction with the remarkable improvement in the sector's performance, and made 42 recommendations aimed at bringing about further improvement. It completed its report on 29 September 1988, within the six months allowed by the Secretary of State.

The commission found that Provincial's initial strategy on formation in 1982 was to give priority to cost-cutting. Efforts to increase traffic came later as its organisation and particularly its marketing developed. The result had been a significant reduction in Provincial's call on Government grant. The commission found this very encouraging and a clear endorsement of the concept of sectoral management of the railway business. However, it saw the need for a closer look at individual services and believed that Provincial should now pay more attention to the quality of service it provided.

Evidence submitted to the commission by local authorities and other groups showed a strong desire for improvement in Provincial's services both in quantity and quality. The commission said there could be substantial benefit in a closer local involvement in planning and paying for such services. It accordingly recommended that the board should discuss with Government Departments and other relevant bodies the case for transferring financial responsibility for supporting certain urban and rural services to local government.

The commission was glad to note the action taken by the board to initiate reform of the collective bargaining machinery following the recommendations in the Network SouthEast report. It found that there was scope for significant further productivity gains and made a number of recommendations to this end.

The commission also found that the board, in responding to competition from bus and coach services, was not abusing any monopoly situation existing in its favour. Nor was it in relation to any matter falling within the terms of reference pursuing a course of conduct which operated against the public interest.

British Rail will be producing a preliminary response to the commission's findings within three to four months, in the light of which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will make a statement.

THE ARTS

Victoria and Albert Museum

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the extent to which the redundancy terms offered to staff at the Victoria and Albert museum as a result of restructuring differ from the terms available to all civil servants of those grades.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: I understand that the redundancy terms offered to the staff of the Victoria and Albert museum are those payable under the principal Civil Service pension scheme.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts when the trustees of the Victoria and Albert museum were first informed about the proposed restructuring of staff.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: I understand that the trustees of the Victoria and Albert museum were kept fully informed about the proposals.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what consultations have taken place and on what dates with staff about the proposed staff restructuring at the Victoria and Albert museum.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: I understand that consultations have taken place throughout the last year with staff about the proposed staff restructuring at the Victoria and Albert museum.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the annual salary cost of (a) administrative and (b) curatorial staff at the Victoria and Albert museum.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: I understand that the salary and other staff costs at the Victoria and Albert museum during 1988-89 are expected to total £12·1 million. It is not possible to divide this figure precisely between administrative and curatorial staff.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether the proposed staff restructuring at the Victoria and Albert museum is in accordance with Her Majesty's Treasury's grading guidance.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: The recently announced changes in the organisation of some departments of the Victoria and Albert museum folow a review of the museum's overall organisational structure. I understand that Her Majesty's Treasury's grading guidance is taken into account in all gradings at the Victoria and Albert museum.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Lester: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures for the percentage increase since (a) 1978-79 and (b) 1985-86 in (i) mortgage interest tax relief, (ii) of each of the private pension tax reliefs listed in Cm. 621, table 21.1.25, (iii) in the retail price index, (iv) in the index of average earnings and (v) as index of total personal incomes before tax with 1978 = 100.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Provisional estimates of the percentage changes in the items specified are given in the table.

Percentage change

	1978-79 to 1988-89 percentage	1986-86 to 1988-89 percentage
Cost of tax relief for:
Mortgage interest	+395	+16
Employees' contributions to[1] occupational pension schemes	[2]	+12
Employers' contributions to[1] occupational pension schemes	[2]	−21
Investment income of[1] occupational pension schemes	[2]	+13
Lump sum payments to pensioners[1]	[2]	+11
Contributions to personal pensions[1] (including retirement annuity premia and FSAVCs)	[2]	[3]
Retail prices index	[4]+113	[4]+13
Average male earnings, (all occupations, adult rates)	[5]+174	[5]+28

[1] See footnotes 5 to 8 to table 21.1.25 of Cm. 621.

[2] Estimates of the costs of pension reliefs in 1978-79 are not readily available.

[3] Personal pensions and FSAVC's were not introduced until 1987-88.

[4] The RPI for 1988-89 is not yet available: percentage increases shown are for calendar years 1978 to 1988 and 1985 to 1988 respectively.

[5] Based on actual figures to 1987-88 and a growth rate of 8¼ per cent. for 1988-89, as assumed by the Government Actuary for the purposes of assessing the National Insurance Fund (as in chapter 3 of the 1988 Autumn Statement).

Figures for total personal income before tax are not available for 1988-89. Percentage changes to 1987-88 are as follows:

Percentage change

1978-79 to 1987-88 percentage	1985-86 to 1987-88 percentage
+139	+16

Public Sector Debt

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount of public sector debt was (a) created and (b) repaid in each of the last five financial years, and if he will give an estimate for 1988-89.

Mr. Major: Figures for the creation and the repayment of all public sector debt instruments are not readily available. However, figures for official sales and redemptions of Government marketable securities are given in table 3.5 of "Financial Statistics" (published by the CSO).

Tax and Price Index

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the increase in the tax and price index in the 12 months to December 1988.

Mr. Lilley: In the 12 months to December 1988 the tax and price index rose by 4·8 per cent.

Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of Government income obtained from privatisation since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Since 1979 the Government have obtained net privatisation proceeds of £23½ billion.

Credit Cards

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information is collected by the Treasury concerning bank credit card holders and their indebtedness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The relevant statistics are compiled by the Department of Trade and Industry and are published in its monthly press notice on credit business.

Economic Policy

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the efficacy of his policy for slowing down the economy.

Mr. Lilley: There are clear signs that the recent interest rate rises are having the desired effect.

Taxation

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will accept the recommendation of the Law Society of Scotland in its memorandum of observations on the Inland Revenue consultative document, "Residents in the United Kingdom: The Scope of United Kingdom Taxation for Individuals", that the concept of fiscal connection might be employed to introduce a measure of flexibility to the definition of residents with the aim of avoiding inequitable results.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We are giving careful consideration to all the representations received on the consultative document, including those put forward by the Law Society of Scotland.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by region and for Scotland and Wales and by Department the number of established Civil Service posts for each of the following categories: (a) administrative officers, (b) executive officers, (c) higher executive officers, (d) senior executive officers, (e) principal grade 7 and (f) assistant secretary grade 5.

Mr. Brooke: Figures for staff in post in principal Departments by economic planning region are available in table 3 of "Civil Service Statistics 1988", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. More detailed information about staff numbers by grade, region and Department could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the pay of Civil Service lawyers at grades 2 and 3.

Mr. Brooke: As indicated by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 19 January at column 263, the Government have consulted the TSRB on the proposals affecting the pay of grades 2 and 3 lawyers in Sir Robert Andrew's report on the Government legal services.

From 1 April 1989, greater use will be made of personal pay points on a selective basis for lawyers at these grades. Awards will be related to lawyers' skills, experience, marketability and value to the Department, taking account of the view of the head of the Government legal service in individual cases. The Government will give further thought, with the TSRB, to the implications for the development of performance pay at grades 2 and 3.

Lawyers in London at grade 3, in common with other grade 3 civil servants, will benefit from the Government's acceptance of the TSRB's recommendation of a London allowance of £2,000.

Tax Relief (Education)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all tax relief schemes related to the provision of primary and secondary education in the private sector; and if he will give details of the total cost of such schemes to the Treasury for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 14 February 1989]: I assume that the hon. Member has in mind tax reliefs for private educational establishments which have charitable status.

Charities are generally exempt from income tax, corporation tax and capital gains tax, provided that their income and gains are applied for charitable purposes only.

The provision of education in a registered school is exempt from VAT.

The detailed cost of these reliefs is not available.

Company Cars

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates will be the cost to the Exchequer of tax subsidies on company cars in 1988-89; and what estimate he has made for the next five years.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 February 1989]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the fact that the company car scales do not fully reflect the value to an employee of having the private use of a company car. It is not possible to estimate the precise extent of the undervaluation. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 8 February 1989 at column 553.

CIVIL SERVICE

Staff

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what new initiatives the Civil Service is taking to help recruit and retain staff in the 1990s.

Mr. Luce: Working mothers will be an important section of the labour force in the 1990s. The Civil Service recognises the need to offer working conditions and career opportunities that will be attractive to them. We have therefore revised our policy on financing child care schemes to give Departments the freedom to support these within running cost provisions, where this offers good value for money. We have also clarified the rules on unpaid special leave to encourage Department to give a career break with a right of return for up to five years to staff with family responsibilities. Together with the existing programme of action to increase equality of opportunity for women at all levels we think these new measures will help to ensure that the service can recruit and retain staff in the labour market of the 1990s.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Small Claims

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General how many small claims were brought in England and Wales during the last 12 months for which records are available; and how many and what percentage of such claims were brough by employees against employers.

The Attorney-General: The distribution of the nature and amounts of claims brought in county courts in England and Wales during 1987 is shown in table 4.3 of the 1987 edition of the annual command publication "Judicial Statistics". This was presented to Parliament in July 1988 and is available from the House of Commons Library. No data are collected on claims brought by employees against employers.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Attorney-General what was the average time between the grant of a civil legal aid section 1 certificate and the payment for work done under that certificate and that in respect of all such certificates issued in each of the last 10 years.

The Attorney-General: The average time between the grant of a full civil legal aid certificate and the payment of the first main bill or notification of a nil claim in each of the last 10 years was as follows[1]:

	Non-matrimonial (months)	Matrimonial[2] (months)
1978-79	30·3	14·0
1979-80	29·5	18·1
1980-81	29·1	19·7
1981-82	27·5	20·8
1982-83	28·2	22·7
1983-84	28·7	23·7
1984-85	28·0	24·3
1985-86	27·2	24·8
1986-87	28·4	25·6
1987-88	30·0	26·9

[1] The figures provided are approximations only, based on the overall volume of certificates issued and bills paid during each year.
[2] The figures produced relate to bills paid in respect of certificates issued after 1 April 1977. Information on certificates issued prior to that date is not available. This has necessarily distorted the true average time for matrimonial cases, particularly in the early years.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been convicted for non-violent offences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest readily available information is given in the table:

Sentenced population in prison service establishments in England and Wales: by offence group 30 June 1988

Offence group	Number[1]
Violence against the person	8,660
Sexual offences	2,690
Robbery	3,900
Other offences	20,900
Not recorded	1,840
In default of payment of a fine	560
All offences	38,550

[1] Provisional rounded estimates.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are serving total sentences of six months or less.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to the records held centrally, on 31 December 1988 about 2,920 prisoners, excluding fine defaulters and non-criminals, were serving sentences of six months or less.

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of his departmental guidelines for the evaluation of local authority civil defence plans submitted to his Department for inspection under the planned programme for implementation.

Mr. John Patten: Home Office guidance on the writing of civil defence plans is contained in the emergency planning guidance to local authorities, issued in 1985 and updated in these respects in 1987, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list, naming the local authority concerned, each plan required by schedule 2 to the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 and evaluated under the planned programme for implementation, which is regarded as incomplete;

(2) if he will list, naming the local authority concerned, each plan required by schedule 2 to the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 and evaluated under the planned programme for implementation, which is regarded as having failed to take account of the Government's planning assumptions;

(3) if he will list, naming the local authority concerned, each plan required by schedule 2 to the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 and evaluated under the planned programme for implementation, which is regarded as containing little or no operational detail;

(4) if he will list, naming the local authority concerned, each plan required by schedule 2 to the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 and evaluated under the planned programme for implementation, which is regarded as amounting to little more than a statement of intent.

Mr. John Patten: No. As my right hon. Friend said in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) on 31 January columns 94-95, even the best plans require further work. Details are discussed with individual local authorities, but plans are not categorised in the ways suggested.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will allow routine and independent checks of the use of the police national computer to ensure that police procedures are adequate to maintain privacy.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Access to the police national computer is a matter for chief officers of police. Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary check on access procedures in the course of their annual inspections of forces, however, and this is supplemented by regular audits carried out by forces themselves, and by officers based in the Home Office. The Association of Chief Police Officers keep procedures under regular review, and the Home Office participates in this work. The association is in close touch with the Data Protection Registrar. Against this background, I see no need for further measures.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will institute an independent review of procedures surrounding the use of personal data held on the police national computer by the Police Complaints Authority or the Data Protection Registrar; and whether he will make provision for either body to report to Parliament.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Police Complaints Authority was established to provide an independent element in the investigation of complaints against individual police officers. The authority has no power other than in relation to complaints against police officers, and a matter of this kind is not for it. The authority reports at least annually to my right hon. Friend, and its reports are laid before Parliament.

The Data Protection Registrar has a duty under the Data Protection Act 1984 to promote the observance of the data protection principles laid down in that Act, and has power to investigate specific complaints made to him. He is, however, independent of the Government, and reports directly to Parliament. I shall arrange for his attention to be drawn to this question.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the precedents established by the Police Complaints Authority in its report HC425, concerning data held on police computers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Police Complaints Authority submitted its report under section 97(2) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. This empowers the authority to make a report to my right hon. Friend on any matters coming to its notice under part IX of the Act to which it considers that his attention should be drawn by reason of their gravity or of other exceptional circumstances. Part IX of the Act deals with the procedures for investigating complaints against police officers.

Decisions on when to submit a report under section 97(2) of the Act are a matter for the authority.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement concerning his Department's review of the Data Protection Act; and whether he can outline any timetable for reporting, legislative changes, or subsequent White Papers.

Mr. Renton: The interdepartmental review committee will report to Ministers as soon as posible but no specific timetable has been set. We shall consider in due course what further action may be necessary in the light of the review committee's recommendations.

Forensic Pathology

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the reasons for the delay in producing the report of the working party on forensic pathology.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the work has presented many difficulties, including the reconciliation of various conflicts of interest. As a result, it has taken time to draw up conclusions on which the various members of the working party could agree.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the dates when the current director of the forensic service science laboratory at Chepstow had meetings with the chief constables of each of the police forces which the laboratory serves.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the last two years, the director of the Chepstow forensic science laboratory has met chief constables of the forces which the laboratory serves on the following dates:

1987
23 March
7 September
23 September
7 December
17 December

1988
13 January
3 March
14 March
24 March
3 May
6 July
12 September
25 November
12 December
15 December

Most of these meetings were either regional gatherings attended by chief constables from a number of forces, or meetings of the laboratory's user board, which is chaired by a chief constable.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has now received the working party report on forensic pathology.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The working party is to meet in April to consider the final draft of the report. It is hoped that the working party will submit its report to my right hon. Friend shortly thereafter.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times since 1984 has the Home Office working party on forensic pathology met.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since December 1984, the working party has met formally on six occasions.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable as to how many people were reported missing in Leicestershire during each of the last five years for which records are available; and how many and what percentage were subsequently traced.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Statistics of missing persons are published by the chief constable in his annual reports (P. 14 of the issue for 1987), copies of which are available in the Library.

Illegal Parking

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought by local authorities under section 35 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 in each year since its enactment.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available centrally.

CS Gas

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those individuals and authorities who have made representations to him about introducing a new range of police riot weapons capable of firing both plastic bullets and CS gas canisters.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Only CS equipment and plastic baton rounds and launchers of a type authorised by the Home Office may be used by police forces in England and Wales in situations of serious public disorder. Use of the equipment is subject to very strict conditions which my right hon. Friend announced in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 19 May 1986 at columns 15-16.

Equipment for use in situations of serious public disorder is kept under review. The police have made representations about the current plastic baton round system and a number of different plastic baton round systems have been tested. No decision has been taken to replace the existing system.

Immigration

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) why he requires the dates of birth of individuals involved in immigration cases, his reference PO26926/88 and 22975/88, about which the hon. Member for Leyton has made representations;

(2) why he requires the full name of individuals involved in immigration cases, his reference PO26926/88 and 22975/88, about which the hon. Member for Leyton has made representations when the hon. Member provided the names made known to him;

(3) whether he has any knowledge of the reason why the hon. Member for Leyton received from his Department on 8 February letters which were dated 30 October 1988 and 22 November 1988 asking for the full names and dates of birth of individuals involved in immigration cases about which the hon. Member has made representations.

Mr. Renton: When letters from Members making representations in immigration cases do not supply sufficient information for the papers of the individual concerned to be traced, further details have to be requested in order for the representations to be followed up. This applies to the cases and letters listed above. If hon. Members do not respond to requests for more information within a certain time a reminder letter is sent.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take appropriate action to prevent discriminatory practices against prisoners in United Kingdom prisons who may be HIV positive or have developed symptoms of AIDS.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In England and Wales the management of prisoners identified as HIV antibody positive is a matter for the governor and medical officer, taking account of local circumstances and the needs of the individual prisoner. Central guidelines stress the importance of enabling those who are well to participate as fully as possible in normal prison life. This is also emphasised in staff training and in an educational package which will shortly be available for use with prisoners. Plans for the care and support of prisoners who develop AIDS or AIDS-related illness are modelled on best practice in the general community. Referral to specialised facilities within the National Health Service is arranged when this is clinically indicated.

Practice elsewhere in the United Kingdom is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. D. R. Lidington

Mr. Mullins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the responsibilities of Mr. D. R. Lidington.

Mr. Hurd: Mr. Lidlington is a special adviser who provides advice on a wide range of Home Office subjects.

Police Force Areas

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by each police force area for England and Wales the total population and area in square miles.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information can be found at columns (f) and (g) of appendix 7 to the report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary for 1987, a copy of which is to be found in the Library.

Petty Officer John Black

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commisioner of Police of the Metropolis as to why the Metropolitan police are not prepared to allow Mr. and Mrs. K. Crane of Melton Mowbray, or their solicitors, to see the report of two Scotland Yard officers who investigated the circumstances relating to the death in Spain of Petty Officer John Black, Royal Navy; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 15 February 1989]: Access to the report is a matter for the commissioner. It is a general rule that police reports following inquiries remain confidential.

Probation Services

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many county probation services have framed explicit statements of local objectives.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 8 February 1989]: Fifty four area probation services have produced statements of local objectives in one form or another. One has produced a statement of local priorities and one a review of local objectives, priorities and tasks.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Food Research

Dr Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about his plans for the future of the institutes of food research.

Mr. Jackson: In line with the intentions first outlined in the Agricultural and Food Research Council corporate plan for 1984-1988, directors of the council's eight institutes have been asked to produce long-term for reorganising their activities on to a smaller number of sites.

The Institute of Food Research will present to the AFRC options for the restructuring of its three laboratories on to two sites. The council will then make a decision based on a detailed analysis and appraisal of these options and taking full account of the scientific programme of the institute.

Primary Teachers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set up a national scheme for one year placements of newly qualified primary teachers in areas of severe shortage of such teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No.

Physical Education (Qualifications)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the number of applicants to take (a) GCSE in physical education in 1988 and (b) O-level or GCE in physical education in the five previous years.

Mrs. Rumbold: In 1987, about 11,700 pupils in schools in England attempted CSE or GCE O-level examinations in physical education. Comparable information is not available in respect of previous years, nor yet centrally in respect of GCSE examinations taken in 1988.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many complaints he has received in respect of the conduct of ballots for grant-maintained schools; and if he will list in respect of each (a) the sender of the complaint, (b) the authority concerned and (c) the nature of the complaint.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: A number of parents, teachers, governors and others have expressed concern to my Department about the conduct of ballots and associated procedures at schools considering seeking grant-maintained status. Such expressions of concern are frequently made in confidence, and it would not be appropriate for me to provide the details requested. The purpose of my Department's letter of 13 February to chief education officers was to draw attention to the need for ballots and the associated procedures to be conducted fairly and responsibly, and to my powers to consider and determine formal complaints.

National Curriculum

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he anticipates that orders relating to the introduction of parts of the national curriculum will be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I expect to lay orders for mathematics and science next month and for the first key stage in English around the end of April. The timing of further orders will depend on statutory consultations on proposals.

Student Finance

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the estimated total cost of the review of the student finance which he established in June 1986; how many staff were engaged upon it; how many representations were received about it; and what overseas trips by Ministers, officials and consultants were undertaken, by whom and at what cost.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The review of student support was conducted within Government, under the supervision of a group of Ministers and officials of which the membership and secretariat numbered seventeen. Since most of the staff engaged in the review were ordinarily involved, to a greater or lesser degree, in matters relating to student support, the significant additional costs arising from the review were essentially those relating to overseas visits; the commissioning of surveys of students' income and expenditure; the hiring of a consultant to advise on student support arrangements in other countries; and the publication of the White Paper. Four trips overseas were undertaken by a Minister, accompanied by one official at a cost of £4,600. The other costs were:

Surveys	235,000
Consultancy	10,000
White Paper	4,500

The review received written evidence from over 100 organisations, seven petitions signed by a total of 1,300 people, and almost 1,600 letters.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations have been received about the proposals for student loans contained in the White Paper Cm. 520 from (a) organisations and (b) individuals; how many of these are in favour of the proposals and how many are against them.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: About 4,500, including about 140 formal responses from organisations, and expressing a variety of views.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing for each year from 1979 to date (a) the number of surplus school places removed, (b) the target number specified for that year in the public expenditure White Paper or elsewhere and (c) (a) expressed as a percentage of (b).

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information is given in the table:

Year	The number of surplus school places removed 000s (a)	The Public Expenditure White Paper Target 000s (b)	per cent. (a)/(b)
1979-80
1980-81	542	470	115
1981-82
1982-83
1983-84	158	160	99
1984-85	155	160	97
1985-86	132	168	79
1986-87	118	167	71
1987-88	124	139	89
1988-89	n/a	137	—
1989-90	n/a	133	—

The column (b) figures for 1987-88 to 1989-90 represent revised targets arrived at following discussion with the local authority associations.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total number of surplus school places available for removal represented by decisions made by him or pending in respect of proposals for the closure or reorganisation of schools.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The number of surplus places planned to be taken out of use following my approval of statutory school reorganisation proposals since May 1986 is 103,500. In addition substantial numbers of surplus places have been removed as a result of other action by LEAs, such as removing temporary classrooms, rationalising split sites, and mothballing surplus classroom accommodation. The remainder of the question can be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce his decisions in respect of applications for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend gave on 24 January at column 476.

Medical Students (Top-up Loans)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations have been received concerning the introduction of top-up loans for medical students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: About 200—mostly from hon. Members, who will receive a full reply.

Examination Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Pembroke on 13 February, Official Report, column 5, concerning A-level, O-level and CSE examinations sat and achieved as a percentage of the year group, when the information requested will be available on the same basis as was provided on 11 January 1988, Official Report, columns 42-46.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information given in the table is presented in terms of leavers from maintained schools in England in 1986-87. This is on the same basis as provided to my hon. Friend in the Official Report for 11 January 1988, columns 42-46 for the year 1985-86.

University of Wales Registry

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much recurrent grant was awarded to the University of Wales registry for each of the years of its existence.

Mr. Jackson: Recurrent grants made to the Welsh registry on the advice of the University Grants Committee since 1979-80 are listed below. Information about previous years is available from "Statistics of Education—Volume 6" and, for the years before 1966-67, "Returns from Universities and University Colleges".

Teachers' Pay and Conditions

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the second report of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: It is being published today. Its main recommendations are:

a 6 per cent. increase in the main pay scale for teachers from 1 April 1989.
a 7 per cent. increase in the value of the five rates of incentive allowances from 1 April 1989.
a 7·5 per cent. increase in the salaries of the 55,000 Heads and Deputies from 1 April 1989. an extra 9,500 incentive allowances for the 1989-90 academic year, on top of the additional 18,000 already planned.
a 5·6 per cent. increase in London allowances from 1 July 1988.

I propose to accept the committee's recommendations in full. I am today initiating the consultation required by section 3(1) of the Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1987 by writing to the relevant local authority associations, teacher unions and bodies representing the interests of the governors of voluntary schools, setting out my proposals. The text of the letter is as follows:

Teachers pay and conditions of employment

1. On 14 September 1988 I asked the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions to examine and report to me on certain issues. I enclose a copy of the Committee's report which is being published today. The Committee's recommendations are summarised in Chapter 9 of its report. I propose to make an Order giving effect to the recommendations referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3 below. But before I take a decision on what provision the Order should make, I invite your views. This letter therefore initiates the consultation required by Section 3(1) of the Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1987.

2. I propose to accept the Committee's recommendations that

(i) the salaries of all qualified teachers should be raised by a uniform 6 per cent. to the figures set out in paragraph 4.13 of the Committee's report with effect from 1 April 1989;
(ii) the salaries of unqualified teachers should be raised by the same percentage (paragraph 4.13). The allowance for teachers of the visually impaired and hearing impaired would also be increased by 6 per cent.;
(iii) the spot salaries for Heads and Deputies should be increased by 7·5 per cent. with effect from 1 April 1989 (paragraph 4.21);
(iv) the rates of the London area allowances should be increased by 5·6 per cent. with effect from 1 July 1988 (paragraph 5.16);
(v) the value of each of the incentive allowances should be increased by 7 per cent. with effect from 1 April 1989 (paragraph 4.34);
(vi) the planned number of incentive allowances should be expanded from September 1989 by 9,500 (5,000 extra A allowances; 2,500 B allowances; 1,500 C allowances and 500 D allowances): (paragraphs 4.31 and 4.32). There will need to be some consequential revisions to the limits relating to incentive allowances in Annex A to Appendix I of the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1988 (paragraph 4.33).

3. The Committee makes a number of other recommendations which would require amendments to the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1988 (the 1988 Document):

a. that teachers returning to regular full-time or part-time teaching should be paid on re-entry at no lower point on the mainscale than when last employed as a regular full-time or part-time teacher (paragraph 5.21);
b. that, contingent upon the introduction of the proposed licensed teacher arrangements, there should be discretion for local authorities or governors, as appropriate, to pay licensed teachers at either qualified or unqualified rates (paragraph 5.26);
c. that local authorities (and, at the appropriate point, governors of schools with delegated budgets) should be given discretion to accelerate a teacher's progression to the top of the main scale (paragraph 5.29);
d. that once the necessary regulations under Section 218 of the Education Reform Act have been made, a teacher who is awarded Qualified Teacher Status (QTS) retrospectively should be entitled to receive back pay from any authority he/she has worked for from the date from which his/her qualification runs, to make good any difference between what he/she was actually paid up to the point when QTS was awarded and what he/she would have been entitled to as a qualified teacher (paragraph 5.41);

e. that the discretions over pay and conditions currently exercised by local education authorities set out in Appendix I of the report should be transferred to governing bodies of schools with budgets delegated under Chapter III of Part I of the Education Reform Act 1988 (paragraph 7.24) and that the decision on whether it is "reasonably practicable to provide a supply teacher" should transfer to the governors in those schools where the governing body have been made responsible, under the relevant LMS scheme, for managing the arrangements for providing supply teachers (paragraph 7.26);

f. that the functions, both mandatory and discretionary, currently allocated to LEAs under the 1988 Document should be allocated to governing bodies of grant maintained (GM) schools (paragraph 7.28);

g. that where a GM school was formerly a voluntary school, a head teacher should carry out his-her professional duties in accordance with any trust deed applying to the school (paragraph 7.29);

h. that salary safeguarding on a discretionary basis and discretionary safeguarding on London allowance and social priority allowance should apply in both directions between a GM school and its former maintaining authority (paragraph 7.31);

i. that the provision in relation to cover at sub paragraph 35(9)(b)(ii) of the 1988 Document should be amended in the direction of wording suggested by the Professional Association of Teachers (paragraph 8.9);

j. that the reference to payment for midday supervision at paragraph 23 of the 1988 Document should be deleted (paragraph 8.14);

k. that the reference to education legislation in the "overriding requirements" section of head teachers' conditions of employment—paragraph 27(i) of the 1988 Document—should be updated to include the Education Reform Act 1988 (paragraph 8.24);

l. that specific reference should be made in both head teachers' and school teachers' conditions of service to the Basic (including National) Curriculum, and, in the case of head teachers, to the collective worship requirements of the Education Reform Act (paragraph 8.25).

I propose to accept all these recommendations.

4. The Order I propose to make to give effect to all of the above would do so by bringing into effect a new School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document. The Committee's remaining recommendations do not require changes to the 1988 Document: I do not therefore propose to change the Document in response to those recommendations. Nor is it intended to revise the RSG settlements for 1989-90 on account of the proposals set out in paragraphs 2 and 3 above. The cost will be offset in part by the greater than expected reduction in the employers' contributions to the Teachers' Superannuation Scheme which I announced on 10 February.

5. Any comments on the proposals set out above and on any other matters raised in the report are invited by 10 March. If you would like to express your views in a meeting would you let my office know of this as soon as possible so that any meetings can take place before Easter.

6. Following these consultations a new School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document will be prepared. There will then be opportunity to comment on the precise wording of the amendments prior to the publication of the new Document and the laying before Parliament of an Order which will give effect to its provisions.

7. The Interim Advisory Committee say that they hope it will be possible for a copy of the report to be seen by teachers in every maintained school. Enough copies of the report are being sent to each local education authority for a copy to be circulated in each school.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the level of parental contributions to the fees of pupils in the assisted places scheme in 1989-90.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Subject to the usual consultations and to parliamentary approval, the parental contribution scales will be adjusted upwards for the school year 1989-90 as set out below. In addition the allowance against parental income in respect of each dependent child other than the assisted place holder is to be increased to £1,000.

Clinical Academic Staff (Pay)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether additional funds will be provided for the universities in 1989-90 in respect of pay for clinical academic staff.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Subject to parliamentary approval of the relevant Estimate, an additional £2·8 million will be provided in grant to the Universities Funding Council in 1989-90 in respect of pay for clinical academic staff. This increase takes account of the increase in funding for the hospital and community health service in respect of the recommendations of the Doctors and Dentists Review Body. It will be charged to the Reserve and so will not add to the public expenditure planning total.

Children (Employment)

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many prosecutions have been taken out as a result of investigations by education welfare officers in each year since 1973 for alleged offences in connection with the employment of children; how many employers have been so prosecuted; with what result; and what was (a) the highest, (b) the average and (c) the lowest penalty imposed following a conviction.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

Information about alleged offences in connection with the employment of children does not separately identify prosecutions taken out as a result of investigations by education welfare officers.

The available figures relating to prosecutions and fines for all forms of employment are as follows:

Industrial Undertakings

Prosecutions by the Health and Safety Executive under Section 1 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act 1920 and concerning the illegal employment of children.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC (Deaths)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the RUC and RUCR were killed as a result of road traffic accidents during (i) 1986 and (ii) 1987; how many were killed by terrorists in the same period; and of those killed during 1986, 1987 and 1988, how many were killed whilst on duty.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information is as follows:

	Road traffic accidents Total	On duty	Terrorism Total	On duty
1986	8	2	12	8
1987	3	nil	16	10
1988	11	1	6	4

Extradition

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has made extradition applications for terrorist or other offences; and how often, by whom and for what reasons such requests have been rejected.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Information about extradition applications under the backing of warrants procedure with the Republic of Ireland is contained in the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross) on 13 December Official Report, column 516. In addition, five requests for extradition to the Republic of Ireland were made during 1988, of which one was granted and the remainder are pending.

Information on extradition applications to other countries is not held centrally and would be available only at disproportionate cost. The number is likely to be small.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Stockpile

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on nuclear weapons, the level of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's nuclear stockpile referred to therein is defined by (a) total explosive capacity, (b) collective lethality based on explosive capacity and accuracy or (c) number of deliverable warheads.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The nuclear stockpile referred to in the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on 30 January at column 31 is defined in terms of the number of nuclear warheads stockpiled in Europe.

Low Flying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all areas, objects, settlements, buildings and installations in the Workington constituency which pilots of low-flying military aircraft are currently advised to avoid, giving in each case the horizontal and vertical limits of avoidance.

Mr. Neubert: The whole of the United Kingdom is open for low flying except for major conurbations, danger areas and certain areas such as civil and military air traffic zones, airports, glider sites, high obstacles, and nuclear power stations. It is not our practice to release details of the United Kingdom low flying system.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the additional restrictions on night low flying introduced following the Tornado mid-air collision in Cumbria on 9 August 1988;

(2) if a review of night low flying regulations is being conducted following the collision between two Tornados over Cumbria on 9 August 1988; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what additional flow control measures are currently in force for low flying at night, over and above those currently in force for daylight low flying.

Mr. Neubert: Although there was no evidence to suggest that there was anything wrong with the night low flying system itself, following the mid-air collision near Penrith in August 1988, a six-month trial of a revised night low level flying system was introduced with the aim of increasing the co-ordination of activity at night and improving deconfliction procedures. In this system, areas of the United Kingdom are allocated to commands on a nightly basis and commands are responsible for deconflicting their own aircraft. General flow of traffic from sector to sector in each area is in a clockwise direction around the country. Within these sectors aircraft are allowed to fly in any direction except where specifically prevented from doing so. At the end of the trial its effectiveness will be examined and any appropriate changes made.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when flow control was first introduced for low-flying aircraft in the Keswick area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: As an interim measure, following the mid-air collision near Keswick on 17 June 1987, an unidirectional traffic flow system was introduced in the whole of the Lake District. As a result of subsequent work a revised procedure came into operation on 1 September 1987 which provided separation between aircraft flying along the valley of the A591 between the Grasmere and Bassenthwaite lakes in a north westerly direction only, and others overflying on various routes at higher levels.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what use is made by RAF Spadeadam of radar information from the national air traffic services radar stations located on (a) Green Lowther, Strathclyde and (b) Knock Fell, Cumbria;

(2) what is the capacity of the radar equipment at RAF Spadeadam to monitor and control low-flying aircraft movements in low flying area 13.

Mr. Neubert: The arrangements for monitoring and controlling aircraft using Spadeadam range (low-flying area 13) are entirely adequate. Information from the unmanned radar stations at Green Lowther and Knock Fell is not fed directly to RAF Spadeadam.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent the low flying avoidances marked on military low flying charts are mandatory; and what sanctions are used to enforce adherence to these restrictions.

Mr. Neubert: Aircrew are instructed not to fly low in avoidance areas unless prior approval has been granted by the Ministry of Defence. The RAF police conducts covert surveys from time to time throughout the United Kingdom in order to establish whether height and other rules are being observed and action is taken, where appropriate, against aircrew found to have infringed regulations.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice is given to military pilots concerning low flying over or in the immediate vicinity of the town of Keswick.

Mr. Neubert: As the hon. Member is aware, pilots are instructed to avoid overflying the centres of major conurbations and built up areas such as Keswick at low level. Although we cannot guarantee to avoid overflying the outskirts of major towns and smaller communities, pilots will make every effort to avoid populated areas wherever possible.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many foreign aircrew have infringed the regulations governing the United Kingdom low flying system since 1971.

Mr. Neubert: A record of the number of invesigations revealing infringements of the United Kingdom low flying system regulations by foreign aircrews since 1971 is not held centrally and could not be provided without disproportionate effort.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and locations of all public meetings on low flying held by (a) the Royal Air Force and (b) his Department over the last five years.

Mr. Neubert: According to available records, the Ministry of Defence has held the following public meetings on low flying over the last five years:

[1]RAF Presentation Team plus official from MOD Low Flying Presentation Team.

On numerous occasions in the past the Directors of Public Relations (RAF) have additionally lectured to public audiences in various parts of the country but no records are held detailing those occasions.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when flow control was first introduced in the United Kingdom low flying system.

Mr. Neubert: Unidirectional traffic flows have been in use since before introduction of the current low flying system in 1979.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum number of aircraft permitted to operate at any one time within low flying area 17 (a) during daylight hours and (b) at night; and whether any alteration to these figures has been instituted in the last 10 years.

Mr. Neubert: It is not our practice to release such detailed information relating to the United Kingdom low flying system.

Air Force Act 1955

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions since 1971 on which proceedings have been instituted against Royal Air Force personnel under sections (a) 49(b) 51 and (c) 52 of the Air Force Act 1955; and what were the outcome of the proceedings in each case.

Mr. Neubert: The table provides the details of Royal Air Force personnel who have been convicted by court martial under the sections mentioned.

Section	Year	Number of cases	Rank	Sentence
Section 49	1972	1	Flight Lieutenant	Dismissed the Service
Section 49	1974	1	Aircraftman	Dismissed the Service
Section 49	1983	2	Flight Lieutenant (tried together)	Both awarded Severe Reprimands
Section 51 and 52	1985	1 (charged under both sections)	Flight Lieutenant	£300 fine and Severe Reprimand

Records are not kept centrally of any cases where disciplinary action is commenced but not proceeded with.

Air Misses

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the total number of air misses involving military aircraft in United Kingdom airspace in each year since 1979; and how many of these were assessed as having (a) definite risk of collision, (b) possible risk of collision and (c) no risk of collision;

(2) if the Civil Aviation Authority's new policy of publishing details of air misses in United Kingdom airspace applies to those involving military aircraft; and what consultations took place between his Department and the Civil Aviation Authority before the decision on the new information policy.

Mr. Neubert: In his statement on 3 March, columns 654-56 of the Official Report my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport set out the special reasons for making public the findings of the joint airmiss working group in relation to airmiss reports involving commercial air transport aircraft in United Kingdom airspace. This policy was introduced after discussions with the Ministry of Defence and applies to all such instances, including those where military aircraft are involved. In order to preserve the confidentiality of the airmiss investigation system, however, I will not publish any detailed information relating to other airmiss reports involving military aircraft. The relevant statistics on airmiss reports involving military aircraft in United Kingdom airspace are as follows:

Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what access his Department has to the reports of aircraft accident inquiries relating to foreign military aircraft accidents in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neubert: Arrangements exist whereby appropriate information on foreign aircraft accidents in the United Kingdom can be made available to the Ministry of Defence, particularly where there are flight safety implications for our services.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if details of the circumstances and causes of accidents to foreign military aircraft occurring in the United Kingdom are recorded on the aircraft accident data computer in the Royal Air Force inspectorate of flight safety.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Education

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to adopt a common syllabus for all British forces education service schools so that when parents move on military posting children should be able to continue their education with the least disruption.

Mr. Neubert: Currently, at the secondary level, service children's education authority schools largely follow the syllabi of the Southern examining group. Moreover, all service children's schools will introduce the national curriculum in accordance with the provisions of the Education Report Act 1988, and the timetable specified by the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

DROPS

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature of the trials carried out on the medium mobility DROPS vehicles delivered in October 1988; and if he will make a statement on the results in respect of their duration and mileage in road-running and in cross-country applications, and as to the conclusions drawn therefrom.

Mr. Sainsbury: Two vehicles were delivered to Germany in October 1988 to take part in user trials, which lasted for two months. In the course of the trials, they took part in a major Army exercise, Iron Hammer, and overall convered distances in excess of 7,500 km each. The majority of the running was under realistic exercise conditions with about 10 per cent. cross-country, 10 per cent. off-road and the remainder on German roads and highways. The vehicles performed very satisfactorily, as expected, and confirmed their ability to meet the operational requirement for DROPS.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the military implications of the reduction in the performance objectives for the medium mobility DROPS.

Mr. Sainsbury: No; the Leyland-DAF medium mobility load carriers meet the operational requirement for DROPS.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what payments have been made to Leyland-DAF, additional to contract sums, to enable improvements to be made to DROPS vehicles.

Mr. Sainsbury: Individual payments to contractors are commercial-in-confidence, but as forecast in my reply to my right hon. Friend on 22 January 1988 column 903 the modification costs were not substantial and were within the approved programme limits.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assurances have been given to Leyland-DAF with respect to the ordering of long lead-time items for DROPS vehicles.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Director of Projects

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the posting of the director of projects.

Mr. Sainsbury: I presume that my right hon. Friend is referring to the director of projects formerly concerned with DROPS. His move was a routine career posting, the timing of which was related to the availability of a successor.

SDI

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the agencies, companies and institutions in Britain which have benefited from the strategic defence initiative research programmes under arrangements directly under the supervision of the Ministry of Defence, directly contracted to the United States of America, or subcontracted to the United States of America via third parties.

Mr. Sainsbury: The British agencies, companies and institutions which have been awarded contracts by the Ministry of Defence, which were initiated through United States-funded SDI contractual arrangements made on a Government to Government basis, are as follows:

1. Aerobee Defence Technology
2. Admiral Computing
3. Barr and Stroud
4. British Aerospace

5. BMARC
6. CAP Scientific
7. Cranfield Institute of Technology
8. Culham Laboratory
9. EASAMS
10. Ferranti
11. Fluid Gravity
12. GEC-Marconi
13. Hunting Engineering
14. Logica
15. NEI-IRD
16. Optical Coatings Ltd
17. Plessey
18. PA Defence Services
19. Philips Components
20. Racal
21. Rolls-Royce
22. Royal Ordnance
23. Rutherford Appleton Laboratory
24. Scicon
25. Shorts
26. Software Sciences
27. Thorn EMI
28. Theta Analysis

The detail associated with SDI research contracts placed on United Kingdom entities by United States Government agencies or companies is a matter for the parties concerned.

Contracts

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his practice to answer parliamentary questions asking for information on the details and value of individual contracts with outside firms.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. However, information regarding the overall level of MOD business with a particular contractor is made available.

Aldermaston and Burghfield (Programme Audit)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 18 January, Official Report, column 199, what was the nature of the information that was discussed at the eight meetings between his officials and the British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. team carrying out the programme audit at Aldermaston and Burghfield.

Mr. Sainsbury: MOD management information on the scope and overall objectives of the capital construction programme and the status at that time of the four major projects under review.

Royal Ordnance (Site Sales)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the outline planning applications submitted by Royal Ordnance in respect of its Waltham Abbey and Enfield, North sites had been determined before the sale of Royal Ordnance to British Aerospace.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. The applications were submitted in January 1987 and had not been determined when the sale took place in April 1987. The applications were rejected in June 1987. One is now the subject of an appeal.

Accountants and Cost Estimators

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many qualified accountants and technical cost estimators, whose principal tasks are to assist and advise in the pricing and post-costing of non-competitive contracts, are employed by his Department; and what is their average salary.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Procurement Executive employs 122 qualified accountants and 513 technical cost officers to assist in the pricing and post costing of non-competitive contracts. The main working grades within each group are on national salary scales with maxima of £18,245 and £14,558 respectively. The majority of these staff are located outside the London area; however those based in the inner London weighting area receive an additional £1,750.

Soldiers (Family Compensation)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of the size of the offers of compensation to families of the six soldiers killed in Lisburn; and what means are available to him to ensure that compensation goes beyond the concept of financial loss arising from death.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have been asked to reply on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Under the criminal injuries legislation in Northern Ireland, a soldier's family will be compensated for any financial loss or expenses resulting from his death. Compensation is paid as a tax-free lump sum representing the value of past and capitalised future loss and is assessed broadly on the basis of common law practice. The general objective of the statutory scheme is to ensure that the victim or, if he has died, his dependants, do not suffer financial hardship. It is not and could not be designed to put an arbitrary assessment on the value of a life lost to bereaved members of the dead person's family. Such a loss is beyond price.

Nevertheless, in recognition of the immediate problems which may be faced upon bereavement by the closest members of the family, amending legislation (which came into force on 1 July 1988) provides for the payment of a bereavement award of £3,500 but, as in common law, it is payable only to the spouse of a victim or the parents of an unmarried minor. These same principles are followed by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in Great Britain, but exceptionally in Northern Ireland there is no upper limit on financial loss compensation where the death was caused by a terrorist act.

Offers of compensation have been made to the parents of the three single soldiers killed at Lisburn and to the widow of a fourth who was married. Compensation will be assessed in the two remaining cases when outstanding information on the widow's financial loss is received. In the case of the single soldiers, the offers were based on the financial contributions each made to his parents and the length of time the contributions might reasonably have been expected to continue; this is the common law practice. The offer made to the widow of the married soldier took account of the deceased's earnings and his promotion prospects, projected to the normal date of retirement. Any applicant who is dissatisfied with the amount of compensation determined has a statutory right of appeal to the courts.

In addition to statutory compensation, payments are made by the Government under the armed forces pensions scheme and the war pensions scheme. Under the former, financial support in the form of a pension and a tax-free lump sum is provided for widows and dependent children and in the case of a single soldier whose death is attributable to service a tax-free lump sum is paid to his estate. The minimum lump sum paid to the estate of an unmarried soldier below the rank of corporal is £8,792 and the estates of single corporals and sergeants receive at least £11,336 and £12,498 respectively.

The widow of a soldier whose death is attributable to service is entitled, for a period of six months, to a short-term pension under the armed forces pensions scheme based on her husband's daily rate of pay, and thereafter to an attributable family pension for herself and any children. A tax-free lump sum is also payable. The annual pension for the widow of a soldier below the rank of corporal amounts to £3,312 plus £879 per child and for the widows of corporals and sergeants to £4,457 plus £1,134 per child and £4,980 plus £1,250 per child respectively. For the same ranks the minimum lump sum entitlements are £13,188, £17,004 and £18,747.

Under the latter the widow of a soldier with a rank up to and including sergeant would, if under 40 and without dependent children, be entitled to an average pension of £12·40 per week. Otherwise she would be entitled to an average weekly pension of £53·55 and £12 for each dependant child. Allowances for age (for widows over age 65), rent and the education of dependant children may also be paid.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Families (Benefits)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the number of (i) family income supplement claimants in 1987 and (ii) family credit claimants at the latest date available broken down into one and two earner families.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At April 1987, the latest date for which information is available, 209,000 families with one earner and 11,000 families with two earners were in receipt of family income supplement. Equivalent information for family credit is not available.

Social Fund

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report, the text of his Department's circular reference RD LO 113.88 on the social fund.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The document to which the hon. Member refers is, in fact, an internal management communication which is not normally intended to be in the public domain. Its purpose is to give information to local office managers.

The text of the document is as follows:

"You will be aware that the take up of Community Care Grants (CCGs) nationally has been lower than anticipated. Both statistical information and a significant level of feedback from regions and local offices indicate a variety of reasons for this but three in particular stand out. They are:

- a lack of co-operation from statutory and voluntary agencies;
- instances of rigid interpretation of the guidance which itself gives an impression of rigidity by its phraseology;
- insufficient publicity.

I am now writing to seek your co-operation and help in taking action to encourage take up of CCGs. Clearly the situation varies from office to office and it is for you to decide what action needs to be taken locally. The information and guidance in the following paragraphs is designed to assist you in that task.

Despite the widely publicised controversy which has surrounded the Social Fund it is evident that many statutory and voluntary agencies remain unclear as to the potential of the CCG scheme for helping their clients. It is also the case that attitudes towards the Social Fund within Social Services and Social Work Departments are changing or show signs of doing so.

With these points in mind your local liaison arrangements should be reviewed to see where existing contacts might be strengthened or expanded or links established with new groups or those who have rejected previous approaches. Liaison must be an ongoing exercise.

The scope for launching further initiatives aimed specifically at other organisations should also be explored. These could include the Home Help Service, Health Visitors, Age Concern, Housing Associations involved in resettlement work as well as other agencies which represent people in Community Care Priority Groups. Such initiatives might include talks by LINOs[1], SFOs[2] or local management. Alternatively, approaches might include letters outlining the Social Fund to the range of local organisations. Visiting officers should also be aware of the potential help available from the Social Fund.

Recent HEO[3]SF seminars have emphasised the need for flexibility in interpreting guidance rather than rigid adherence to it as a set of rules. Clearly a consistent approach to decision making is required but within the parameters of that consistency, flexibility in the interpretation should be applied to individual cases where this is justified on the particular circumstances. Work is currently under way to clarify the guidance in Part 6 of the SFM[4] and an amendment is likely to be published early in 1989 which will reflect the required approach.

The revision of Part 6 will also provide further guidance on the intention behind Direction 4(a)(ii) that a CCG may be awarded to help prevent people going into institutional care rather than simply an immediate threat of entering care. This is in line with the principal aim of the CCG scheme of helping applicants to enable them to live as independent a life as possible in the community. I would be grateful if you could ensure that SFOs and HEOs are made aware of this clarification to the guidance.

You will wish to know that HQ are currently examining the adequacy of present publicity arrangements and considering what additional measures might be taken to advertise the availability of CCGs and so encourage take-up."

Family Credit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for family credit have been made for each month since April 1988; how many claims have been paid during the same periods; and what has been the average income of claimants and the average housing costs showing rent separately, of claimants during this period.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of family credit claims and awards is as follows:

	Claims received	Awards made
April	96,505	40,213
May	41,721
June	52,293	36,145
July	46,100	37,912
August	46,376	40,249
September	47,759	24,158
October	56,373	44,944
November	57,850	46,234

	Claims received	Awards made
December	44,834	35,797
January	63,638	42,712

No information is available about the average income or housing costs of claimants.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children there are in families claiming family credit; and what is the number of children in families entitled to family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In December 1988, the latest date for which information is available, there were approximately 520,000 children in families receiving family credit. An estimate of the number of children in families eligible for family credit cannot be made until information from the 1988 family expenditure survey is available.

Staff Dispersal

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the number of employees to be taken on by the Department of Social Security in Glasgow, Wigan and Belfast as a result of the dispersal of jobs presently located in London which was announced on 16 January;

(2) how many of the posts created by the dispersal announced on 16 January he expects to be filled (i) by transfer of existing staff from local Department of Social Security offices in the areas involved, (ii) by transfer for existing staff from London, and (iii) by hiring of new staff;

(3) what is the planned reduction in staff numbers in the Department of Social Security local offices in those areas gaining new posts as a result of the dispersal announced on 16 January.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As a direct result of the movement of work from 21 London offices announced on 16 January, we shall be creating around 450 jobs in Glasgow, 350 in Belfast and 260 in Wigan. Detailed recruitment plans will be a matter for the manager of each social security centre (SSC), but staff who wish to move from London or from local offices in the area of the SSC will have the opportunity to do so. We shall not be able to estimate the numbers involved until we have sought the views of staff affected. Current calculations show that, over the year 1989-90, there will be staff savings of about 310 for offices within daily travelling distance of the Glasgow SSC and about 280 for Wigan. Staff savings in the Northern Ireland Civil Service, are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Pensions

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in the Official Report, for each constituency in Scotland, the number of males and females in receipt of the state retirement pension.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not collected about the number of retirement pension recipients in any particular locality. However, at 30 September 1988 there were 788,380 retirement pension recipients in Scotland as a whole, of whom 256,850 were men and 531,530 women. These figures exclude those receiving graduated pension only.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will institute a system of age priority when reviewing claims or hearings for war pensions or disablement pensions whereby age will be a factor in determining the degree of priority accorded to new claims.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are grateful for the suggestion. However, war pension claimants are predominately elderly, and relating priority to age would lengthen the processing of most claims. Priority is already given to claimants identified as having a short life expectancy.

Agency Benefits Unit

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time taken by the agency benefits unit to process forms AG1 submitted by practitioners; and whether he will take steps to speed up the process.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the period 12 December 1988 to 3 February 1989 forms AG1 were cleared on average within 6·6 working days of receipt. This average masks a wide variation in clearance times due to the need to seek further information in some cases, and a more representative measure is that, in the same period, 61·2 per cent. of forms were cleared within five working days and 80·8 per cent. within 10 workings days.

The number of staff in the agency benefits unit was increased in December 1988. We are also looking at the design of form AG1 in the light of experience, with a view to improving its effectiveness and reducing the need for follow-up inquiries.

Benefits (Leicestershire)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why Miss A., a constituent of the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton, referred to in the letter from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Fareham dated 11 November reference PO(35)2487/23, is required to apply for jobs regularly despite being unable to obtain employment because of her son's disabilities; and why she cannot be issued with a permanent order book.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Social security legislation requires that an able-bodied adult should be available and looking for work as a condition of receiving benefit. However, for some people this rule would be inappropriate and so there are exceptions to it. One of these exemptions applies to a person who is looking after a person in receipt of attendance allowance, and Miss A comes into this category during the school holidays when she cares for her 19-year-old son. The payment of benefit by order book is not possible when Miss A is required to register for work, and becomes so only for the holiday periods when she cares for her son.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why Miss A., reference PO(35) 2487/23, received no order book over the Christmas holidays, although she had previously notified the social security office in advance of the dates of her handicapped son's holiday.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Over the Christmas period Miss A. continued to receive her full entitlement to benefit from the unemployment benefit office because she continued to register as available for work.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, in making a decision over Miss A., reference PO(35)2487/23, he took account of the fact that the school holidays of her handicapped son are significantly different from those in Leicestershire.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The relative lengths of school holidays are not relevant when considering the question of Miss A.'s entitlement to benefit, although they could affect the method of payment adopted by the local office.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report tables relating receipt of mobility allowance to the amount of extra expenditure on travel, classified according to severity of disability from the data in the survey by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on the financial circumstances of disabled adults living in private households; and if he will tabulate separately pensioners and non-pensioners.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 23 January 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

Part A of the table shows extra expenditure averaged over all recipients of the relevant benefit, irrespective of whether they actually reported extra expenditure: sample numbers are too small to compute a reliable average confined to those who reported extra expenditure. Part B shows the proportion of those who reported extra expenditure.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report tables relating receipt of attendance allowance at each rate to the amount of extra expenditure on home services, classified according to severity of disability from the data in the survey by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on the financial circumstances of disabled adults living in private households; and if he will tabulate separately pensioners and non-pensioners.

Part A of the table shows extra expenditure averaged over all recipients of the relevant benefit, irrespective of whether they actually reported extra expenditure: sample numbers are too small to compute a reliable average confined to those who reported extra expenditure. Part B shows the proportion of those who reported extra expenditure.

HEALTH

Health Hazards

69. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that consumers are advised promptly and effectively when health hazards related to foodstuffs become known to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Action on health hazards related to foodstuffs depends on the nature and seriousness of the hazard. We do ensure that consumers are warned of hazards as quickly as possible.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state for the 10 district health authorities with the longest waiting lists in the latest available returns (a) the length of wait and (b) the type of procedure or surgery to which the wait applies.

Mr. Freeman: Waiting information about individual districts is published in "Hospital Waiting Lists—Regional and District Summaries", copies of which are available in the Library. The summaries provide a percentage breakdown by time waited and by surgical specialty. We do not collect waiting information centrally by type of operation.

The 10 district health authorities with the largest waiting lists at 31 March 1988 were:

Bloomsbury
Sheffield
Norwich
Leicestershire
North Staffordshire
Liverpool
Barking, Havering and Brentwood
Bristol and Weston
Newcastle
Shropshire

Halton General Hospital

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future development of Halton general hospital.

Mr. Freeman: The Mersey regional health authority has established a sub-committee to look into the future development of Halton district general hospital. The sub-committee is due to report back to the RHA sometime in the spring.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he now expects to publish the findings of the study commissioned by his Department in 1976 into post-abortion syndrome.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the results of this study should be written up later this year and that the researchers then expect to submit it to a learned journal for publication.

Nursing Homes

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing home places are available in Staffordshire; and if he will give the location and number of beds and cost per place of each.

Mr. Freeman: The latest information held centrally is that on 31 December 1986 there were 659 beds in establishments in Staffordshire registered with health authorities as nursing homes. I understand that the number is likely to have increased substantially since then. Information on location and cost per place is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Staffordshire health authorities for further information.

Cervical Smears

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any information about the frequency of availability of cervical smears in other western European and north American countries and the mortality rates from cancer of the cervix.

Mr. Freeman: We have no detailed information on the frequency of availability of cervical smear testing in these countries. Mortality rates for western European and north American countries are given in the 1988 "World Health Statistics Annual", published by the World Health Organisation, a copy of which is in the Library. In England and Wales the death rate from cervical cancer fell by 14 per cent. between 1976 and 1986.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he gives about the age at which cervical smears should be made available.

Mr. Freeman: Guidance to health authorities on cervical cancer screening is contained in health circular HC(88)1, which was issued in January 1988 and has been placed in the Library. We have asked health authorities to invite all women aged 20 to 64 for routine screening by March 1993, unless their GP has indicated that they should be excluded. Women aged 65 and over who have not had two consecutive negative smears in the last 10 years should also be screened. Smears should also be taken at any age if clinically necessary.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of those district health authorities which make provision for cervical smears more frequently than on a three yearly basis.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not currently available centrally. Regional health authorities have been asked to provide it in their outturn reports for 1988-89.

Census

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether it is his intention to include questions on (a) ethnic origin and (b) disability in the 1991 census.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's proposals for the 1991 census in Great Britain were published in a White Paper (Cm. 430) on 19 July 1988.

A question on disability is not included in the proposals. The census will, however, include a question on long-term illness in which each person will be asked whether he or she has any long-term illness, health problem or handicap which limits his or her daily activities.

A question on ethnic group is to be included in the census test in April 1989 and the results studied by the Government before deciding whether to include such a question in the final plans for the 1991 census.

Aluminium (Baby Milk)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he has any plans to ban the sale of those baby milks which have been identified as containing high levels of aluminium;

(2) if he will issue guidelines on risks to babies from drinking milks which have been identified as containing high levels of aluminium.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) and the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) on 6 February at columns 491 and 501 respectively.

Listeria

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has received any data on whether the use of microwave ovens for reheating cook-chill meals will eliminate listeria.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The research projects listed by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in his reply to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 9 February 1989 at columns 780-81 include one on microwave ovens. The information obtained from these studies will be made available to my Department.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the safe threshold of listeria in food consumed by a pregnant women.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The 1988 World Health Organisation working group indicated that virtually nothing is known about the infectious dose of listeria monocytogenes in man, although it may be related to host susceptibility. Advice was given to pregnant women and other vulnerable groups last week about certain soft cheeses and other foods which may present a risk.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the relationship between the increase in listeriosis and the consumption of cheeses over the most recent convenient period.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Although it is most likely that listeriosis is a foodborne disease, the cause of most cases is as yet unknown. However, high numbers of listeria have been found in several varieties of soft cheeses, and a number of cases of listeriosis—both in this country and abroad—have been associated with eating heavily contaminated soft cheese. For this reason, the Government's chief medical officer has advised pregnant women and people recovering from serious illness to avoid eating soft cheese.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received any report from the public health laboratory service on the incidence of listeria in pre-cooked chickens.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: At my Department's request, the public health laboratory service recently carried out a survey of the prevalence of listeria monocytogenes contamination in certain cooked chilled foods. This showed that 12 per cent. of the pre-cooked ready-to-eat poultry purchased from retail outlets contained listeria monocytogenes. Adequate reheating will destroy the organism.

This was the basis of the advice given to pregnant women and other vulnerable groups on Friday 10 February that they should thoroughly reheat such foods. The recent survey was fully taken into account when that advice was issued. The latest survey does not indicate a degree of risk which would justify dietary advice to healthy adults who would be very unlikely to suffer adverse effects from the levels of contamination detected.

I will be laying regulations under the Food Act to ensure better temperature controls in retail refrigerated units. We have been engaged in talks with the Ministry of Agriculture, manufacturers, retailers and caterers aimed at developing a code of practice and improving procedures in the handling of retail cooked poultry and chilled meals.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases have been identified in the past 10 years of meningitis caused as a result of consuming United Kingdom-produced listeria-infected cheese.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There has been one case of listeria meningitis in the past 10 years which was microbiologically associated with a United Kingdom-produced cheese. The cause of most cases of listeriosis remains unknown, although it is most likely that it is foodborne.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of listeria in the United Kingdom have been identified in the past 10 years as having been caused by cheese made from unpasteurised milk products produced (a) within the United Kingdom, (b) in France and (c) in any other country; and if he will publish the scientific evidence available to him on the risk presented by such cheese.

Mr. Kenneth Clark: Two reported cases of listeriosis have been directly attributed to the consumption of cheese made from unpasteurised milk, one produced in the United Kingdom and one in France.

There has been a variety of published evidence indicating the risk associated with both unpasteurised and pasteurised soft cheeses. In particular, the "Report of the WHO Informal Working Group on Foodborne Listeriosis", Geneva 15-19 February 1988 and "Occurrence in the UK of Listeria specis in Raw Chicken and Soft Cheeses" published in the International Journal of Food Microbiology 1988 Vol. 6. However, as he indicated in his public statement on 10 February 1989, the Government's chief medical officer has recently been taking further expert advice on the risks.

Lead Pollution

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evidence he has available of levels of lead pollution in the air in Cardiff over the last 10 years; what trends have been reflected in measurements taken during the period; what are the figures for other cities in the United Kingdom; and what steps is he taking to reduce lead pollution in the atmosphere in Cardiff and elsewhere in England and Wales;

(2) what information he has on the level of lead in the atmosphere which is considered acceptable in the urban environment and the level which is considered to be detrimental to the health of pedestrians and of the public at large.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to him today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for the Environment.

Cheese

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance and control he has given during the last 12 months to assist port health authorities in their inspection of cheese imports for listeria contamination.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In February 1988, port health authorities were asked to direct their monitoring of imported soft cheeses to those in which a problem had previously been identified.

Private Dental Treatment

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether income tax relief for those over 60 years will apply to payments made to private dental capitation schemes for dental patients.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

The precise treatments that will be covered and the conditions which will apply are under consideration.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he has any evidence of the incidence of (a) salmonella enteritidis and (b) any other strain of salmonella in (i) farmed salmon and (ii) other farmed fish;

(2) what is the procedure for monitoring the produce of salmon farms to ensure its safety for human consumption.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 23 January 1989]: We are not aware of any evidence which shows that salmonella enteritidis, or any other strain of salmonella, has been isolated from farmed salmon or other farmed fish.

SCOTLAND

Interest Rates

70. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the effect of interest rate levels on Scottish farmers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend is well aware of the concerns of Scottish farmers about interest rates. We estimate that interest payments by Scottish farmers in 1988 were only slightly higher than in 1987. What happens in 1989 will depend upon the course of interest rates and the level of farmers' indebtedness.

The Government believe that, despite problems caused by short-term movements in interest rates, keeping inflation under control must remain our top priority since farming stands to benefit as much as other sectors of the economy from low inflation.

Egg Production

71. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any recent representations from the National Farmers' Union of Scotland about egg production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Officials of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland have met representatives of the National Farmers Union of Scotland to discuss what further action might be taken to tackle the problem of salmonella in eggs. The union generally welcomed the measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 18 January at columns 214-15.

Hunterston A Power Station

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the breach of safety licence by the South of Scotland electricity board at its Hunterston A Magnox nuclear plants on 25 August 1988.

Mr. Lang: On 25 August 1988, the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate was informed that fuel supply valves in the Hunterston A diesel generator system had been found in a closed position. No release of radioactivity had occurred and there was no immediate danger to the public or staff. However, in view of the alleged breach of a key operating rule requiring that sufficient diesel generating plant be kept ready for use in an emergency the South of Scotland electricity board was prosecuted and a fine of £1,500 was subsequently imposed by the Kilmarnock sheriff court on 6 February 1989.

The open way in which the South of Scotland electricity board reported the incident to the nuclear installations inspectorate and the thoroughness of the investigations carried out by both parties are indicative of the determination of both the Government and the South of Scotland electricity board to maintain stringent nuclear safety standards. I am confident that the operators and the nuclear installations inspectorate take very seriously their responsibility in this regard, and that they will continue to do so after privatisation of the electricity industry.

Extradition

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has made extradition applications for terrorist or other offences; and how often, by whom and for what reasons such requests have been rejected.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information in respect of requests made to foreign and Commonwealth Governments is not available centrally and cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost. In relation to the Republic of Ireland, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross) on 8 December 1988.

Highlands (Adverse Weather)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further consultations are planned and by what methods, with the following involved in or affected by the recent adverse weather conditions in the Scottish Highlands (a) Highland regional council, Inverness district council, Ross and Cromarty district council, (b) riparian landowners and tenant farmers in the Conon valley and residents in Conon Bridge, (c) the North of Scotland Hydro Electric Board and (d) the British Waterways Board.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble Friend the Minister of State visited areas affected by flooding on Wednesday 8 February, and met a number of local representatives at that time. Reports have been requested from the North of Scotland Hydro Electric Board, Highland regional council and Inverness district council and we are in touch with the British Waterways Board. We are preparing a report on the River Conon floodbank arrangements and will be discussing proposals with those affected. Further consultations will be undertaken with interested parties as and when appropriate.

River Conon (Flooding)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to set up an inquiry into the recent flooding of the River Conon, Ross-shire, to include consideration of (a) the role of the hydro board with regard to water control, flow and release in and from nearby dams, (b) the question of suitability of previous embankment repairs on a limited basis, (c) the recommendations for comprehensive flood protection schemes as outlined in earlier consultants' reports; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The North of Scotland Hydro Electric Board has been asked for a report on its releases of water prior to and during the recent flooding. The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland is preparing a report on the damage sustained by floodbanks. Until these reports have been studied it is too early to make any statement either on the suitability of the present arrangements or on a comprehesive flood protection scheme such as that outlined in the earlier consultants' report.

Mental Handicap Nurses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will list, for each health board, the number of mental handicap nurses from each of the old grades who have been assimilated to each of the new grades.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally and could be gathered only at disproportionate cost.

Structural Funds

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report full details of the programmes which his Department intends to submit to the European Economic Community Commission in Brussels for support under objective 5b of the reformed Community structural funds.

Mr. Lang: It would be premature to speculate on programmes before the areas eligible for assistance under objective 5b are known.

House Buyers

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the financial incentives available for first-time housebuyers since 1979, showing any changes in the amounts offered; and whether any further measures are planned.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government introduced the right to buy for public sector tenants in 1980 as a major means of promoting owner-occupation.

Since then discount levels have been increased, and we have introduced a number of other improvements to the scheme to make it easier for tenants to purchase their homes. We have also introduced provisions to enable local authorities to offer grants to assist their tenants to obtain accommodation other than as a tenant of the local authority. Also, we have retained tax relief on mortgage interest which gives substantial help to most housebuyers in Scotland, and the limit on qualifying loans was increased from £25,000 to £30,000 in April 1983.

Under the Homeloan scheme, first-time buyers who are registered and have saved with an approved institution for at least two years can apply for a bonus on their savings of up to £110 and a loan of £600, interest free, for up to five years. The house price limits in the Homeloan scheme are kept under review. On 9 February the Government laid an order which proposes increases in the limits in all areas in Great Britain. However, the Homeloan scheme has been ineffective, and the Local Government and Housing Bill introduced on 1 February, includes powers for bringing the scheme to an end in Great Britain.

The operation of right to buy, and mortgage tax relief, are kept constantly under review.

Tourism

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what value of section 4 grants have been made for each of the past five years in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The level of grants and approvals under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 is as follows:

Financial year	Number of approvals	Value of assistance (£ million)
1984-85	92	2·3
1985-86	158	3·8
1986-87	136	2·9
1987-88	125	5·2
1988-89[1]	75	4·5

[1] Estimate.

Newbattle Abbey College

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply of 1 February, Official Report, column 306, what response he has now made regarding the approach made to him concerning Newbattle Abbey college, Dalkeith.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to be able to respond shortly.

NHS Video

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost of the video recording concerning the Government's proposals for the National Health Service that is being shown to National Health Service staff in Scotland; whether any bodies or indviduals independent of the Government were given an opportunity to contribute to this public information exercise; how much staff time will be taken up in viewing this material; and if he will provide facilities for alternative comments on the future of the National Health Service to be projected to National Health Service employees.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As regards costs, I refer the hon. Member to my reply of today to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace). The video recording includes contributions from several people in the Health Service as well as members of the Government. I hope that all those who work in the Scottish Health Service will have the opportunity to see the 15-minute video presentation, which explains the Government's proposals set out in the White Paper "Working for Patients". Since these proposals will affect everyone concerned with the delivery of health care in future, it is in keeping with the best practice of responsible management to ensure that the proposal are clearly explained. That does not apply to the variety of comments that may arise from other sources.

Rates

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) rates per household and (b) rates per adult for 1988-89 for each district and region in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table.

Edinburgh Western General Hospital

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about Lothian health board's proposals to close the paediatric unit and the evening accident and emergency unit at Edinburgh Western general hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Lothian health board is considering the responses received to a consultative document issued on 25 November about changes to paediatric services in its area. The board proposes to open a purpose-built medical paediatric ward at the new district general hospital at Livingston and to provide the accident and emergency services and the medical paediatric in-patient services for the remainder of its area at the Royal hospital for sick children, Edinburgh. Outpatient medical paediatric services will continue at the Western general hospital, Edinburgh and the surgical paediatric workload there will increase following other recent changes to paediatric services in Edinburgh.

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department has spent on publicity in relation to the White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 February 1989]: A total of £36,384·13. We spent £21,177·50 plus £3,176·63 VAT on the production and duplication of video cassettes, and £12,030 on copies of an explanatory leaflet, the better to explain the White Paper's proposals to the 150,000 people working in the Health Service in Scotland, and to a number of other interested groups.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Institution of Professional Civil Servants

11. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next plans to meet representatives of the Institution of Professional Civil Servants; and what matter he expects to discuss.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to meet representatives of the Institution of Professional Civil Servants. However, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary has recently attended the annual delegate conference of the AFRC branch of the IPCS at its invitation.

Forestry Commission

12. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Forestry Commission; and what matters they discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I last met the chairman of the Forestry Commission on 3 October 1988 when we discussed progress in the task of clearing and replanting woodlands damaged by the previous October's storm in south-east England.

Farmers (South Wiltshire)

13. Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to meet farmers in south Wiltshire to discuss the outlook for farmers in 1989.

Mr. MacGregor: I have no specific plans to do so at present, though my colleague the Parliamentary Secretary, Baroness Trumpington, will be meeting the South Wiltshire branch of the NFU on 10 March to discuss various agricultural matters.

Sheepmeat

14. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the reform of the European sheepmeat regime.

Mr. MacGregor: There have been some preliminary discussions on the Commission proposals for reform of the sheepmeat regime, with some member states insisting that the revised voluntary restraint agreement with New Zealand should be concluded first. I do not anticipate rapid progress.

36. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, when he next meets the Council of Ministers, if he will discuss the sheepmeat variable premium scheme.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A proposal to phase out the sheep variable premium scheme forms part of the European Commission's proposals for a review of the sheep regime. It will be discussed on the next occasion that these proposals are placed before the Council of Ministers.

Food and Farming Year

15. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ensure that the Food and Farming Year celebrations highlight the success of British agriculture.

Mr. MacGregor: The main purpose of Food and Farming Year is to make the success of British agriculture and the food industry more widely understood. A wide-ranging programme of events both national and regional has been put together by a Committee representing all parts of the industry. And with full support from the Ministry.

58. Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who will be funding events in celebration of British Food and Farming Year.

Mr. MacGregor: The funding of British Food and Farming Year has been undertaken by the industry itself. The viability of the national events such as the festival in May in Hyde park, the travelling exhibition and the teachers' resource pack has been assured by generous sponsorship from major companies. The many local activities are being similarly supported by local organisations and farmers. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has provided funds for an educational pack illustrating certain current agricultural issues and is linking its own centenary exhibition with the Hyde park festival. The Crown Estate and the Countryside Commission have also given assistance.

Animal Welfare

16. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps have been taken to improve the welfare of horses, ponies and other equines since 1979; what further measures he proposes to take and when; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Horses and other equines have always been protected by the general legislation on animal welfare. Since 1979 they have benefited from the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Act and the Protection Against Cruel Tethering Act. My Department hopes this year to finalise a draft order and code of practice giving horses statutory protection in markets for the first time, and we are also preparing new measures on welfare at slaughter.

Agricultural Valuers

17. Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of agricultural valuers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I met representatives of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors on 9 November 1988. My right hon. Friend the Member of Suffolk Coastal (Mr. Gummer), then Minister of State, met the Central Association of Agricultural Valuers on 10 June 1988, when he spoke at their AGM. I have been hoping to meet the CAAV for some time and will do so as soon as a mutually convenient date can be found.

Food Policy

18. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he plans to meet the National Consumer Council to discuss his Ministry's food policy.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South (Mr. MacGregor) last met the chairman of the council on 8 November to discuss the council's report on consumers and the common agricultural policy. I also met the council on 7 December when we discussed a wide range of topics. I firmly believe that close liaison between my Department and consumer groups is essential and I, my ministerial colleagues and officials, have regular contact with the council on matters of mutual interest and concern.

Salmon

19. Mr. Clay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received concerning the present circumstances surrounding the north-east salmon fishery.

48. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received concerning the north-east salmon fishery.

63. Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received regarding the prohibition of the use of T nets in the southern area of the Northumbrian water authority area.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have received a number of representations about the salmon net fisheries off the north-east coast of England. A recent report to Ministers of a public inquiry into a proposed byelaw has been published and we shall be reviewing the fishery, and salmon net fisheries in eastern Scotland, presenting a report to Parliament, as required by the Salmon Act 1986.

Research and Development

20. Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to meet trades unions to discuss research and development.

Mr. Ryder: I have arranged for the trade union side in my Department to be kept fully informed of developments in the normal way. My noble Friend Baroness Trumpington attended the annual delegate conference of the AFRC branch of the IPCS on 9 February.

Flood Protection

21. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's present estimate of costs in long-term flood protection.

Mr. Ryder: Following a comprehensive review of flood prevention requirements undertaken with the assistance of drainage authorities, the Government identified the need for an increased long-term programme of work, and have made additional funding available for both local and water authority schemes. Government funding for flood prevention work undertaken by these authorities and internal drainage boards will be £21 million, £24 million and £30 million for the next three years on capital programmes of £57 million, £66 million and £81 million respectively.

Nature Conservancy Council

22. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council; and what matters they discussed.

Mr. Ryder: I met the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council on 7 November last year when we discussed a wide range of subjects.

Woodlands

23. Mr. Lord: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made in the planting and regeneration of lowland woodlands in England; and if he will make a statement.

41. Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest figures on the number of farmers applying to join the farm woodland scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: By 31 January 1989, some 650 farmers throughout the United Kingdom had applied to plant a total of about 4,600 hectares of woodland under the farm woodland scheme. This is an encouraging start. A substantial proportion of the proposed planting will be with broadleaves. Although final figures are not yet available, applications to the Ministry indicate that broadleaved planting may account for around 75 per cent. of the area planted across the country as a whole.

Most applications already submitted should be approved in time for planting to go ahead this season. Although it is unlikely that any further applications received from now on will obtain approval for planting this spring, I would encourage any interested farmers to start making plans and preparing applications for next year.

More generally, we are seeing the success of our broadleaves policy with broadleaved trees being increasingly used for the creation of new woods and the regeneration of older woodland. Most new planting in England will be in the lowlands in future.

Fisheries (Research and Development)

24. Mr. Doran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of fisheries research and development.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We consider that the Government should focus their resources on basic and strategic science and research of a public good nature and necessary to carry out its responsibilities. Against that background we have reviewed publicly funded fisheries research and development and are now discussing with industry organisations the extent to which they are ready to fund certain research at Torry research station which is primarily concerned with the development of new products and processes.

56. Mr. Graham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the new co-ordinator of fisheries research and development for Great Britain is to be based in London or Edinburgh.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Since 1972 this appointment has been made alternately for three-year periods by my Department and the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. My director of fisheries research, based in Lowestoft, became co-ordinator in January 1989.

Whaling

26. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he was last in touch with the International Whaling Commission; and what issues were raised.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Reflecting our serious concern on whaling issues, I have recently authorised the United Kingdom commissioner to propose a resolution to the International Whaling Commission dealing with the current whaling operating being undertaken by Japan for scientific research studies. If adopted, the resolution will formally call upon Japan to cease her research plans until the major concerns identified by the International Whaling Commission scientific committee have been addressed and resolved.

Torry Research Establishment

27. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on future funding of his Department's research establishment at Torry, Aberdeen.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Research needed in support of the Government policies for food safety and quality and related underpining work will continue to be publicly funded. Other research primarily concerned with the development of new products and processes is more appropriate for industry funding; and we are discussing with industry organisations the extent to which they will be ready to fund such work at Torry, in addition to the services which Torry research station already provides on a repayment basis.

Fishing Ports

28. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to visit fishing ports in the north of England.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have recently visited a number of fishing ports in the north of England and I will do so again.

Animal Diseases

29. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's policy for controlling animal diseases.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government's policy is to maintain this country's freedom, through stringent domestic and import control measures, from serious animal diseases such as foot and mouth disease. For other, less serious diseases, which do occur, the policy may be one of eradication, control or the provision of advice. In determining what action is appropriate an essential, consideration is the need to safeguard the public from those animal diseases which can be transmitted to man.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

30. Dr. Bray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research is being undertaken into the cause, method of transmission and prevention of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Research studies revealed that the most likely cause of bovine spongiform encephalopathy was the feeding of ruminant-based material to cattle. This practice was banned from 18 July last year. Various other research projects are being undertaken, including a study to determine whether cattle-to-cattle transmission can take place. There is no evidence that the disease can be transmitted to humans.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to make public the report of the Southwood committee on the human health implications of bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I and the Secretary of State for Health have just received the report of the Southwood working party. It is being considered urgently and will be published soon.

Deer (Tuberculosis)

31. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further measures he proposes to take to contain the spread of tuberculosis in farmed and wild deer.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I announced my proposals for the control of tuberculosis in farmed deer on 15 December 1988 Official Report, columns 674-75. Urgent consideration is now being given to the comments made on the proposals by interested organisations. I have no plans to introduce measures for wild deer.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in each of the last five years how many cases of tuberculosis have been confirmed in persons engaged in working with farmed deer in the United Kingdom; and whether any such cases have been confirmed as originating from deer.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply. Under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985, employers are required to report cases of tuberculosis among their employees if the employees in question work with persons or animals or with human or animal remains or with any other material which might be a source of infection. Since the regulations came into operation in April 1986 one case of tuberculosis in a person working with farmed deer has recently been reported, but this case has not been confirmed. I regret that comparable information for previous years is not available.

Poultry Feed

32. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to amend the ingredients regulations relating to poultry feedstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Officials of my Department are currently engaged on discussions in Brussels on a proposal which would require suppliers of feeding-stuffs, including mixed poultry feeds, to declare the ingredients or categories of ingredients which have been used. This would supplement the detailed information already required for such products.

In addition, further controls are to be introduced on the processing and importation of animal protein, and codes of practice are being drawn up which will cover the handling, storage and manufacture of poultry feeding-stuffs and their components.

National Farmers Union

33. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave on 13 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) at column 88.

Beef Support

34. Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the livestock industry following the announcement of revised support arrangements for beef.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend and I have had representations from various sectors of the industry. These have been concerned in particular with the rate of suckler cow premium and the method of operation of the new special premium for beef and we are currently considering these issues.

Sheep

35. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the state of the sheep sector.

Mr. MacGregor: The sheep sector remains buoyant. Returns are good and exports are encouraging.

Country Landowners Association

37. Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the Country Landowners Association; and what was discussed.

Mr. Ryder: I last met the president of the Country Landowners Association on 6 December 1988 when we discussed environmentally sensitive areas and national parks. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food also met the president yesterday to discuss landlord-tenant matters.

Food Prices

38. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the rates of increase in food prices (a) in the 1970s and (b) in the 1980s; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The information is as follows:

(a) Rate of increase in food prices in the 1970s		Rate of increase in food prices in the 1980s
Year	per cent. per annum	Year	per cent. per annum
1970	7·0	1980	12·1
1971	11·1	1981	8·4
1972	8·8	1982	7·9
1973	15·0	1983	3·2
1974	18·0	1984	5·6
1975	25·6	1985	3·1
1976	20·0	1986	3·3
1977	19·0	1987	3·1
1978	7·1	1988	3·5
1979	12·0	—	—

Source: Retail Price Index

Between May 1979 and December 1988, the average annual rate of increase in food prices was 5·6 per cent. These figures reflect the success of the Government's food policies and can be compared with the rate of increase in food prices of 16·7 per cent. per annum between October 1974 and May 1979, the period in office of the last Labour Administration.

European Ministers

39. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next hopes to meet his counterparts in the European Community; and what matters he hopes to discuss.

Mr. MacGregor: I will next meet my counterparts in the European Community at the Agriculture Council scheduled for 6 and 7 March when I expect the main agenda item to involve continued discussions on the Commission's price proposals for 1989-90 and related issues.

Food Additives

40. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking in accordance with the provisions of section 4(2) of the Food Act 1984 to restrict, as far as practical, the use of substances of no nutritional value in foods.

Mr. Ryder: Before making regulations on the composition of food under the Food Act 1984 Ministers seek the advice of independent expert advisory committees including where appropriate advice on need and safety. In making their recommendations the committees are required by Ministers to take account of section 4(2) of the Act.

Agriculture Act 1947

42. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to seek to amend the Agriculture Act 1947.

Mr. Ryder: I have no plans to do so at present.

EC Intervention Stores

43. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the total cost of European Economic Community intervention stores in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The estimated total cost of intervention storage and related expenditure in 1988-89 is £50·466 million.

Meat and Livestock Commission

44. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Meat and Livestock Commission; and what they discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend and I maintain regular contacts with the chairman of the Meat and Livestock Commission to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Food Advisory Committee

45. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Food Advisory Committee; and what was discussed.

Mr. Ryder: I met the retiring chairman of the Food Advisory Committee and his successor on 7 December 1988.

Agendas of the committee's meetings are publicly available.

Intensive Farming

46. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he is undertaking into the effects on the food chain of intensive animal farming.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department undertakes and commissions a great deal of research into food safety, including animal diseases transmissible to man through the food chain. Research into animal diseases takes full account of animal husbandry methods. In addition the steering group on food surveillance ensures that the safety of food supplies are effectively monitored.

Salmonella

47. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the current level of salmonella enteritidis in poultry flocks.

Mr. Ryder: Since salmonella enteritidis does not cause overt clinical disease in adult poultry it is not possible to give precise figures of the extent of the infection without extensive testing, which in the absence of a simple, rapid and sensitive test for salmonella enteritidis, is not possible. However, the Zoonoses Order 1975 requires isolations of salmonella to be reported. As indicated by my hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley (Mr. Thompson) in a written reply yesterday, provisional figures indicate that 370 isolations of salmonella enteritidis in 1988 were reported.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date he received the information on eggborne salmonellosis, contained in the joint report of the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Department of Health and BEIC working group; and if he will list the actions he has taken since then to advise the public about any risks and to promote the reduction of salmonella contamination in laying flocks.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 14 February 1989]: I received the report of the MAFF, DoH and BEIC working group on salmonella and eggs on 10 January this year. As I informed my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 6 February Official Report columns 570-72 I have placed a copy of that report in the Library of the House and I am distributing copies to members of the public who request it.

On 18 January I set out, in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) Official Report columns 214-15, the range of measures we had already been taking and were proposing to take to tackle the salmonella problem at each point along the chain from poultry feedingstuffs, through the breeding flocks and hatcheries to the commercial egg producers.

I subsequently announced on 10 February, in a written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Hereford (Mr. Shepherd) Official Report column 831 that we should shortly be taking powers to provide where necessary for the compulsory slaughter of laying flocks in which salmonella has been confirmed. This announcement was a logical follow-up to the one made by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary on 27 January, in a written answer to a question from my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Daventry Official Report column 806 that notices are being issued under the Zoonoses Order 1975 to egg producers with flocks known to be or suspected of being infected with salmonella enteritidis or other similar types of salmonella, to prevent the producers concerned from selling eggs in a raw state for direct human consumption.

Other announcements were made by the Government before 10 January and further ones will be made as appropriate.

Nitrates

49. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department have taken to investigate the use of nitrates in intensive farming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department supports a wide range of research into the efficient use of both organic and inorganic fertiliser, and ways of reducing nitrate leaching. This indicates that the process of nitrate leaching is complex and that the use of nitrogen fertilisers is one of a number of factors affecting it.

64. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's response to the recent European community directive on agriculture practices and nitrates in water.

Mr. Ryder: The European Community directive referred to is only a proposal at this stage and the Government are still examining it. Our general view on how the nitrate problem should be tackled was, however, explained in my right hon. Friend's written reply of 24 November.

Agricultural Fraud

50. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to detect and take legal proceedings on instances of agricultural fraud.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on 13 February 1989, at columns 87-88.

Food Safety

51. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to improve standards of food safety.

Mr. Ryder: I shall maintain my Department's comprehensive food surveillance programme and ensure its future development in line with changing circumstances in the food production industry.

I shall remain ready to take action wherever the results of our surveillance work show this to be necessary.

"Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1988"

52. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the farming industry, in the light of "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1988", and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government appreciate that the necessary transition of the CAP to a greater market orientation will cause difficult problems of adjustment for many farmers. However, without reforms the CAP risked collapsing under its own weight and this would not be in the interests of the industry. Public expenditure for agriculture remains high and indeed over the period from 1979 to 1988-89 there was an increase of 7½ per cent. in real terms. The Government introduced a range of policies aimed at helping farmers through this period of adjustment.

Milk Marketing Board

53. Mr. Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he is next due to meet the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss the dairy sector.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend the Minister and I have regular contacts with the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss various issues affecting the dairy industry.

Sea Fish Industry Authority

54. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Sea Fish Industry Authority; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: On 26 January when we discussed the Sea Fish Industry Authority's request for an increase in levy. The possibility of industry funding for research and development work undertaken by Torry research station on behalf of the industry was also discussed.

Set-aside Scheme

55. Mr. Latham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the progress of the set-aside scheme.

Mr. Ryder: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark) on 13 February 1989 at column 88.

Food Legislation

57. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about his consultation procedure on updating the legislation on food.

Mr. Ryder: I and my right hon. Friends consult widely with all interested parties when proposing new or updated food legislation, in accordance with our obligations under the Food Act 1984.

Agriculture and Food Research Council

59. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning possible redundancies in the Agriculture and Food Research Council.

25. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to meet representatives of those working for the Agriculture and Food Research Council to discuss the future of research and development.

Mr. Ryder: My Department has received a number of letters about the closure of particular facilities which have been drawn to the attention of the Secretary of State for Education and Science. On 9 February my noble Friend the Baroness Trumpington attended the annual delegate conference of the Agriculture and Food Research Council branch of the Institution of Professional Civil Servants where similar concerns were expressed to her.

Bees

60. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to deal with the outbreak of European foul brood disease amongst the bee population of Great Britain.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In connection with the upsurge of European foul brood in Dorset I am taking the action authorised by the Bee Diseases Control Order 1982. This makes European foul brood a notifiable disease and empowers me to have affected colonies destroyed or treated, depending on the extent of infection, and to impose standstill notices on diseased colonies and on neighbouring colonies where this is considered necessary.

Agriculture Extensification

61. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will raise with the Council of Ministers the policy of agriculture extensification.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell).

Strawberries

62. Sir David Price: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to prevent the spread of colletotrichum and Acutatum commonly known as black spot in strawberry plants in the United Kingdom; and what discussions he has had with his European colleagues to prevent the further importation of the disease from the mainland of Europe.

Mr. Ryder: We have taken a number of measures, in consultation with the National Farmers Union and representatives of the strawberry nuclear stock growers, to prevent strawberry black spot spreading in the United Kingdom. Where outbreaks occur, these measures require the control of movement of plants, compulsory spraying regimes and destruction of infected plants at the end of the cropping programme, followed by various hygiene measures. In addition, samples of all known imports of strawberry plants will be subject to inspection and where necessary laboratory tests to establish freedom from infection.

Detailed discussions have taken place between my officials and the Netherlands plant protection authorities about preventing infected plants from the Netherlands being exported to the United Kingdom. The Netherlands authorities have undertaken to consider further action, and we are in close touch with them.

Potato Marketing Board

65. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now make a statement on the future of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 14 February at column 161.

Poultry

66. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current state of the poultry industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The market for poultry meat is less buoyant than it was throughout 1988 although wholesale prices remain relatively stable. Egg sales still appear to be significantly below normal levels, but packer to producer prices have shown improvement after falling sharply in December last year.

Baby Milk

67. Miss Lestor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will name those brands of baby milk on which he has information that they contain high levels of aluminium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The Department of Health's independent expert medical and scientific advisory committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment recently considered the results of analyses by my Department of the aluminium content of infant formulae. The committee advised that in the light of these results there was no need for action to reduce the aluminium intakes from these products.

It is not my practice to disclose information on the brands of goods monitored as part of food surveillance.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines have been issued by his Department on the safety of baby milk; and if his Department has any plans to instruct manufacturers of certain brands to withdraw them from sale.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 6 February at column 491.

Milk

68. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of liquid milk consumed in 1987 in England and Wales was not heat treated.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is difficult to establish a precise figure, but in the light of information published by the Federation of United Kingdom Milk Marketing boards in the 1988 edition of "Dairy Facts and Figures" I estimate that 2 to 3 per cent. of milk sold for liquid consumption in England and Wales in 1987-88 was not heat treated.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the number of milk bottling plants which currently produce green top milk, (b) what proportion of milk production this represents, and (c) what proportion of unpasteurised milk it represents.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Green top milk must be bottled on the farm. It follows that there are no milk bottling plants handling green top milk.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will give the total level of milk production in 1988; and if he will give proportions accounted for by (a) green top bottled milk, (b) other bottled milk, (c) pasteurised milk for other than liquid consumption, and (d) unpasteurised milk for other than liquid consumption;

(2) if he will estimate the level of United Kingdom consumption of unpasteurised milk.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I have given today to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew). Further information is set out in the 1988 edition of "United Kingdom Dairy Facts and Figures". There is a copy in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many inspections have been held of on-farm dairies producing for direct sale green top milk which have revealed listeria contamination during each of the last three years;

(2) what steps he has taken during the last two years to improve the hygiene of on-farm dairies;

(3) what steps he has taken during the last two years to improve the quality of unpasteurised milk sold direct to the public.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The production and processing of all milk is subject to strict controls under the Milk and Dairies Regulations. Producers who hold a licence to sell unpasteurised milk for liquid consumption under the special designation "untreated" are visited regularly by dairy husbandry advisers who check that the physical condition of the premises and the methods of production are in compliance with the regulations. In addition, samples of milk are taken for testing, but the milk is not tested for specific pathogens.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the sale by county of (a) pasteurised and (b) unpasteurised milk in the latest available year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is not readily available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he proposes to hold with consumer organisations before banning the sale of unpasteurised milk; and what representations he has received from them asking for such a ban.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The consultation exercise that my right hon. Friend announced on 3 February will range widely and will include consumer organisations. I have already received various representations arguing that a ban would be in the best interests of consumers.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish the scientific and medical advice on the basis on which he proposes to ban the sale of unpasteurised milk.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have been mainly influenced by information on outbreaks of food poisoning associated with consumption of untreated milk. Figures for the years 1982-88 were provided by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health in response to a question from the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew).

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is funding concerning the toxicity of pesticides approved for slug control on (a) hedgehogs and other wild mammals, (b) birds and (c) amphibians.

Mr. MacGregor: Before pesticides are approved their effects must be researched by manufacturing companies and data submitted in support of the application. These are evaluated by independent experts before any approvals for use are granted by Ministers. Research conducted by my own Department at Boxworth is aimed at comparing the relative effects on wildlife of broadcasting and of drilling slug pellets. My Department also operates a scheme for investigating suspected wildlife poisonings and slug control products are occasionally implicated in these.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those pesticides approved for use by his Department for slug control known to be toxic to (a) hedgehogs and other wild mammals, (b) birds and (c) amphibians.

Mr. MacGregor: All slug control pesticides have been assessed for environmental and wildlife hazards and the labels of approved products carry the relevant precautions to avoid harmful effects to birds and animals.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those pesticides approved by his Department for the destruction of slugs.

Mr. MacGregor: Four active ingredients are approved for slug control: aluminium compounds; copper compounds; methaldehyde and methiocarb. Products containing these are listed in HMSO reference book "Pesticides 1988."

Cheese

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the volume of imports of soft cheese made from unpasteurised milk by country of origin for each of the last two years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The import statistics do not separately identify cheese made from unpasteurised milk.

Butter

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the replies to the hon. Member for Pembroke on 31 January, Official Report, column 184, and 6 February 1989, Official Report, column 697, what information is available to his Ministry from Eurostat as to the percentage of the United Kingdom packet butter market accounted for by the following countries (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Ireland, (c) France, (d) New Zealand, (e) Denmark, (f) the Netherlands and (g) Belgium and Luxembourg.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Eurostat does not contain information on the United Kingdom packet butter market.

Hedges

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will lay a report before Parliament on the state of hedges in England and Wales.

Mr. Ryder: No representative studies have been undertaken of the condition of hedges in England and Wales because of the difficulties caused by variations between hedgerow types in different locations and serving different purposes.

My Department is always ready to provide advice to farmers on hedgerow management, and grants are available for hedgerow planting and laying under the new farm and conservation grant scheme which subject to parliamentary approval will operate from next Monday.

Coastal Waters

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the environmental quality of British coastal waters.

Mr. Donald Thompson: All marine environmental quality standards, both EC and national, are met in British coastal waters. Levels of contaminants have generally been falling and are low. The quality of our seas is improving and I continue to seek further improvements wherever practicable.

Waste Dumping

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what controls are applied to the dumping of waste in British waters.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I impose strict controls on dumping to ensure that no harm is caused to the marine environment. All wastes licensed have been subject to thorough scientific tests. Only very limited categories of waste are authorised. Where disposal on land is practicable sea disposal is not licensed.

Most of the material which I license for dumping at sea is dredged spoil from harbours and estuaries. We must keep our ports open. This is, of course, also the case in other European countries, some of whom dump much more both in volume terms and contamination terms than we do. All the spoil which I license for dumping meets the relevant international rules to avoid marine pollution.

Of 30 sea dumping licences for liquid industrial waste in 1987 some 20 have been reviewed in detail and either withdrawn or a firm intention to terminate given. The 10 remaining licences for liquid industrial waste are currently under review to investigate whether safe disposal on land is practicable.

Five licences for marine incineration have already been terminated and alternatives for the remaining eight are being carefully studied.

In the case of sewage sludge, this material is more than 95 per cent. water. Trace levels of contaminants in sewage sludge have been reduced by more than 60 per cent. since 1980. It was agreed at the North sea conference in 1987 not to increase contaminant levels and I am seeking to reduce them further. I am currently reviewing with the water authorities the availability of alternative methods of disposal for the sludge, including land disposal options.

Covent Garden Market

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has decided what action he intends to take in respect of the possible privatisation of the Covent Garden market.

Mr. MacGregor: I am currently considering the options available on the future of the market, including the possibility of privatisation. As a first step, I have decided to commission an independent commercial feasibility study on the possibilities of privatisation, and will shortly be asking for tenders for this appointment from appropriate organisations.

EMPLOYMENT

London Jobcentres

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the median time notified vacancies remain at London jobcentres, broken down by classification.

Mr. Cope: The table shows the latest available information which is also in the Library. Analysis of median durations is shown in respect of (a) vacancies filled by jobcentres over the period 5 September to 2 December 1988 and (b) the stock vacancies remaining unfilled at jobcentres on 2 December 1988. Median durations are not estimated in respect of the total time that all vacancies, including notifications subsequently cancelled, remain in the jobcentre records.

[1] The time since notification exceeded by 50 per cent. of the vacancies filled by jobcentres.

[2] The time since notification exceeded by 50 per cent. of unfilled vacancies registered at jobcentres.

[3] Medians are likely to be affected by the small number vacancies in these cases.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many vacancies flowed through London jobcentres in the last 12 months.

Mr. Cope: The inflow of vacancies notified to jobcentres in Greater London, over the 12 months to December 1988 was 407,800, with a total outflow of 420,100 either filled or cancelled vacancies from the jobcentre records. These totals are based on the monthly seasonally adjusted series. They do not represent the total flow of vacancies in the economy.

Vacancies (London)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of vacancies London employers notify to jobcentres.

Mr. Cope: A survey of employers in Greater London, carried out for the Employment Department by IFF Research Ltd. in June 1988, found that 45 per cent. of vacancies that had been filled during the preceding year had at some stage been notified to a jobcentre. At any one time, though, it is estimated that only 20 to 25 per cent. of available vacancies will have been notified to jobcentres.

Agriculture (Accidents)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS trainees have suffered reportable accidents while working in the agricultural industry in each of the last five years, for which records are available.

Mr. Cope: A new computer system is currently being updated to provide more detailed analysis of YTS incident information. Accident information before 1988 by industry is not available.

Information for 1988 is as follows:

1988 Agricultural accidents[1]

	Fatal	Major injuries[2]	Minor injuries
Total number reported to the Training Agency	None	48	183
Number which would not have been reported to HSE	None	8	28

[1] Training Agency accident figures for YTS have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive for employed people. However, the agency's figures include a number of accidents, in particular road traffic accidents during scheme time and accidents to trainees in educational establishments, which may not have been reportable to the executive had the individuals been employed.

[2] From 1 April 1986 major injuries have been classified according to severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR).

Horse Racing

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS trainees have suffered reportable accidents while working in the equestrian and horse racing industry, in each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Cope: A new computer system is currently being updated to provide more detailed analysis of YTS accident information. Accident information before 1988 by industry is not available.

Equestrian accidents: 1988[1]

	Fatal	Major injuries[2]	Minor injuries

Child Employees (Accidents)

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many notifiable accidents there have been to children in the course of legal employment in each year since 1973, categorised by age of child and severity of accident.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information collected under current regulations is set out in the table. It relates to all young people aged 13 to 15 described as employees in injury reports.

Injuries to employees aged 13 to 15 reported under RIDDOR[1] to all enforcing authorities

[1] Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.

[2] Year commencing 1 April: analyses of data by age before 1981 are not available. Between 1981 and 1985 the apparent numbers of employed children being injured in the course of work were inflated by extensive mis-reporting and mis-coding of injuries to non-employed children and reliable figures are therefore not available. However, following a careful examination of the narrative reports of injuries to children at work from 1981 to 1984, a note was published in Health and Safety Statistics 1984-85, available in the House of Commons Library.

[3] Provisional.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information the new training and enteprise councills will have to make available in their three year business plans and proposed annual reports; and how much of this information will be publicly available.

Mr. Cope: Details of what information training and enterprise councils will need to provide in their three-year business plans and annual reports are under consideration. A council's report will however be a public document, and they will also have to publish a synopsis of their business plans.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the new training and enterprise councils will make publicly available, scheme by scheme, statistics showing the ethnic backgrounds of the YTS and employment training trainees recruited by their local training managers-managing agents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The arrangements under which training and enterprise councils will operate are being developed and these matters are being given consideration. Councils will be required to continue and develop equality of opportunity on YTS and employment training.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information training and enterprise councils will make publicly available on the health and safety performance of the YTS and employment training schemes they are responsible for; and what information will be made publicly available in the case of accidents leading to serious injury or the death of a trainee.

Mr. Cope: The detailed arrangements under which training and enterprise councils will operate are being developed and these matters are being given consideration. Councils will be required to promote high standards of health and safety on YTS and employment training.

YTS

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what monitoring of YTS managing agents will be taking place in 1989-90; if all existing YTS-approved training organisations will be subjected to a full review of their training arrangements on all 10 criteria that make up approved training organisation status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The key features of the arrangements for 1989-90 are as follows:

(i) Agreement of development plans and performance targets for training outputs.
(ii) Review of achievements throughout the year.
(iii) Selective involvement in development work.
(iv) Annual review of performance.
(v) Negotiation of subsequent contract.

In addition, selective inspections are carried out by the training standards advisory service.

Compliance with the 10 ATO criteria will be fully reviewed and used in the annual review of performance. In addition, a formal re-examination of approved status can be made at any time if evidence from the monitoring arrangements shows this to be necessary.

Working Population

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current estimates and projections of the population of working age, men and women, by standard region including Greater London, for 1979, 1983, 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Lee: The figures requested are given in the table:

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what safeguards he is taking to ensure the confidentiality of the personal information given to employment training training agents and managers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Personal information held on computer systems of training agents and training managers is already protected by the requirements of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Training Agency officials are considering whether any further safeguards for the protection of personal information are necessary.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what personal information employment service staff and claimant advisers may obtain on an employment training trainee from the trainee's training manager or training agent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls: No information about the personal characteristics or personal circumstances of a trainee should be passed to the employment service by a training agent or training manager.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people who are direct entrants on employment training and not transferred in have left employment training since it began; and how many have left employment training after being transferred in from a constituent part.

Mr. Nicholls: To the end of December 1988, the latest date for which information is available, 39,500 people had left employment training. It is estimated that of these about 20,000 had been direct recruits. The remainder had chosen to transfer from other programmes.

Trade Unions

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimates his Department has made as to the number of employees who belong to trade unions under (a) pre-entry closed shop arrangements and (b) post-entry closed shop arrangements.

Mr. Nicholls: On the basis of the 1984 workplace industrial relations survey, it was estimated that approximately 500,000 employees worked under pre-entry closed shop arrangements and around 3·1 million under post-entry closed shop arrangements. We expect to be able to update these estimates shortly in the light of our review of the closed shop.

Correspondence

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the hon. Member for Midlothian can expect an answer to his letter dated 3 February, written on behalf of the Miners' Parliamentary Group, requesting a meeting with him.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked me to meet the hon. Member and the meeting has been arranged.

Tourism

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what value of section 4 grants have been made for each of the past five years in the north Devon area.

Mr. Lee: I regret that this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what value of section 4 grants have been made for each of the past five years in the Duchy of Cornwall.

Mr. Lee: Under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969, the English tourist board has offered assistance to projects in Cornwall, during the last five years, as follows:

Financial year	Number of projects	Total assistance offered £
1984-85	41	572,870
1985-86	43	433,009
1986-87	55	757,556
1987-88	36	568,948
[1]1988-89	22	618,625

[1] To January 1989.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many section 4 grants have been made for each of the past five years in the West Country tourist board area; and what was their total value.

Mr. Lee: Offers of assistance made by the English tourist board under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 to projects in the West Country tourist board area during the five years up to March 1988 were as follows:

Year	Number of projects	Total value of assistance offered £
1983-84	116	2,760,000
1984-85	125	1,934,000
1985-86	156	2,464,000
1986-87	201	3,519,000
1987-88	157	3,125,000

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will lift his suspension of section 4 grants for the south-west of England to bring their regulations in line with those for Scotland and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No. The particular scheme of assistance operated in England under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 has been suspended pending consideration of this and a number of other issues arising out of the review of tourism policy.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many section 4 grants have been paid out to firms in Devon during each of the past five years for which statistics are available.

Mr. Lee: Under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969, the English tourist board has offered assistance to projects in Devon, during the last five years, as follows:

Financial Year	Number of Projects
1984-85	43
1985-86	73
1986-87	83
1987-88	78
1988-89[1]	47

[1] (to January 1989)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all projects financed by section 4 tourism grants in each region during each year since 1979 giving in each case the size of the grant and the percentage of the total expenditure on the project this represented.

Mr. Lee: This information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to what was the labour force participation rate for (a) men and (b) women in the age groups (i) 16 to 19 years, (ii) 20 to 24 years, (iii) 25 to 54 years, (iv) 55 to 64 years and (v) 65 to 74 years, in 1970, 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1988, for the United Kingdom, France, West Germany, Italy, the United States of America, Japan and Sweden.

Mr. Lee: This information is not available for all the countries listed at the detailed level requested. The table below gives the available data common to all countries. More detailed information on European Community countries is included in the Eurostat publication "Labour Force Survey Results", copies of which are kept in the Library.

Single Parents

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many single parents are on each Government training scheme; how many single parents on those schemes take up the child care allowance available; what is the total annual cost of the child care allowances scheme; and what is the estimated cost of providing child care allowance on training schemes for all married women who could potentially enter those schemes.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 15 February 1989]: Information on lone parents on Government training schemes is available only for employment training, which is the only such scheme under which child care allowances are available.

Over 2,000 lone parents have already joined employment training. Information on how many of them are claiming for child care payments will not be available until the end of April but, so far, advances of just over £1 million have been made to training managers in respect of their commitments to child care allowances. The cost of making child care allowances to all married women who could potentially enter Government training schemes is difficult to estimate but would undoubtedly be substantial.

ENVIRONMENT

Football Clubs

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many football clubs in England and Wales the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) has visited since becoming Minister of Sport; and if he will list the clubs visited.

Mr. Moynihan: I have visited the following Football League clubs since my appointment as Minister for Sport:

Charlton Athletic	3 October 1987
	20 December 1987
	23 January 1988
	23 April 1988
	8 October 1988
	14 January 1989
	28 January 1989
Derby County	26 March 1988
Hartlepool United	27 February 1988
Luton Town	16 January 1988
Manchester United	1 January 1988
Millwall	19 November 1988
	29 January 1989
Oxford United	23 November 1988
Tottenham Hotspur	31 October 1987
West Ham United	8 January 1989
Reading	5 May 1988
Aston Villa	19 May 1988
Arsenal	9 August 1988
Liverpool	16 November 1988

Housing (Rural Areas)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage the provision of low-cost housing in rural areas.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide additional finance for housing in small rural communities.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to the answer that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) on 8 February at columns 726-27.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures for families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England and Wales.

Mr. Trippier: Latest estimates of households temporarily placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation by English local authorities appear in table 4(a) of "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the third quarter of 1988. Supplementary Tables", which is available in the Library.

For Welsh figures, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Housing Defects

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to reform the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Mr. Trippier: We have recently consulted on possible changes intended to streamline the housing defects scheme of assistance for house owners; copies of the Department's consultation letter are in the Library. We are considering responses and will reach decisions as soon as we can.

Isle of Dogs Enterprise Zone

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether firms located in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone at 26 April 1992, when the enterprise zone scheme ceases, will become liable for payment of unified business rates at the full amount.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The consultation document on the arrangements for phasing in the effects of the uniform business rate and the 1990 revaluation issued by the Department yesterday, copies of which are in the Library, proposes that phasing of rate bills should not apply to properties in enterprise zones when those come to an end.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a breakdown on a year by year basis of the total rate allowance claimed in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone.

Mr. Trippier: The information is as follows:

1982-83	1,093,665
1983-84	1,509,245
1984-85	2,290,567
1985-86	2,192,527
1986-87	3,192,998
1987-88	5,077,452
1988-89	11,697,261

London Docklands

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give the new address of each firm that has been relocated from the London docklands urban development area with London Docklands development corporation assistance;

(2) if he will provide a breakdown by economic sector of those firms that have been relocated from the London docklands urban development area with London Docklands development corporation assistance;

(3) how many firms have been relocated from the London docklands urban development area with London Docklands development corporation assistance; and what was the total cost to the corporation of these relocations.

Mr. Trippier: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide an estimate of the number or proportion of the jobs attracted to the London docklands urban development area that have gone to residents of the London boroughs of Newham, Tower Hamlets and Southwark and the basis for any estimate given.

Mr. Trippier: Of the 20,317 jobs attracted to the LDDC area since 1981, some 4,955, approximately one in four, have gone to residents of Newham, Southwark or Tower Hamlets.

This estimate is based on surveys of employment in the LDDC area in 1985 and 1987 commissioned by LDDC, and relates only to "employing establishments". There are a further 5,668 jobs in "other employments", for example one man businesses and construction sites. An unknown proportion of these jobs will also be held by residents of the three boroughs.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 457, if he will provide a breakdown by economic sector of the 41 firms employing 10 or more people that closed between 1981 and 31 March 1988 in the London docklands urban development area.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is as follows

SIC code		Number of firms
1	Energy and water	1
2	Extraction of minerals; Manufacture of metals	3
3	Metal goods/vehicles industry	3
4	Other manufacturing	8
5	Construction	4

Enterprise Zones

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sums have been paid to each local authority in the United Kingdom in lieu of rates forgone from enterprise zones for each of the years 1985-86, 1986-87, and 1987-88, respectively.

Mr. Trippier: Payments to local authorities in England in lieu of rate revenue forgone in enterprise zones for the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 are

Rate revenue foregone in enterprise zones in England

Grants (London)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the proposed allocations of city partnership and programme authority grants to London boroughs for 1989-90 and for 1988-89.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answers that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) on 1 February at columns 215-17 and to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 3 February at columns 428-29.

Accommodation Agencies

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to conduct a review of the conduct of accommodation agencies.

Mr. Trippier: I have no plans to do so.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list his initial housing investment programme allocations to local authorities in (a) inner London, (b) outer London, (c) the south-east outside London, (d) East Anglia, (e) the south-west, (f) the east midlands, (g) the west midlands, (h) Yorkshire and Humberside, (i) the north, (j) the north-west and (k) England as a whole for (1) 1989-90, (2) 1987-88, (3) 1985-86, (4) 1983-84, (5) 1981-82 and (6) 1979-80 at constant 1989-90 prices.

Mr. Trippier: A table giving the information requested has been laid in the Library. Since 1981-82 local authorities have been able to supplement their allocations by expenditure financed from capital receipts. Nationally, two thirds of local authorities spending power on housing in 1989-90 is expected to come from capital receipts.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the number of local authority dwellings let through the national mobility scheme and for London's other schemes (a) in total and (b) to homeless households between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988, in (i) Greater London, (ii) in metropolitan areas, (iii) in non-metropolitan areas in the south-east, (iv) in all non-metropolitan areas and (v) in England as a whole;

(2) what was (a) the total number of households and (b) the number of homeless households taking up nominations made between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988 by local authorities to secure housing association or new town tenancies in (i) Greater London, (ii) other metropolitan areas, (iii) in non-metropolitan areas in the south-east, (iv) in all non-metropolitan areas and (v) in England as a whole;

(3) what was (a) the total number of homeless households and (b) the number of homeless households in priority need for whom local authorities accepted responsibility between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988, for securing accommodation in (i) Greater London, (ii) in other metropolitan areas, (iii) in non-metropolitan areas in the south-east, (iv) in all non-metropolitan areas and (v) in England as a whole;

(4) how many local authority dwellings were (a) vacant and available for letting on 1 April 1987 and (b) became available for letting between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988 (i) through new build, (ii) through acquisition, modernisation or conversion, (iii) through other means, including vacation by existing tenants in (a) Greater London, (b) in other metropolitan areas, (c) in non-metropolitan areas in the south-east, (d) in all non-metropolitan areas and (e) England as a whole;

(5) what is the number of local authority dwellings let to new tenants as secure tenancies (a) in total and (b) to homeless households between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988 in (i) Greater London, (ii) in metropolitan areas outside London, (iii) in non-metropolitan areas in the south-east, (iv) in all non-metropolitan areas and (v) in England as a whole.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him yesterday.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many nations are sending delegates or observers to the March conference on limitation of the use of chlorofluorocarbons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Invitations to the "Saving the Ozone Layer" London conference on 5 to 7 March have gone to over 150 countries active within the United Nations environment programme (UNEP). We already expect over 90 to be represented, some 75 at ministerial level. We are receiving further acceptances daily.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what instructions he proposes to give to (a) community charges registration officers, (b) charging authorities, and (c) valuation and community charge tribunals, concerning the provision of material in ethnic minority languages and translation facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: A practice note on the community charge canvass issued last November advised registration officers of the need to provide guidance in languages other than English in some areas. To assist those authorities with substantial ethnic minority populations the Department will make available translations of the model form and notes in Urdu, Bengali, Hindi, Gujarati and Punjabi. Camera-ready copy will be available to registration officer and charging authorities, free of charge, early next month.

Lead Pollution

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the level of lead in the atmosphere which is considered acceptable in the urban environment and the level which is considered to be detrimental to the health of pedestrians and to the public at large.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In order to help protect humans against the effect of lead in the environment, the EC directive on lead in air (82/884/EEC) sets a limit value of 2 microgrammes per cubic metre of air (2 mg/m^3), expressed as an annual average of measured levels.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will provide detailed information of the locations at which the lead content of air in Cardiff was measured during the past two years; what levels were recorded; and if he will give the dates on which measurements were made, and the methods used.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Lead in air levels have been monitored since 1985 at a site in Waungron road, Cardiff. Monitoring has been continuous, using Warren Spring laboratory's M-type sampler, a method which complies with the requirements of the EC directive of lead in air (82/884/EEC).

The following results have been recorded:

Year	Annual Average Lead Concentrations (mg/m^3)
1985	1·28
1986	0·63

Results for 1988 are not yet available.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has available of levels of lead pollution in the air in Cardiff over the last 10 years; what trends have been reflected in measurements taken during the period; and what steps he is taking to reduce lead pollution in the atmosphere in Cardiff and elsewhere in England and Wales.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Lead in air levels in Cardiff have been continuously monitored since 1985. From 1 January 1986 measured levels have decreased by approximately 50 per cent. following the reduction in the permitted lead content of petrol to 0·15 g per litre. To bring about further reductions in lead in air levels, the Government are continuing vigorously to encourage the wider use of unleaded petrol.

Drinking Water

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 17 January to the hon. Member for Cornwall, North (Mr. Neale), Official Report, column 147, on which date he wrote to the South West water authority informing it that an emergency derogation under article 10 of the EC drinking water directive (80/778/EEC) would not be appropriate.

Mr. Ridley: No letter was sent to the South West water authority to inform it that an article 10 derogation would not be appropriate. On 24 October 1988 my Department wrote to the authority agreeing to its withdrawal of its application for a derogation.

Landfill

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will take steps to make funds available for remedial action at the landfill site at Moss lane, Rixton, Warrington, to make the site safe, in the light of the evidence of unauthorised dumping;

(2) if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the dumping of waste designated for incineration at the landfill site at Moss lane, Rixton, Warrington, and as to the nature of the waste and the period over which it was dumped;

(3) if he will institute a public inquiry into the dumping of toxic waste at the landfill site at Moss land, Rixton, Warrington;

(4) what information he has as to (a) the source and (b) the nature of the waste designated for incineration which has been dumped at a landfill site at Moss lane, Rixton, Warrington;

(5) what assessment he has made of the threat to public health of the discovery of waste designated for incineration being dumped at a landfill site at Moss lane, Rixton, Warrington.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State of the Environment what information he has as to clinical waste derived from AIDS patients which are disposed to landfill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 9 February 1989]: I have asked Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to carry out a full investigation into the circumstances surrounding the deposit of clinical waste at the landfill at Moss lane, Rixton, Cheshire, and particularly what enforcement action WDA is proposing to take. There are no plans to instigate a formal public inquiry.

Local Councils (Statistics)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will state in tabular form, for (a) Tower Hamlets, (b) Richmond upon Thames, (c) Sutton London borough, (d) Calderdale and (e) Stockport metropolitan district (i) which political party or groups of parties control the council, (ii) what has been the percentage change in spending by the council in each financial year since 1986-87, (iii) what has been the change in staffing levels in whole-time equivalents for each year since 1985 and (iv) what has been the change in the rate poundage, expressed as a percentage for each financial year since 1986-87;

(2) if he will give in tabular form for (a) Bedfordshire county council, (b) Cambridgeshire county council, (c) Cheshire county council, (d) Cumbria county council (e) Devon county council, (f) Gloucester county council, (g) Humberside county council, (h) Isle of Wight county council, (i) Lancashire county council, (j) Leicestershire county council, (k) Shropshire county council, (l) Somerset county council, (m) Warwickshire county council, and (n) Wiltshire county council (i) which political party of groups of parties has control of the council, (ii) what has been the percentage change in spending by the council in each financial year since 1986-87, (iii) what has been the change in staffing levels, in whole-time equivalents, for each year since 1985, (iv) what has been the change in the rate poundage expressed, as a percentage, for each financial year since 1986-87, (v) which councils are a nuclear-free Zone and (vi) which councils, acting as a local education authority employ staff to teach peace studies as part of the curriculum.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 13 February 1989]: The information for the authorities listed is as follows:

[1] Figures are for general services (ie excluding law and order services).
[2] Full-time equivalent figures are not available at individual authority level.
[3] The abolition of the Greater London council and Metropolitan county councils in April 1986, and the consequent transfer of staff to the London boroughs and Metropolitan districts, will have affected individual authorities differently.
[4] Data not available.

Only three authorities of those listed—Richmond-upon-Thames, London borough of Sutton and the Isle of Wight—are currently controlled by a single party. In each case SLD has overall control.

Information is not held centrally on authorities which have declared themselves to be nuclear free zones, or which employ staff to teach peace studies as part of the curriculum.

Sea Water (Pollution)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give up-to-date figures on the volume of sewage pumped into British coastal waters each day and the percentage of sewage that is untreated.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 14 February 1989]: Approximately 2 million cu m of sewage are discharged into coastal waters in England and Wales each day. The discharge of sewage into the sea is regulated under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 and water authorities have to obtain consents which are legally enforceable from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. In addition, all new long sea outfalls must be designed so as to ensure that the affected bathing waters meet the mandatory requirements of the EC bathing water directive.

Local Authorities (Funding)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total rate support grant to Cambridgeshire county council in each year from 1983-84 to 1989-90 in (a) cash terms and (b) 1989 prices together with the amount of grant withheld in those years when expenditure exceeded Government targets for the county council.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 14 February 1989]: The table shows the latest figures for total rate support grant payable to Cambridgeshire county council for each year from 1983-84 to 1989-90 in both cash and 1989-90 prices.

In 1984-85 the grant of Cambridgeshire county council was abated by £4·152 million in cash terms (£5·311 million at 1989-90 prices) because its total expenditure exceeded Government targets.

Water Charges

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report (a) the domestic water charges and (b) the industrial metered water charges per cubic metre to be levied by each English and Welsh Water Authority after 1 April 1989; and what charges were levied in the previous financial year.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 15 February 1989]: Information in the form requested by the hon. Member is not yet available.

Repairs

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of tenants who have (a) applied for and (b) received payment for repairs carried out under the right to repairs scheme introduced under the Housing and Building Control Act 1984 in (i) 1986, (ii) 1987, and (iii)1988; what is the total cost of payments made under this scheme in each of these years; and what has been the cost to the Government and local authorities in introducing and administering this scheme.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 15 February 1989]: The number of claims and their total cost in each of these years is shown in the table. The Department has incurred total costs of some £40,000 in informing tenants of the scheme and on training them; administrative costs for the scheme are not identified separately. Information on local authorities' costs other than on meeting claims is not collected by the Department.

England	Total number of claims received for payment	Total number of claims agreed[1] for payment	Total amount agreed[1] £

1987	24	22	1,900
1988 (Q1) (provisional)	1	1	200

Rivers (Derbyshire)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many storm sewage overflows discharge into Derbyshire rivers; how many of these are subject to consent conditions other than volumetric conditions; and how many failed to achieve their consent conditions during the last 12 months for which figures are availble.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 15 February 1989]: Information on discharge consents is not held by the Department in a form which would allow the identification of discharges in any particular area. Details of consents granted are, however, on the public registers maintained by water authorities—in the case of discharges in the Derbyshire area, by the Severn-Trent water authority.

Conditions normally imposed in consents for storm overflows are of volumetric nature relating to the point at which they commence operation. Non-compliance with any condition other than those does not therefore arise.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (i) local authority and (ii) authorised private, individual sites under section 6 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 exist in each of Bedfordshire, Cambridgeshire, Essex, Hertfordshire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk and Suffolk; and if he will also list those districts within these counties which have (a) applied and (b) been approved for designation under section 12 of the Act as amended by the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 15 February 1989]: My Department holds records of sites provided under section 6 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 with grant aid from the Exchequer. Although this excludes private sites, information collected for the Department's latest six-monthly count reveals the number of caravans on such sites. The details are as follows:

County	(a) Number of local authority sites at 1 January 1989	(b) Number of caravans on local authority sites as at 20 July 1988	(c) Number of caravans on private sites as at 20 July 1988
Bedfordshire	7	125	11
Cambridgeshire	12	269	178
Essex	9	84	66
Hertfordshire	9	183	27
Lincolnshire	4	127	3
Norfolk	3	56	24
Suffolk	2	74	80

Applications for designation under section 12 of the 1968 Act, as amended, are as follows:

	(b) Applications pending	(b) Applications granted
Bedfordshire	—	All districts
Cambridgeshire	East Cambridgeshire	Huntingdon
		Peterborough

Cambridgeshire County Council

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the annual changes in (i) total expenditure and (ii) net expenditure after block grant for Cambridgeshire county council for each year from 1983-84 to 1988-89.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 15 February 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

£ million cash prices

Annual changes in	Total expenditure	Total expenditure less block grant
1983-84—1984-85	11·274	11·719
1984-85—1985-86	8·392	12·136
1985-86—1986-87	26·739	35·897
1986-87—1987-88	19·609	16·043
1987-88—1988-89	28·781	33·590

Structure Plan (North-East Hampshire)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his decisions in respect of alterations to the north-east Hampshire structure plan.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 15 February 1989]: I am considering the report of the examination in public and will send my proposed modifications to Hampshire county council as soon as possible.

Water (Grants)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds will be available to water plcs after privatisation to cover schemes presently eligible for European regional development fund grants.

Mr. Chope: It is not known what sums will be available for providing grant from the ERDF. Areas eligible for grant and the value of the proportion of the fund they will attract have not yet been finalised by the European Commission.

Applications for grant will also need to satisfy the criteria laid down in the EC regulations.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sums each water authority has received as EC European regional development fund grants in each of the last four years.

Mr. Chope: The value of ERDF grants awarded to water authorities for infrastructure schemes in eligible areas in each of the last four years is as follows:

	1985	1986	1987	1988
Anglian	3·876	—	—	—
North West	5·351	40·582	22·995	3·305
Northumbrian	5·342	3·546	18·793	7·032
Severn Trent	3·352	6·027	6·886	0·804
South West	0·595	2·958	3·747	10·827
Yorkshire	12·865	0·905	3·751	4·873

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sums South-West Water received in EC European regional development fund grants in 1987-88.

Mr. Chope: In the United Kingdom financial year 1987-88 ERDF grant to the value of £10·829 million was awarded to the South West water authority.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Production Costs

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is (a) the annual cost and (b) the nominal average cost per Member of the yearly production of (i) the full Vote bundle, (ii) the Official Report, (iii) written parliamentary questions and (iv) oral parliamentary questions.

Mr. Wakeham: The annual cost of production for (i) the full Vote bundle and (ii) the House of Commons Official Report is currently estimated at £5 million and £7·2 million respectively. Written and oral parliamentary questions form part of the above and are not separately identifiable. The annual cost figures quoted are for all copies produced, not just those supplied to Members, and —in the case of the Official Report—cover daily and weekly debates, indexes, bound volumes and Standing Committee debates.

Based on 1988 volumes and current prices, the annual cost per Member of supplying one copy of (i) the Vote bundle and (ii) the daily Official Report would be £3,235 and £761 respectively.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) working heads and (b) dependants facing marginal tax and benefit withdrawal rates in excess of 50 per cent. in the manner of his answer on 25 March 1988, Official Report, column 244.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Precise details can be provided only in overall terms. On the basis of the earlier reply the figures for families with children are as follows. Before taking account of the effect of the March 1988 Budget, an estimated 510,000 workings heads with 1·4 million adult and child dependants had marginal deduction rates of over 50 per cent. Post-Budget, 480,000 working heads with 1·3 million dependants were in this category. The underlying assumptions are those used in "Impact of the reformed structure of income related benefits" October 1987, copies of which are in the Library. Similar figures for working heads without children are not available.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will break down the numbers of prosecutions for 1987-88 in his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 192, by type of offence, type of offenders and sex of offenders.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. RFD

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stretford concerning Mr. RFD, 3 February, Official Report, column 441, if he will give details of the undertaking received by officers of his Department about the non-eviction of RFD; if he was aware that RFD was threatened with eviction prior to his Department being informed by the hon. Member for Stretford; and what advice was subsequently given.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A verbal undertaking was given by the acting hotel manager that, pending the hotel owner's release from custody, no evictions would take place. The Department was aware that Mr. RFD feared eviction prior to the notification by the hon. Member; Mr. RFD was advised about the undertaking and his solicitors were informed about the inquiries which were in progress. If the hon. Member requires further information perhaps he would write to me.

Pensions

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he has any plans to restore the link with earnings when the annual adjustment to pensions takes place;

(2) if he has any plans to raise the basic level for the retirement pension to half of average earnings for a couple and a third of average earnings for a single pensioner.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are pledged to maintain the value of the state retirement pension as a result of our policies, pensioners' average total net incomes rose by 23 per cent. in real terms in the seven years from 1979. This compares with only 3 per cent. between 1974 and 1979, when pensions were uprated by the higher of prices or earnings increases.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to replace the 25p pension increase in the weekly payment to (a) those aged 80 plus years and (b) those aged 75 plus years and over by a substantial increase.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Pensioners over 80 on low incomes receive higher pensioner premiums under income support. From next October the higher pensioner premiums will be increased over and above the increase due from next April, and in addition there will be new premiums for pensioners aged 75 and over. The October increase will mean an extra £2·50 per week for single pensioners and £3·50 for couples. The 25p age addition is paid to pensioners from age 80.

Winter Heating Premium

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans for a non means-tested winter heating premium for pensioners during the winter months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Such a premium would not be an effective way of using available resources. Income support provides benefit for less well-off pensioners. The rates are intended to cover basic living costs including heating. Extra help is targeted through the premiums which will be enhanced for older and disabled pensioners from October 1989. These provisions are reinforced by the social fund cold weather payments scheme which this winter was extended to include income support recipients aged 60-64 as well as those aged 65 and over.

Social Fund

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish in the Official Report the social fund expenditure of each local office in the north-east region for loans and grants, respectively, and the same figures expressed as percentages of monthly profiles (a) for the latest month available and (b) for the total period covered by the social fund, on the same basis as the information given in the answer of 31 October 1988 to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) Official Report, columns 497-500.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 15 February 1989]: The information available is given in the table.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to initiate a study on the Health and Safety Commission's report on the "Tolerability of Risk from Nuclear Power Stations".

Mr. Michael Spicer: Following publication of the Health and Safety Executive's document in February 1988, a number of individuals and organisations made comments on the report. These were published on 9 January.

West Stadrill Rig (Defects)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the discovery of a defective gas detection system, defective fire alarm, and one fire pump out of action on the West Stadrill rig; what estimates he makes of the likelihood of such defects on other rigs; and what additional action is being taken by the inspectorate over and above the normal schedule of inspections, to uncover and prevent such defects in safety systems on rigs.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My safety directorate undertook an inspection of the mobile drilling rig West Stadrill on 31 January and 1 February 1989. The inspector found major safety deficiencies and ordered the immediate cessation of well-drilling activities.

Prime responsibility for safety rests with the owner and operator of an installation. However, my inspectors will continue to be vigilant in this vital area of safety and to rigorously enforce the strict safety regulations which apply offshore.

British Coal

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Gas Standing Charges

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he plans to have any discussions with the Director General of Gas Supply about relieving pensioners from standing charges for gas.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No.

Electricity Standing Charges

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to relieve pensioners from standing charges for electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. Standing charges are the fairest means of recovering the industry's fixed costs in providing a supply of electricity. If pensioners were relieved of paying standing charges the unit rate of electricity for domestic consumers would need to rise by about 3·5 per cent. to recoup the lost revenue.

Nuclear Energy Futures

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will arrange a copy of the transcript of the BBC Radio 4 "Analysis" programme broadcast on 9 February on nuclear energy futures to be placed in his Departmental library.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

CEGB

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), 3 February, Official Report, column 424, if he will set out the criteria he uses to decide between questions for which he has responsibility in regard to the Central Electricity Generating Board, and questions which are the responsibility of the chairman of the board.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Questions which relate specifically to matters within the management competence of the Central Electricity Generating Board are referred to the chairman of the board.

Petroleum Production

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the Government's latest forecasts of levels of United Kingdom petroleum production.

Mr. Parkinson: The latest forecasts for United Kingdom petroleum production in the years 1989 to 1993 are as follows:

	million tonnes
1989	95-115
1990	100-120
1991	90-120
1992	85-115
1993	80-120

As in previous years, the forecasts are presented in the form of a range of outcomes for each year. These take into account the many uncertainties involved. The figures comprise stabilised crude oil, natural gas liguids (NGLs) and condensates. NGL and condensate production is expected to contribute between 6 and 12 million tonnes annually to the figures.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Credit Cards

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to ascertain the percentage of bank credit card holders who have repaid in full each month for each year since 1984.

Mr. Lilley: Details of repayments by credit card holders are primarily a matter for the institutions concerned.

Building Societies

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he plans any further extension of the powers of building societies; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The series of orders extending building societies' powers, made last June, were designed to set the future framework for building societies within which they could make sensible plans about their development. However, I indicated then that it would be necessary from time to time to make minor changes by order to suit particular circumstances, within that broad policy framework.

I announced last June that the Building Societies Commission would consult societies and other interested bodies about one such order, namely one to permit societies to own, or to take an equity stake in, companies involved in the acquisition of mortgages from other lenders. Following those consultations, the order was made by the Commission yesterday and will be laid before Parliament shortly. Recently, the attention of the Treasury and Building Societies Commission has been drawn to the two minor respects in which the intention of the June 1988 measures is not being fulfilled as expected.

The first is that some societies have been frustrated in developing money transmission services by the fact that although they could offer such services to companies, they cannot offer them incidental overdraft facilities. I accordingly intend to table a draft order for approval by Parliament to be made under section 19 of the Building Societies Act 1986, to create a new type of class 3 asset. It would empower societies to offer temporary or occasional overdraft facilities, incidental to the provision of money transmission business. But it would not allow continuing unsecured lending to a company in the form of a permanent overdraft.

The second limitation is that a society can provide a wide range of financial services to companies, but they can neither provide companies with unsecured loans themselves, nor introduce the borrower to another lender. I adhere to the view that for at least the next stage of their development, societies should continue to be limited in making unsecured loans on their own balance sheet only to individuals. But I have agreed to a proposal from the Building Societies Commission that it should make an order which would enable societies to introduce, or otherwise arrange, unsecured loans and leases for companies as agents of another financial institution.

The Building Societies Commission is initiating consultations on two new draft orders, so that the draft money transmission order may be laid before Parliament shortly. Many societies have their annual general meetings during March and April, and they may wish to adopt the revised powers at this time.

EC (Economic and Finance Council)

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lilley: The ECOFIN Council met in Brussels on 13 February. I represented the United Kingdom.

The council heard proposals from the Commission for two new directives. The first would introduce a common minimum withholding tax on interest income. The second would amend directive 799/77 concerning co-operation between national tax administrations in the field of direct taxation and VAT. The proposed directives will be discussed by officials of the member states before being considered further at the April meeting of the ECOFIN Council.

National Income

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the growth in (a) non-oil national income and (b) national income including oil per head since 1979.

Mr. Major: The only measure which is compiled including and excluding oil is the output-based measure of the gross domestic product (GDP). Expressed in per capita terms, this grew 14·8 per cent. between 1979 and 1987. Excluding the contribution of the extraction of mineral oil and natural gas, the growth over the same period was 12·3 per cent.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what benefits would accrue to the United Kingdom from joining the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system; and if there are any comparable disadvantages.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 16 February 1989]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Holland with Boston (Sir R. Body) on 20 January 1989 at column 358 and the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) on 1 February 1989 at column 226 and to my right hon. Friend's reply to a question from the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) at column 1162 on 26 January 1989.

THE ARTS

Dance Companies

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the subsidy per seat via the Arts Council and local authorities to the leading touring dance companies in the latest available year.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is as follows:

Dance company	Subsidy[1] per seat £
Royal Ballet	20·25
Sadlers Wells Royal Ballet	16·55
Rambert Dance Company	12·25
London Festival Ballet	11·00
London Contemporary Dance Trust	9·50
Northern Ballet Theatre	4·60

[1] 1987-88, including Arts Council and local authority subsidy.

CIVIL SERVICE

Discretionary Pay

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement about the discretionary pay scheme for grades 2 and 3 staff in the home Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: In the second round of awards made under the arrangements announced by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister on 23 April 1987, awards have been made to 11 grade 2s and 41 grade 3s. The total number of staff currently in receipt of awards following the first and second rounds of the scheme is 34 grade 2s and 108 grade 3s, respectively 25 per cent. and 22 per cent. of all those in each grade.

The full year cost of these awards is £322,000 or about 1·25 per cent. of the annual pay bill for the grades concerned.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to his Union of Soviet Socialist Republics counterpart about the withdrawal of Soviet troops from the Wakhan corridor in Afghanistan; what response he has received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have repeatedly called upon the Soviet Union to withdraw all its forces from Afghanistan. A Soviet Government statement published in Pravda on 16 February announced that withdrawal had been completed. We have no reason to believe that there are now any Soviet troops in Afghanistan's Wakhan corridor.

PRIME MINISTER

Select Committees

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister how many Select Committee recommendations the Government have accepted since the last general election and in which Departments.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally.

London Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Prime Minister how many Government Departments have a locus in training in London Docklands.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Employment (which includes the Training Agency), the Department of the Environment, and the Department of Education and Science each have a locus in the provision of training in London Docklands.

Unpasteurised Milk Cheese

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination between the Scottish Office, the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on action concerning unpasteurised milk cheese.

The Prime Minister: Regulations controlling the composition, advertising and labelling of all cheese offered for sale for human consumption in England and Wales are made jointly under the Food Act by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Health. Regulations also exist in Scotland and Northern Ireland respectively.

Newspaper Proprietors (Entertainment)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give the cost of entertaining proprietors of United Kingdom-based newspapers over the last year; and if she will break the cost down by proprietor.

The Prime Minister: No. Information in the form requested is not available.

Pensioners Groups

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans for pensioners groups to be represented on policy making bodies including the areas of (a) broadcasting and television, (b) the health service, (c) social services, (d) housing authorities and (e) local government.

The Prime Minister: Ministers are in regular contact with pensioner groups and the major voluntary organisations representing pensioner interests. Pensioners' interests are therefore already taken into account in the Government's decision-making process.

SCOTLAND

Golf Courses

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the role of (i) the Scottish tourist board, (ii) the Scottish Development Agency, (iii) the Locate in Scotland office and (iv) any other public body in attracting large-scale luxury golf courses and associated developments to Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Where such developments further the various objectives of bodies like the Scottish Development Agency and Locate in Scotland, then advice or assistance may be offered to the schemes' promoters.

In 1987, the Scottish tourist board commissioned a report from consultants on the marketing and provision of golfing facilities. The board assesses that golf has the potential to attract more visitors to Scotland but that major investment will be required if Scotland is to compete with rival destinations.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice is available from his Department to local authorities concerning the development of large-scale luxury golf courses and associated developments.

Mr. Lang: No specific advice has been given to local authorities on the planning issues arising from such developments. Local authorities are expected to have regard to our general advice on development in the countryside.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the number of applications for the development of large-scale luxury golf courses and associated developments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I understand that a number of proposals to develop golf courses and associated hotel facilities in locations throughout Scotland have been announced recently. Information on the number of these developments for which planning permission has been or is being sought is not held centrally.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department has any plans to carry out an impact assessment of the development of large-scale luxury golf courses and associated developments on the economies of the areas in which they are situated and on the Scottish economy as a whole.

Mr. Lang: No.

A consultant's report on golfing facilities commissioned by the Scottish tourist board (STB) in 1987 indicated that there could be a considerable and growing market for Scottish golf both at home and abroad. It is already an important asset to Scottish tourism. Information available to STB suggests that visiting golfers contribute at least £6·5 million to Scottish golf courses with golfers participating in organised tours adding a further £5 million.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what public funds have been spent by his Department and public bodies for which he is responsible, in attracting large-scale luxury golf courses and associated developments to Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish tourist board has made a number of small grants to golf clubs towards the improvement of courses and clubhouse facilities.

The Scottish Development Agency and the Cumbernauld development corporation are assisting the development of a hotel and leisure complex, which will be associated with golfing facilities, at Westerwood, Cumbernauld.

Tourist Developments

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies have been carried out by (a) his Department and (b) the Scottish tourist board on the impact on the relative tourist industry in Scotland of large-scale luxury developments, and small-scale indigenous developments.

Mr. Lang: The Industry Department for Scotland has undertaken a study of the net impact of a sample of projects assisted by the Scottish tourist board. This work was undertaken as a contribution to an evaluation of the cost effectiveness of the National tourist boards' scheme of financial assistance to tourist projects.

The Scottish tourist board conducts feasibility, research and planning studies, details of which are contained in the board's annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library. The board also undertakes ongoing monitoring of projects which they assist.

NHS Video

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) on whose authority a register of attendance is being taken of hospital staff attending the video presentation of "Working for Patients";

(2) if he will give the purpose of maintaining a register of attendance of hospital staff at the video presentation of "Working for Patients".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I hope that all who work in the Scottish Health Service will have the opportunity to see the video presentation, which explains the Government's proposals in "Working for Patients". Arrangements for providing such an opportunity are a matter for the health boards, as part of their day-to-day management function. My right hon. and learned Friend has issued no specific instructions on such local arrangements.

Winter Herding Act 1686

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to review the level of penalty applicable under the Winter Herding Act 1686 for trespass from its current level of half a merk per beast.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Winter Herding Act 1686 was repealed by the Animals (Scotland) Act 1987.

Law Society of Scotland

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in each of the past 10 years recommendations contained in memoranda of observations of committees of the Law Society of Scotland have been adopted by the departments to which such recommendations were addressed; and if he will list the recommendations in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not centrally collated.

DEFENCE

Aircraft Spares

Mr. Jim Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft, and of what type, have been used for spares in each year since 1980.

Mr. Neubert: The information is not readily available in the form required, and could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

AWRE Aldermaston

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work is currently being carried out on the reactor equipment at atomic weapons research establishment, Aldermaston; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: AWE Aldermaston's HERALD research reactor was closed down in September last year after 30 years of operation. The reactor fuel elements have been removed and safely stored. The reactor building is now being put on a care and maintenance basis.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if his Department has made any study of the feasibility of using a linear proton accelerator to produce tritium on the closure of British Nuclear Fuels plc's Chapelcross plant;

(2) if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours), 7 February, Official Report, column 786, he will make a statement on the long-term effectiveness of British Nuclear Fuels plc's present nuclear reactors to provide military nuclear materials for the United Kingdom defence programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: The reactors at Chapelcross are expected to be effective for the production of any military nuclear materials which may be required, until the late 1990s. Any longer-term defence requirements and options for the replacement of reactors will be kept under review as appropriate.

Military Aircraft

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright), Official Report, 25 January, column 651, about military aircraft destroyed or severely damaged in accidents during the last 10 years, he will set out the total costs for these losses in pounds sterling at present day values.

Mr. Neubert: It is not our practice to publish unit production costs of equipment. For information on the costs of major equipment projects I refer the hon. Member to table 3.2 of volume 2 of the statement of Defence Estimates 1988 (Cm. 344-11).

Nuclear Missiles

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the number of nuclear missiles removed from the European theatre by the Soviet Union; and what is the source of this information.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Soviet Union has publicly announced that it will be withdrawing about 24 short range missile systems from the forward area as part of the unilateral withdrawals that they intend to make before 1991. This will be in addition to the complete removal of INF systems under the terms of the INF treaty.

Soviet Union (Nuclear Systems)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith), Official Report, 7 February, column 795, if he will set out the source of his information that the Soviet Union has modernised all its shorter-range nuclear systems in the last few years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to discuss in detail the sources of our information on such matters.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has recently discussed the nuclear non-proliferation treaty with his counterparts in North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No, but nuclear proliferation and the non-proliferation treaty are kept under continual scrutiny by Ministers and officials in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Ministry of Defence.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Child Care Workers

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of his Department's appropriate grant aid budget has been allocated to the training of child care workers over the last five years to date.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not available in the form requested, since the financial records of the Department of Health and Social Services do not distinguish between grants allocated for the training of child care workers and for other purposes.

Health and social services boards meet their own training costs out of their annual revenue allocations from the Department. In May 1988, I announced that an extra £50,000 a year was being made available to boards for at least three years to provide additional training in tackling child abuse. £25,000 has been allocated to date, and the annual sum will be increased to £100,000 in 1989-90. In addition, the Department is contributing to the cost of developing the University of Bath's computer software programme, CHIAC, to assist social workers handling child abuse cases. Development costs for the Northern Ireland programme will amount to £28,000 and £48,000 has been allocated to boards towards the acquisition of computers to enable them to make full use of CHIAC.

The Department funds directly the training of the staff of voluntary social services organisations and offers bursaries and studentships to individual social work students. The Department's expenditure on these items in 1987-88 was £673,700.

Social Security Payments

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the numbers of dependants of those claiming income support or supplementary benefit in each social security office in the past four years.

Mr. Needham [holding asnwer 13 February 1989]: The available information, which is based on a 5 per cent. sample, is as follows:

	1986	1987
Dependants of people on supplementary benefit	183,700	185,800

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the number of punishment cases involving paramilitaries in Northern Ireland for which criminal injuries compensation has been paid and the amounts in each of the years 1979, 1984 and 1987.

Mr. Stewart: The information that is readily available relates only to criminal injury claims for punishment shootings in the form of kneecapping and is as follows. The annual figure represents those cases settled within that calendar period and not those initiated during the year. I understand that five cases were initiated in 1987 of which four have recently been resolved and the other is currently under appeal.

Kneecapping cases

Year	Cases awarded compensation	Compensation paid
1979	7	16,200
1984	3	85,500

WALES

Water Supplies (EEC Standards)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those water supplies in Wales which currently fail to meet the standards set out in the EEC directives on the quality of drinking water and whether or not these are subject to derogations; how and when it is proposed for each of those water supplies to meet the standards laid down; and what is the estimated cost of complying with the standards in each case.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: For the supplies covered by derogations I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given on 3 February to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin).

The following table lists those supplies for which application has been made to the Commission under article 20 for a longer period in which to comply fully with the directive. For these supplies improvement programmes have been submitted which should mean that most of those sources will comply with the directive by 1992.

Health Promotion Authority

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what allocation of resources is to be made to the Health Promotion Authority for Wales for the financial year 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: Subject to parliamentary approval £2·057 million will be made available for allocation to the Health Promotion Authority for Wales in 1989-90. The allocation will be conditional upon satisfactory completion of annual performance review. It represents a further and substantial additional commitment of resources to HPAW over the £1·792 million allocated in 1988-89.

Air Pollution

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received a report from the Government researchers based at Warren Springs on lead in the air in Cardiff; what significance he places on the latest available figures for Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 16 February 1989]: My right hon. Friend has received a report including figures for Cardiff up to 1987. The Cardiff figures are well below the limit value required by the EC directive on lead in air.

(Overseas Development)

Net Flows

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the level of net flows from the United Kingdom to developing countries in each year from 1979 to 1987 at 1979 prices; and what is his definition of net flows.

Mr. Eggar: Total net flows comprise those official and private flows set out in table 3 of "British Aid Statistics 1983-87" which is available in the Library of the House. The information requested is as follows:

Net flows from the United Kingdom to developing countries at 1979 prices (£ million)

	Official	Private	Total
1979	1,083	5,277	6,360
1980	607	3,782	4,388
1981	948	3,446	4,394
1982	778	1,716	2,494
1983	795	1,864	2,659
1984	901	1,389	2,290
1985	886	253	1,139
1986	812	1,755	2,567
1987	699	77	776

Aid Programme

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances it is his practice to tie British overseas aid grants or loans under either the multilateral or the bilateral aid programme to the purchase of British goods or services.

Mr. Eggar: Goods and services funded by bilateral aid are generally British and provided by British firms. In the poorer countries generous provision is made within project aid to help meet the local costs of projects incurred within the recipient country. Part of our contribution to the World Bank's special programme for Africa, project loans and investments by the Commonwealth Development Corporation, budgetary aid, food aid, debt relief and disaster relief are untied. European Community aid is tied to member states and recipient countries. Other multilateral aid is effectively untied.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sum of money in total is made available to the Criminal Injuries Compensation board; and by what formula payments are made.

Mr. John Patten: In 1988-89, £70 million has been provided for compensation and £7.4 million for administration. This expenditure falls on the votes of the Home Office and the Scottish Home and Health Department and is paid as grant-in-aid monthly in advance to meet forecast expenditure. Details about the administration and scope of the criminal injuries compensation scheme and the basis on which compensation is paid are set out in the board's latest annual report (Cm. 265), copies of which are in the Library.

Horserace Betting

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to initiate the inquiry into horserace betting recommended by the Royal Commission on Gambling in 1978.

Mr. John Patten: The Royal Commission recommended a study of bookmaking finances, possibly through the Office of Fair Trading and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. Beginning in 1986, the Office of Fair Trading undertook extensive inquiries into the off-course bookmaking industry, to see if it should be the subject of a complex monopoly reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. In January 1988, the Director-General of that Office announced that he had decided that there were no grounds for such a reference.

We are considering a recommendation from the chairman of the Horserace Betting Levy Board that, following my right hon. Friend's forthcoming determination of the 28th horserace betting levy scheme, there should be an inquiry into the long term financing of racing.

Broadcasting

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish his estimates of television advertising revenue and the increase in total advertising necessary to support a viable fifth television channel, satellite television, cable television and channels 3 and 4 plus three new national radio channels and new local radio stations as envisaged in his Broadcasting White Paper; and what consultations he has had with the advertising industry about its own projections of revenue.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend does not think it appropriate for him to publish forecasts of the revenue that will arise under the new broadcasting arrangements. I am, however, aware of a number of academic studies undertaken in this area and of a variety of forecasts by the advertising industry. In July 1988, we held a seminar on television advertising expenditure to explore the implications of such studies and forecasts for broadcasting policy. Regular contact is maintained with representatives of the advertising industry.

Justices' Clerks

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department where a salary is paid in excess of the JNC for the justices' clerks national salary arrangements to a clerk to the justices, what proportion of the excess is contributed by his department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office meets 80 per cent. of the cost of justices' clerks salaries under the provisions of the Justices of the Peace Act 1979. The Secretary of State may, however, impose conditions on the payment of grant.

Needles (Prisons)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to seek to eliminate the use of needles and halt the market in illegal drugs, needles and syringes in prisons by the introduction of treatment facilities to replace injectable illegal drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The possibility of a history of drugs misuse is one of the factors that medical officers inquire into during the course of their examination of inmates being received into prison custody. Staff are particularly watchful for signs that illicit drugs have been injected. The nature and extent of medical help offered is determined by the medical officer's clinical assessment of the individual case. Counter-measures have been taken to tackle the smuggling and misuse of illicit drugs and implements, and further steps are under consideration.

Registration and Naturalisation

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long applications now being considered for (a) registration and (b) naturalisation, are taking on average, to complete; and what reduction in time taken to complete consideration of such applications he anticipates by the end of 1989.

Mr. Renton: The average time takent to complete applications for registration and naturalisation in January 1989 was 14 months and 21 months respectively.

In view of the enormous number of applications received towards the end of 1987, no improvement in the average processing times is anticipated during 1989 but a considerable improvment is expected during the course of 1990-91.

Prison (Facilities)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking in respect of recommendations by the Chief Inspector of Prisons that all prison cells should have in-cell toilet facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply, 9 February, c. 760]: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons report on prison sanitation will now be published on 20 February.

TRANSPORT

Elderly Persons (Transport Facilities)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to increase public transport facilities for the elderly.

Mr. Portillo: Local authorities already have powers under the Transport Act 1985 to make provision for special transport facilities for the elderly and disabled. They can also make grants to improve transport facilities and equipment for the disabled and such improvements often benefit the elderly too.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to extend the existing schemes of free of charge public transport for pensioners throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo: Local authorities already have discretionary powers under section 93 of the Transport Act 1985 to establish cheap or free travel schemes for pensioners. In addition, private operators such as British Rail and National Express provide travel concessions for the elderly on a commercial basis.

Merseyrail Facilities (Safety)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce a decision of Merseyside Passenger Transport Authority's application for section 56 funding for safety improvements to Merseyrail facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I expect to announce a decision very shortly.

A361 (Taunton-Barnstaple)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which local authorities he informed of his proposal, following the detrunking of the A361 between Taunton and Barnstaple, to declassify it and renumber it the B3227; and when this was done.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All the local authorities and parish councils through which the A361 runs were notified of the proposal to reclassify it as a classified road when the draft detrunking order was published in September 1984, and again when the order was made in August 1986.

The number B3227 was agreed for the Taunton to South Molton section in 1982 with Somerset and Devon county councils.

Oil Pollution (Court Cases)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make it his policy to review the remedies available to the courts when sentencing, after a finding of guilt, in respect of a case of oil pollution in British waters in order to ensure the equal treatment of British and foreign owners.

Mr. Portillo: I have no reason to believe that the courts treat British and foreign owners differently either in oil pollution cases or in any others. Where it is not possible to bring a foreign owner before a British court the Department notifies the relevant flag Administration and invites them to consider prosecution.

Road Tunnels (Ventilation)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department's design standards for ventilation in road tunnels are intended to deal with lead in vehicle emissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. Road tunnel design standards control the dominant pollutants in vehicle emissions and set fresh air requirements for conditions when tunnel traffic is fully congested and emissions are at their worst.

The ventilation standards are for carbon monoxide and diesel smoke and can safely disperse the small quantities of lead to be found in some tunnel atmospheres. Even the unlikely event of a lengthy traffic delay would not cause tunnel users to remain in a tunnel long enough appreciably to increase their overall exposure to lead.

The issue of lead and health was considered by a Department of Health and Social Security working party on lead in the environment. After considering all sources of lead and the variability of short-term average exposures, it recommended that the annual mean concentration at places where people might be exposed to lead in air continuously and for long periods should not exceed 2 mg per cubic metre. The same limit was subsequently adopted in EEC directive No. 82/884—Council directive on a limit value for lead in air. The working party did not recommend, and the directive does not impose, any limits for short term exposures for lead in air, but the Health and Safety Executive sets occupational health limits in its guidance note EH 40/88 "Occupational Exposure Limits 1988". These are based on average exposures over eight-hour periods and would be relevant to tunnel maintenance workers, in particular those allowed to work in tunnels which remain fully or partially open to traffic. In such cases it is standard practice for tunnel ventilation systems to remain in operation.

There is no evidence to suggest that lead arising from vehicle emissions in tunnels increases health risks significantly for tunnel users, maintenance workers or nearby residents. In longer tunnels the environment is continuously regulated and in all cases tunnel exhaust shafts and portals are sited to minimise the impact of tunnel pollution on the immediate vicinity. The steps now taken to protect those working in or living close to tunnels from any adverse effects from tunnel pollution will be reinforced by the reduction of levels of lead in petrol, the increasing availability of unleaded fuel and the implementation of the requirement that from next year all new cars should be capable of running on unleaded petrol.

Pedestrian Crossings

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the malfunction of pedestrian crossings with an audible facility was detected, and on what dates subsequent action was taken by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 14 February 1989]: On 26 September 1988. On 27 September 1988, 24 November 1988, 21 December 1988, 3 January 1989 and 1 February 1989.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Advisory Panel on Deregulation

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current membership of the advisory panel on deregulation; and when he will be appointing new members.

Mr. Maude: A new member has been appointed and will join the panel on 1 March 1989. He is Mr. Neil McArthur, chairman of Thurnall Engineering Ltd., Northbank industrial estate, Cadishead, Manchester. A further four appointments will be made in April.

The advisory panel makes an important contribution to the enterprise and deregulation unit's work by advising it on the impact of regulatory requirements on business and enterprise development.

The new appointment will help to ensure the panel's continuing effectiveness as a source of valuable advice.

The existing membership of the advisory panel on deregulation is as follows:

Sir Nigel Mobbs, DL (Chairman)—Chairman and Chief Executive, Slough Estates plc, Slough.
Mr. Colin Dauris—Chairman and Managing Director, James Dauris & Co. Ltd., London.
Mr. Mike Fisher—Managing Director, Whale Tankers Ltd., Solihull, West Midlands.

Mrs. Teresa Graham—Senior Manager, Price Waterhouse, Newcastle.
Mr. George Gray—Chairman and Managing Director, Valley Capital Ltd., Carnforth, Lancashire, and Deputy Chairman, Development Commission.
Mr. Damon de Laszlo—Chairman, Harwin Ltd., Portsmouth.
Mr. Stephen Moss—Managing Director, BCP Parking, and Director, Drakes Restaurant, London.
Mr. Tom O'Connor—Chairman and Managing Director, Elta Plastics, Stockton-on-Tees.
Mrs. Jenifer Rosenberg, OBE—Managing Director, J & J Fashions Ltd., London.
Mrs. Celia Urquhart—Managing Director, CU Data Ltd., Glasgow.
Mr. Phillip White—Chairman and Chief Executive, WYKO Group plc, Dudley, West Midlands.

Exports-Imports Ratio

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the ratio of exports to imports for (a) manufactured goods and (b) all goods and services for each year since 1979 for the United Kingdom, Germany, Italy, Spain, Sweden and Finland.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is in the table.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Unions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the progress of his Department's review of student unions.

Mr. Jackson: My Department is nearing completion of its analysis of the responses submitted to its questionnaire. In the light of its findings, the Government will in due course consider what action might best be taken and will then consult all those concerned.

City Technology Colleges Trust

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will specify the dates and amounts of any moneys paid or payable to the city technology colleges trust by way of (a) grants and (b) loans.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Grant payments have been made to the CTC trust as follows:

In respect of the 1987-88 financial year:
6 April 1988	12,630
25 May 1988	7,510
In respect of the 1988-89 financial year:
28 September 1988	17,936
16 November 1988	18,000
20 January 1989	1,946

The total amount payable under the grant agreement during the four years 1987-88 to 1990-91 is two thirds of actual expenditure up to a maximum of £200,000.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what amounts of grant Grant-Maintained Schools Ltd. has sought to meet expenditure incurred or to be incurred by it (a) for the purposes of or in connection with, the provision or proposed provision, of educational services in grant-maintained schools or proposed grant-maintained schools and (b) for any other purposes; and if he will specify those purposes;

(2) how much loan or grant to Grant-Maintained Schools Ltd. he has approved, or expects to approve.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: When the Education (Grants) (Grant-Maintained Schools Ltd.) Regulations 1989 come into force grant may be paid to Grant-Maintained Schools

Ltd. for the purpose of or in connection with, the provision or proposed provision, of educational services in grant-maintained schools or proposed grant-maintained schools. Grant-Maintained Schools Ltd. has submitted an application for a grant of £25,000 in the current financial year and £150,000 in the next financial year. Grant support is sought to enable it to provide advice on financial, managerial and educational matters, and related training, to schools which have been approved for grant-maintained status. No decision has been made about this application and it will be considered on its merits.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the maximum amount of grant, for any purpose, which could be made payable to Grant-Maintained Schools Ltd.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My Department pays grant to many organisations. We do not set a maximum amount of grant. Similarly, when they come into force my powers to pay grant under the Education (Grants) (Grant-Maintained Schools Ltd.) Regulations 1989 will not lay down any maximum. All applications for grant are considered on their merits.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what financial provision or plans have been made, and in respect of what years, to enable grant to be payable to Grant-Maintained Schools Ltd.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No specific provision has been made, since no decision to pay grant has yet been taken. If the application for the grant of the Grant-Maintained Schools Ltd. is agreed, funds will be found from within provision made for grants to persons other than local educational authorities for or in connection with education services.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the nature of the educational services in respect of which Grant-Maintained Schools Ltd. may be paid a grant under the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have powers under section 100(1)(b) of the Education Act 1944 as amended by section 213(3) of the Education Reform Act to make provision by regulations to pay grant to persons other than local education authorities in respect of expenditure incurred or to be incurred by them for the purposes of, or in connection with, the provision—or proposed provision—of educational services.

Brain Drain

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evidence he has on the alleged academic brain drain.

Mr. Jackson: Recent movements of full-time wholly unversity financed non-clinical academic staff between universities in Great Britain and employment or study abroad have been as follows:

	Inflow	Outflow	Net inflow
1980	276	249	27
1981	183	203	−20
1982	118	214	−96
1983	220	153	67
1984	318	138	180
1985	292	154	138
1986	260	204	56
1987	199	191	8

HEALTH

Mental Illness Hospitals

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the staffed beds in mental illness hospitals and units in England in 1988 were unoccupied; and what information he has on the average mental illness hospital bed occupancy rates recommended by the Royal College of Psychiatrists.

Mr. Freeman: At the end of 1986, the latest year for which occupancy figures are currently available, about 15 per cent. of the available beds in National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units in England were unoccupied. The Department is aware of the Royal College's observations on bed occupancy rates but considers that with the wide variation in service requirements, it would not be appropriate to set general targets for occupancy rates.

Grading

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list for each regional health authority the number of mental handicap nurses from each of the old grades who have been assimilated to each of the new grades.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally.

Dioxins

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement concerning the levels of dioxin traces that he considers both acceptable and safe in sanitary products, tissue, and food products, including packaging.

Mr. Freeman: Research has shown that levels present in these products are extremely low and are likely to present a negligible risk to health. However, the Department's committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment has been asked to advise on the possible health effects from dioxins.

Huddersfield Royal Infirmary

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the waiting list figures for Huddersfield Royal infirmary for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Since the introduction of the Korner information system in April 1987, we no longer collect waiting statistics centrally for individual hospitals. It would not be practical to collect the more detailed Korner information centrally below district level.

Therefore, of the last five years, figures for 1987 and 1988 cannot be provided centrally; for these my hon. Friend may wish to write to the general manager of Huddersfield district health authority.

The figures for the earlier years to which my hon. Friend refers are:

Year	Numbers waiting
1984	2,924
1985	2,963
1986	2,277

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his timetable for altering the composition of health authorities, as proposed in "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As soon as possible after the necessary legislation has received Royal Assent.

Cyclotron

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his reply of 19 January, Official Report, column 302, there are to be other costs incurred by his Department associated with the cyclotron at St. Thomas' hospital.

Mr. Freeman: In addition to the £6 million grant we are making to the Cyclotron trust, we shall meet up to 60 per cent. of the direct running costs of the cyclotron insofar as they are not met from other sources.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply 19 January, Official Report, column 302, what research documentation and other sources of information were used by his Department before he approved the grant of £6 million to the Cyclotron trust to reach the understanding that neutron therapy that the Cyclotron can provide, can give relief for the effects of certain cancers.

Mr. Freeman: We gave careful consideration to the case presented by the Cyclotron trust, and to a wide range of published material, of which the following are illustrative examples:

Catterall, M.: The treatment of malignant salivary gland tumours with fast neutrons. International Journal of Radiation Oncology, Biology, Physics, 7 (1981), 1737-1738;

Caterall, M., Blake, P. R. and Rampling, R. P.: Fast neutron treatment as an alternative to radical surgery for malignant tumours of the facial area. British Medical Journal, 289 (1984), 1653-55;

Cohen, L., Hendrickson F., Kurup, P. D., et al; Clinical evaluation of neutron therapy: current results and prospects 1983. Cancer, 55 (1985), 10-17;

Medical Research Council neutron therapy working group: A comprehensive review of the Hammersmith (1971-75) and Edinburgh (1977-82) neutron therapy trials of certain cancers of the oral cavity, oropharynx, largnx and hypoharynx. Britis Journal of Radiology,59; 701 (1986), 429-440.

Elderly People

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he has any plans to extend community care facilities for the elderly;

(2) if he has any plans to ensure that there are a sufficient number of day centres for the elderly to meet current and future need;

(3) if he has any plans to introduce a charter of rights defining the services and standards of care to which elderly people should be entitled.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The provision of services to elderly people, as to other groups, including daycare is a matter for the statutory authorities locally. They are responsible for deciding the level and extent of services in the light of local needs and the overall level of resources available.

Although centrally we issue guidance to authorities on the discharge of these functions I do not think that it would be helpful if we prescribed in detail the services and standards of care to be provided.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to ensure that a greater amount of health services resources are directed to the health care of the elderly.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities are responsible for planning levels of expenditure and services which take into account both local needs and Ministers' aims and objectives, including those for services for elderly people. The Department issues guidance, and must approve plans submitted by regional and special health authorities, but essentially these plans reflect local decisions. Elderly people do, of course, make use of many NHS services, not just those which are dedicated solely to their needs.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to introduce an independent national inspectorate to oversee all forms of health, social and care services for the elderly.

Mr. Freeman: No. We already receive regular advice and assistance from the health advisory service and the social services inspectorate of the Department.

Community Care

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will publish statistics indicating the increase in resources devoted to care in the community in each year since 1983;

(2) if he will make a further statement on the resources available for care in the community, in particular with regard to schizophrenia sufferers and support for their families.

Mr. Freeman: Resources for care in the community are made available from the main programme expenditure of health authorities and local authorities. The way in which HAs and LAs deploy these resources is a matter for them to decide in the light of local needs and circumstances. Within HA budgets a specific allocation of joint finance is identified for community schemes jointly agreed between HAs, LAs, family practitioner committees and voluntary organisations.

Gross current expenditure figures for personal social services and hospital and community health services, for each financial year since 1983, in cash terms are as follows:

	PSS £ million	HCHS £ million
1983-84	2,466	8,882
1984-85	2,638	9,386
1985-86	2,794	9,886
1986-87	3,090	10,623
1987-88	3,477	11,730

Data breaking down expenditure figures by type of spend are available from a number of sources, but because of inconsistencies in definition, these data do not allow us to identify separately expenditure on community care although we are giving consideration as to whether it may be possible to do so in future.

Of the PSS totals given it is estimated that some 70 per cent. is spent on community care (that is on the cost of community services for all client groups except children). Of the HCHS totals it is estimated that some 10 per cent. in 1986-87, was spent on community health services.

A detailed breakdown of health and local authorities' expenditure for 1987-88 is not yet available. In 1986-87 local authorities spent (at then current prices) an estimated £44 million on residential care and day centre facilities for mentally ill people, including sufferers from schizophrenia. Other items within overall personal social services expenditure included elements of community care for mentally ill people which are not readily identifiable. In addition, health service expenditure in the same year included £151 million on out-patient and day-patient facilities for mentally ill people.

The Department of Health makes a direct contribution under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 by grant-aiding the central administrative costs of a range of voluntary organisations, among which the National Schizophrenia Fellowship, the Northern Schizohprenia Fellowship and the North West Fellowship are particularly concerned with the needs of schizophrenia sufferers and their families.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of notified cases of people infected by (a) salmonella and (b) listeria in each year since 1978.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Laboratory reports of cases of salmonellosis submitted to the public health laboratory service for the years 1978 to 1987 are given in the table. The number of cases for 1988 is not yet available.

	Cases of salmonellosis
1978	9,042
1979	10,380
1980	9,502
1981	9,532
1982	11,041
1983	13,250
1984	13,093
1985	11,172
1986	14,177
1987	16,991

The number of cases of human listeriosis reported to the public health laboratory service for these years are as follows:

	Cases of listeriosis
1978	87
1979	70
1980	75
1981	86
1982	77
1983	115
1984	115
1985	149
1986	137
1987	259
1988	291

Reports of cases for 1978 to 1982 were submitted by laboratories only; those for 1983 to 1988 were from laboratories and the public health laboratory service's extended surveillance system.

Foster Parents

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on mandatory training for foster parents.

Mr. Freeman: We believe that preparation and training is necessary for all foster parents. The recently issued handbook of guidance on the Boarding-out of Children (Foster Placement) Regulations 1988 stresses that local authorities and voluntary organisations should provide intitial preparation and training, specialised training as appropriate and continuing training for foster parents.

Brucellosis and Tuberculosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information his Department has concerning the infection of humans with brucellosis or tuberculosis through the consumption of green top milk;

(2) what information his Department has concerning the incidence of brucellosis in humans.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: During the ten year period 1978 to 1987, 244 cases of brucellosis in humans were reported by laboratories in England and Wales to the public health laboratory service communicable disease surveillance centre. A total of 146 of these were presumed to have contracted their infection in the United Kingdom and the number of these indigenous cases over the decade declined from 34 in 1978 to eight in 1987.

Of the 146 presumed indigenous cases of brucellosis referred to, seven were known to have consumed raw milk, and the most recent of these was in 1982.

We have no information available on cases of bovine tuberculosis possibly connected with the consumption of unpasteurised milk.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the proportion of unfilled posts of recruitment grade of professional pharmaceutical posts within the Medicines Control Agency; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the likely effects on the works of the Medicines Control Agency of relaxation of the experience requirement on new recruits to the agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Around half of the recruitment grade of professional pharmaceutical posts are unfilled at present.

Medicines division, which will become the Medicines Control Agency from 1 April 1989, has recently advertised for candidates to fill vacancies in the agency concerned with the assessment of the quality of product licence applications. To widen the field, qualifications in both pharmacy and sciences related to pharmacy have been asked for. This does not mean there will be any relaxation in the standards of ability and experience that successful candidates will be required to possess. After the necessary training has been given, the overall effect of filling the vacancies will be to shorten the time needed by the licensing authority to assess the quality of product licence applications.

Pharmaceutical Products

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average length of delay in the issue of approvals for pharmaceutical products on application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The mean average time to grant product licences for established drug substances for the 12 months ending 31 December 1988, the latest date for which statistics are available, was 15 months. The corresponding time for new active substances was 21 months. These periods include the time taken by applicants to respond to inquiries from Medicines Act section 4 committees of the licensing authority.

Listeria

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in order to reduce the risk of listeria, he will take steps to introduce legislation to ensure that the permitted length of refrigeration of cooked food is limited to the shortest possible time.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 13 February 1989]: The length of time for which cooked products may be kept depends on a number of things such as the type of cooking process, packaging, preservatives etc. It is not possible to lay down one single period of shelf life which would be appropriate for all these products.

Ambulance and Blood Transfusion Services

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria he proposes to lay down for regional health authorities to decide whether (a) blood transfusion and (b) ambulance services should be contracted out to the private sector.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 14 February 1989]: We have no plans to contract out the blood transfusion service. With regard to the ambulance service, we published a scrutiny report on the non-emergency sector of the ambulance service in April 1984 when we said that it was open to district health authorities to buy-in part of the ambulance service from the private sector if that is more cost effective and provided the quality of service was maintained. Many NHS ambulance authorities already use private contractors, the hospital car service and voluntary aid societies to transport appropriate NHS patients. This has been the case for many years and helps to ensure that skilled ambulance crews and specialist vehicles are used for those who need the special care and attention which they can provide.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will make a statement about the future of the blood transfusion service under the proposals in the Government's White Paper on the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 14 February 1989]: The blood transfusion service will continue to be an integral part of the National Health Service. Its organisation at national and supra-regional level will remain essentially as now, save that operational responsibility will rest with the NHS management executive in succession to the NHS management board. Services below this level are mostly organised on a region-wide basis. Regional health authorities will be asked, in line with paragraph 2.8 of the White Paper, to review these services and to ensure that they are in future managed in the most cost-effective manner and consistent with the wider management changes that are being introduced in the National Health Service.

Lead Pollution

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received a report from the Government researchers based at Warren Springs on lead in the air in Cardiff; what significance he places on the latest available figures for Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Freeman [holding answer 16 February 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

ENVIRONMENT

World Climate Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for (a) departmental input and (b) consultancy input to the world climate conference in June 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The principal United Kingdom input to the world climate conference will be through the Meteorological Office although representatives from the Department are also likely to attend. The Department is commissioning scientific work in this area through its air pollution research programme and if relevant the scientists responsible will be encouraged to submit papers.

Football

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives of football supporters clubs; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: I met representatives of the National Federation of Football Supporters Clubs and the Football Supporters Association on 6 December and offered to meet them again to discuss the Football Spectators Bill as it progresses through Parliament.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Football league grounds he expects to visit in an official capacity in the near future.

Mr. Moynihan: I intend to make a number of visits to football grounds over the next few months. Details of these visits will be finalised shortly.

Halon

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy with regard to changing the Montreal protocol to restrict the production of halon 1301 and encourage the use of halon 1211 to combat air pollution.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's policy is set out in paragraph 8.10(iii) of their reply to the first report from the Environment Committee, session 1987-88, HC 270-1 "Air Pollution" published in December 1988 (Cm. 552).

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent he has implemented the Environment Committee's recommendations with regard to chlorofluorocarbons, the ozone layer and the greenhouse effect; and what further measures he intends to take.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's reply to the committee's recommendations was published in December 1988 (Cm. 552).

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of public inquiries held into planning proposals in the last year and their cost.

Mr. Chope: In 1988, 1,799 public inquiries into planning proposals were held. Financial information is not held in a form from which the cost to the Department of holding these inquiries can be extracted.

Planning Law

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce legislation to amend the planning law.

Mr. Chope: Legislation to implement the proposals in the paper on the future of development plans will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Tin Cans

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he gives to domestic consumers who wish to save tin cans for them to be recycled.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Consumers are advised to contact their local authority to ascertain what facilities are available locally. In some areas, tin-plated steel cans are extracted magnetically from waste during its processing; in others, facilities are provided for the public to deposit cans.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many recycling banks there are for tin cans in England and Wales; and what comparable information he has for other European countries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am informed that Save-a-Can operates 189 skips in England and Wales which receive tin-plated steel and aluminium cans. No directly comparable information for other European countries is available as market conditions vary considerably but the greater use of incineration for domestic waste disposal in some countries permits the magnetic extraction of steel from the waste stream.

Bottle Banks

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources are available to achieve the target of one bottle bank per 10,000 people by 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: DOE circular 13/88 drew attention to the fact that recycling helps reduce waste disposal costs and invited all waste disposal authorities to follow the example of those which gave a rebate to collection authorities who arrange for recycling. It is for collection authorities to provide facilities to enable people to separate glass from their other waste. The glass manufacturing industry has agreed to accept all the glass that is collected.

A consultation paper published on 24 January (Official Report 25 January col. 504) proposed that collection authorities would become directly responsible for arranging for the disposal of their waste; it would thus be possible for them to seek savings directly by encouraging recycling.

Drought

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contingency plans he is making for the supply of water in the event of there being in the current year a drought situation similar to 1976; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Responsibility for taking measures to maintain essential water supplies in the event of drought rests with the water undertakers. However, we are keeping a close watch on the situation by arrangements with the water industry associations. Total rainfall over England and Wales during the last three months amounted to only half the long-term average and it has been the driest such period for over 80 years, particularly in southern areas. Reservoir and groundwater levels are generally at satisfactory levels except in parts of the south-east. Much depends upon the weather during the next two months, but overall there is no cause for concern yet.

Recycling

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he makes available to people who wish to learn more about recycling facilities available to them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Those who wish to learn more about recycling activities are invited to contact Waste Watch at the National Council for Voluntary Organisations. Waste Watch, which is supported by a grant from the Department, is developing a national list of post-consumer recycling activities and is able to answer specific inquiries about their locality.

Water

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now invite water authorities in England and Wales to provide him with a forecast of the adequacy of water supplies in their areas for the coming nine months, together with an indication of their plans to limit abstraction from any rivers into which there have, within the past two years, been discharges of effluent which have consistently breached discharge consent standards.

Mr. Howard: We do not consider it necessary to take the action suggested. Suitable arrangements to monitor the effects of low winter rainfall have been agreed with the water industry associations.

Pensioners

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what attempts are being made to ensure that pensioners' groups have a forum in local councils.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for each local authority to decide in what way they wish to consult pensioners.

Elderly (Housing)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to increase the amount of sheltered housing and specialised units available for the elderly.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 14 December at column 618.

Political Restrictions

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he will use to appoint a person to consider applications for exemption from the proposed political restrictions on local government employees.

Mr. Gummer: The person to be appointed to adjudicate on applications for exemption will need to have a sound knowledge of local government, and to be able to apply an independent judgment to the questions which will arise.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has reviewed the implications of the proposed restrictions on the political activity of local government officers with regard to the European Court of Human Rights judgments.

Mr. Gummer: Yes.

Council Committees

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the proposed new rules on party balance on council committees will be drawn up in order to ensure the effective working arrangements of councils are guaranteed.

Mr. Gummer: The proposed new rules on party balance on local authority committees are set out in clauses 13 to 15 of, and schedule 1 to, the Local Government and Housing Bills. In so far as regulations are required to implement these provisions, they will be drafted after consultation with representatives of local government.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he intends to proceed with the establishment of housing action trusts under part III of the Housing Act 1988; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the consultancy work on housing action trusts was put out to tender; whether the consultants were asked to report by a certain date; and when he expects the reports to be published;

(3) what consultants' fees were paid for the studies of the proposed housing action trust estates; and if he will provide a breakdown by estate.

Mr. Trippier: I wrote to the hon. Member on 17 October 1988 about the consultancy studies, which we commissioned following competitive tendering, to advise on the proposed housing action trust areas. The latest position on the reports is set out in the answer I gave on 15 February to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) at column 280.

Housing

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the London residuary body to recover monies from Thamesmead town which can be distributed to London boroughs as capital receipts to be used for the purposes of housing.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend directed the LRB on 17 July 1987 to dispose of Thamesmead on payment of a capital sum and supplementary sums in respect of receipts from sales of dwellings by Thamesmead town up to 31 March 1999. The Local Government Reorganisation (Capital Money) (Greater London) Order, 1988 (SI No. 359) provides for the distribution of capital receipts received by the LRB to the London rating authorities.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations about the London borough of Redbridge's proposals to dispose of a portion of its housing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has received no such representations.

Tenants' Choice

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what publicity his Department will be producing on part IV of the Housing Act 1988; and what sums of money have been set aside for this.

Mr. Trippier: The Housing Corporation is already providing advice, information and assistance to council tenants and prospective new landlords about "Tenants' Choice". The Government have currently set aside approximately £700,000 to inform tenants of their rights and opportunities under the scheme. The precise form that this information will take is under consideration.

Rents

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to use the powers in part VI of the Local Government and Housing Bill to assume different rent levels for individual local authorities.

Mr. Trippier: The calculation of entitlement to housing subsidy under the 1985 Housing Act already provides for different rent levels to be assumed for individual local authorities. My right hon. Friend intends that this feature should be carried forward into the system proposed in part VI of the Local Government and Housing Bill.

Political Advisers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the paid political advisers in his private office, their salaries and the procedure for their appointment.

Mr. Ridley: Mrs. K. C. Ramsey is my special (political) adviser and Mr. P. R. J. Rock is special (political) adviser to the Minister for Local Government and the Minister for Water and Planning.

It is not our practice to reveal the salaries of individual advisers as they are individually negotiated in relation to previous outside earnings and are therefore confidential.

Special advisers are appointed personally by the Minister or Ministers they advise. Appointments are approved by the Prime Minister and an appropriate salary is negotiated between the adviser and the employing department with the approval of the Treasury.

County Hall

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much each London borough will gain from the disposal of County hall.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This will not be known until after completion.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the nature of the pecuniary interest held by Mr. Michael Roberts, a member of the London residuary body, in the contract for the sale of County hall; when he was informed of this interest; and what involvement Mr. Roberts had in the London residuary body's discussion and decision making on the contract for the sale of County hall.

Mr. Trippier: Mr. Michael Roberts, on his appointment as a member of the board of the London residuary body, was and has continued to be a partner in the firm of Deloitte, Haskins and Sells. That firm are auditors and advisers on VAT to the County hall development group, the purchasers of County hall. Mr. Roberts declared to the board that the effect in financial terms of his indirect pecuniary interest was very small indeed. The board resolved that he could take part in the consideration and discussion of relevant matters but not so as to permit him to vote on any question with respect to it. My Department became aware of Mr. Robert's interest last December.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the London residuary body has maintained separate board accommodation in Orange street over the past three years; and what has been the cost in each year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The continuing location and costs to the London residuary body (LRB) of its accommodation at St. Vincent house, Orange street are a matter for the LRB.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to make additional appointments to the London residuary body; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend will be considering the need to make additional appointments to the London residuary body in the light of its new responsibilities under the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the salaries, allowances and expenses paid to each member of the London residuary body in the current financial year; when the salaries were last increased; and when is the next review.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The current salaries of the chairman and board members of the LRB are as follows:

	£ per annum[1]
Chairman (full-time appointment):
Sir Godfrey Taylor	57,080
Members (part-time appointments):
Mr. Alan Blakemore, CBE Mr. Jack Esling Mr. Jack Wolking CBE	13,792
Mr. Wallace Mackenzie, OBE	17,240
Mr. Michael Roberts	20,688
Cllr. Sir Peter Bowness, CBE	6,896

[1] From 1 October 1988.

Remuneration is subject to abatement, if applicable, in respect of public sector pension received.

The expenses and allowances paid to the chairman and board members is a matter for the residuary body.

Information on the total expenses paid to the chairman and board members during 1987-88 is contained in the residuary body's annual report and accounts for that financial year, which were laid before Parliament on 31 October 1988.

The next review of salaries is expected to take place in the context of the 1989 review of remuneration of members of public bodies.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he proposes to make to the London residuary body when its prime duties and responsibilities will be the winding up of Inner London education authority matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Education and Science will be considering this.

EC Directives

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all environmental directives from the European Commission since 1973 not entered fully into force in the United Kingdom, the dates of the directives and the reasons they have not been implemented.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is believed that the United Kingdom has implemented all European Community environmental directives, save those where the date of entry into force has not yet been reached. Detailed questions about the precise limits of required implementation of individual directives are regularly discussed with the EC Commission and other interested bodies.

Metropolitan Authorities

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the metropolitan authorities that have been abolished, (b) the non-departmental public bodies set up to take over the functions of the metropolitan authorities and (c) the number of people directly employed by each of these bodies.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The authorities which were abolished as a consequence of the Local Government Act 1985 were the metropolitan county councils of Greater Manchester, Merseyside, South Yorkshire, Tyne and Wear, West Midlands and West Yorkshire.

The non-departmental public bodies established to take over those functions of the abolished authorities which were not directly transferred at abolition to successor authorities were:

Greater Manchester Residuary Body
Merseyside Residuary Body
South Yorkshire Residuary Body
Tyne and Wear Residuary Body
West Midlands Residuary Body
West Yorkshire Residuary Body
Greater Manchester Museum of Science and Industry
National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside

Details of the number of staff directly employed by each of the residuary bodies is provided in their annual reports and accounts for 1987-88, copies of which were laid before Parliament on 31 October 1988. The number of staff employed by the Greater Manchester museum of science and industry, and the National museums and galleries on Merseyside is detailed in the publication "Public Bodies 1988", copies of which are held in the Library.

Sewage Works

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to relax sewage works consent standards and to advertise such relaxations.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 15 February 1989]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Water announced on 7 December 1988 at column 199, that applications for temporary variations in discharge consent conditions will be considered for those sewage works where capital improvements are programmed for completion by March 1992.

Section 36 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 provides that an application need not be advertised where the discharges in question have no appreciable effect on receiving waters.

Decisions on whether to advertise applications for consent variations will be taken on a case-by-case basis.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest progress in negotiations towards the treaty to govern international trade in hazardous industrial waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 15 February 1989]: Detailed provisions of the proposed global convention are under active consideration in the UNEP negotiations. There is still much to be agreed but I hope the convention will be ready for signature next month.

Environmental Health Officers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the present numbers of environmental health officers to provide a sufficient level of inspection of water cooling systems with respect to the presence of legionella.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 February 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

The staffing of environmental health departments is a matter for local authorities who take into account their statutory responsibilities for the enforcement of the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974.

Water Privatisation

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) of 14 February, whether the European Commissioner included in his statement on 7 February a view on the Government's proposal to reverse or prevent mergers in the water industry after privatisation which reduce the number of water companies in independent ownership.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 16 February 1989]: The statement said that the Commission had found nothing in the Government's water privatisation proposals that would raise problems in the competition field.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the recruitment statistics for each month of employment training, specifying by region and for Great Britain as a whole, the number of (a) employment training starters, (b) employment training leavers, (c) trainees on community programme wages and (d) the cumulative total of trainees who are on benefit plus training allowances.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested for (a) (b) and (c) is given in the following tables. The number of employment training leavers is not available by region. The information for (d) is provided as the number in training each month and not as a cumulative total.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give up-to-date statistics showing how many unemployed people have been referred to employment training agents since the start of the scheme; how many have had action plans completed; and how many have started training and how many have not, giving the results for each month by region and for Great Britain as a whole.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is set out in the table.

Notes:

1. The September figures include some referrals made in the two weeks prior to the official launch date.
2. The figures for referrals to training agents are provided by the employment service. However, the regional boundaries are not always co-terminus with those of the training agency.
3. Some of those people for whom an action plan was not agreed, may have been referred to alternative opportunities.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training places are contracted for each employment office area; and of those places how many are from the new job training scheme and how many from the community programme.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The following table gives the number of contracted employment training places by Training Agency area. Information on how many of those places moved forward from the new job training scheme, the community programme or are new places, is not available.

Accident Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) fatal and (b) serious injury accidents have occurred in each of the last five years amongst (i) the largest 20 manufacturing companies and (ii) the largest 10 construction companies.

Mr. Nicholls: [holding answer 16 February 1989]: The Health and Safety Executive's records of fatal and major injuries relate to individual premises or sites. The information could be supplied in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will implement section 131 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to do so.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to update the rules under which industrial tribunals operate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The current Employment Bill proposes extending my right hon. Friend's powers to make regulations as to industrial tribunal procedure. They will be implemented once the Bill has obtained Royal Assent.

YTS

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that YTS courses contain sufficient recognised skill training content to be seen by employers as a step towards apprenticeships or equivalent recognised qualifications: and what is his estimate of the proportion of YTS places that currently fall into this category.

Mr. Cope: Every YTS training programme must offer trainees the opportunity of achieving a vocational qualification, or of gaining credit towards one. Increasing numbers of vocational qualifications have been made a specific requirement in YTS. These are approved by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and reflect broad standards of occupational competence defined by industry and commerce. Already such qualifications are available for 75 per cent. of YTS programmes. Managing agents are required to introduce those specified qualifications within a defined timescale.

Employment Discrimination (Conventions)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those international conventions on discrimination in employment on grounds of political beliefs which Her Majesty's Government (a) have and (b) have not ratified; whether he plans to give further effect to any provisions of those listed under (b); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The relevant international instruments are:

the International Labour Organisation (ILO) conventions Nos. 111 (Discrimination: Employment and Occupation), 122 (Employment Policy) and 158 (Termination of Employment); the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, article 6; the Universal Declaration on Human Rights, article 23; the European Social Charter, article 1 and the European Convention on Human Rights.

The United Kingdom has ratified or accepted these instruments with the exception of ILO conventions Nos. 111 and 158. The Government have no plans to ratify ILO convention No. 111, for reasons already explained to the hon. Member on 10 February at column 720. Regarding convention No. 158, the Government believe that existing United Kingdom legislation, in conjunction with statutory codes of practice, gives employees sufficient protection against unfair dismissal and to be consulted on proposed redundancies, and the Government have no plans for ratification.

Young People (Work Restrictions)

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs he estimates will be created (a) in shops and (b) as a whole, by the removal of restrictions on hours of work of young people under 18 years of age.

Mr. Cope: No such estimates can be made.

Working Hours

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research he has commissioned on the effect of long hours, shift work, or night work on (a) adults and (b) young workers under the age of 18 years; and if he will give details of the research projects.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has not directly commissioned such research but the Health and Safety Executive has been reviewing the scientific literature on this subject and finds that it supports the conclusions of Professor Harrington in his review "Shift Work and Health", published by HSE in 1978.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish all papers examining the inclusion of the poll tax in the retail price index;

(2) if he will publish a calculation for the retail price index with poll tax payments replacing rates;

(3) what is his policy on including the poll tax in the retail price index;

(4) when he expects the report of the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked the Retail Prices Index advisory committee to consider the effect of the abolition of domestic rates on the construction of the index. The report is expected shortly and an announcement will be made in due course.

Incomes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate for the most recent available date of the proportion of households in Wales and Scotland and in each of the standard regions of England, respectively, whose annual household income is below £4,000 per annum.

Mr. Lee: The information for 1986, which is the latest year available, as set out as follows, comes from the family expenditure survey and relates to average gross household income in Wales, Scotland and the standard regions of England. The results are subject to sampling errors and should be treated with caution; percentages are subject to errors of about plus or minus 3 per cent.

Households with gross income below £4,000 per annum (1986)

Region	Number in sample	Percentage of all households
Total number of households	1,363	19·3

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

ESA Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated cost to his Department of the administration of the ESA scheme for each year of its operation; and whether these costs have been additional or absorbed within his Department's Estimate.

Mr. Ryder: In the two years which ESAs have operated we estimate the full administrative cost of the scheme to have been £0·44 million in 1987-88 and £0·71 million in 1988-89. These figures are included in my Departments published estimates.

Aluminium

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library copies of the (a) guidance offered to the infant and dietetic food industry about levels of aluminium in infant and dietetic foods, and (b) regulations which exist with regard to infant and dietetic foods; and who is responsible for the enforcement of such guidance and regulations.

Mr. Ryder: The recently completed survey on aluminium levels in infant formulae is to be discussed with the trade shortly. The results will be published as soon as possible.

There are currently no specific regulations on infant and diatetic foods. However, these foodstuffs, like all others, are covered by the general provisions of the Food Act 1984 and the food labelling regulations which include specific provisions controlling claims for infant and diatetic foods. The proposed EC directive on foods for particular nutritional uses would provide for specific directives which may control the description, composition, labelling, advertising and presentation of cerain categories of foods, including infant and diatetic foods. Enforcement of food law is carried out by those local authorities which are food and drugs authorities.

Crops

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the potential of crops or parts of crops for use in industries such as paper making, paint, plastics and phamaceuticals; and what investment his Department is making to enable the full potential to be realised.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department has considered the potential of crops for use in industry in reports issued on the disposal and utilisation of straw (1984) and on agraforestry (1986). A review of alternative crops and livestock enterprises for United Kingdom agriculture was carried out by the centre of agricultural strategy, under MAFF sponsorship in 1985. A further review, by the MAFF novel crops and livestock enterprises review group, is due to be released this year. Where appropriate, these reviews include recommendations on industrial potential.

My Department is supporting work on the development of dual purpose flax for fibre and for oil production, and is involved in the European Community's ECLAIR programme on agricultural production for industrial use.

It should also be noted that under the common agricultural policy arrangements already exist to encourage the industrial use of starch derived from cereals and potatoes and of sugar. Starch used in the manufacture of specified industrial products, including paper, plastics and pharmaceuticals, and certain sugar products used in the chemical industry, are eligible for a production aid.

Potato Marketing

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received on the consultation paper, "Potato Market Policy" in Great Britain after 30 June 1990; when he expects to make a decision on future policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Ninety three representations on the consultation document were received by the deadline of 31 December 1988. I am now considering these. I am not yet able to say when this process will be considered, but a decision will not be unduly delayed.

Soil Erosion

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent studies the soil survey and land research centre has carried out of soil erosion in England and Wales; and if he will publish such reports.

Mr. Ryder: The soil survey and land research centre is currently writing up the results of a five year collaborative study undertaken with my Department's agricultural and development and advisory service. This study, which covered 17 sites in lowland England and Wales, is to be continued in 1989-90 in a modified form. Selected high risk areas will be the subject of a detailed analysis of the factors influencing erosion. Other work for 1989-90 includes the production of maps of areas at risk in England and Wales. Future plans include consideration of erosion in upland areas using existing and fresh aerial photographic data. Reports of these studies will be published in the relevant scientific journals.

Whales

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what protests have been made to the Japanese Government concerning the slaughter of minke whales in the Antarctic.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Recently we have expressed our serious concerns to the Japanese Government about their current feasibility programme of whaling for scientific purposes both directly and through the relevant forum of the International Whaling Commission (IWC). In December the United Kingdom commissioner of the IWC expressed our views to the chairman of the IWC in a letter circulated to all member Governments including Japan. This made clear our firm view that Japan should not implement her plans until the major concerns about these identified by the scientific committee to the IWC had been addressed and resolved. The letter was passed personally by the United Kingdom commissioner to the Japanese embassy in London with a clear explanation of the United Kingdom Government's concern.

Further, once the period for consideration of the scientific committee's views by commissioners was complete and learning that the programme was to go ahead I authorised our commission to propose a resolution for consideration by the IWC. This was seconded by Australia and New Zealand. If adopted it will put on a formal and international basis the call to Japan to cease its current programme.

Our embassy in Tokyo is also in close touch with the Japanese Government. Also, similar concerns expressed by the Falkland Islands Executive Council have been passed to the Japanese embassy.

BST

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the number of people drinking milk supplied from cows injected with BST.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The data necessary for such an estimate are not available.

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received advice from the Veterinary Products Committee that BST should be given a product licence.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Veterinary Products Committee (VPC) provides advice in confidence at any stage of an application, if appropriate. The VPC will not make a final recommendation on an application until it has received all pertinent information, including data generated in field trials.

Eggs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many eggs have been destroyed at his Department's expense since 1 December 1988.

Mr. Ryder: About 63 million. Eggs were also destroyed by the Agriculture Departments of Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. In the United Kingdom as a whole about 90 million eggs were destroyed. The destruction of eggs has now ceased.

BSE

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list those EEC countries in which BSE is a notifiable disease;

(2) what information he has concerning the incidence of BSE in EEC countries;

(3) what information he has concerning the incidence of BSE in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Donald Thompson: BSE is a notifiable disease in Great Britain and Northern Ireland. A single case has recently been confirmed in the Republic of Ireland, where the Minister of Agriculture and Food has announced that the disease will shortly become notifiable. BSE has not yet been reported in any other member state.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department takes to ensure the testing of culled dairy cows for BSE infection.

Mr. Donald Thompson: All cattle suspected of having BSE are compulsorily slaughtered and the brains subjected to laboratory examination to confirm whether or not the animals were affected by the disease.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that beef imports from the Republic of Ireland do not come from BSE infected cattle.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Following the recent confirmation of the first case of BSE in the Republic of Ireland, legislation is shortly to be introduced which will require the compulsory slaughter and destruction of all animals affected by the disease. Although there is no evidence of a risk to humans similar measures were introduced in Great Britain last August, purely as a precautionary measure.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what evidence his Department has that the current level of compensation for BSE infected cattle is encouraging owners to submit suspect cattle to slaughter prior to the result of clinical signs of BSE;

(2) if he will introduce a new compensation scheme in respect of BSE based on payments of 100 per cent. of the value of infected animals.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I believe that 50 per cent. compensation is reasonable, given that the animals are suffering from a terminal illness but are valued as if free from BSE. There is no evidence to suggest that owners are deliberately evading their legal obligation to notify the Ministry of cattle suspected of having BSE. Indeed, the number of cases being reported suggests a high level of co-operation from farmers in tackling this new disease problem.

Scrapie

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department takes to ensure the early diagnosis of sheep suffering from scrapie.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There is no diagnostic testing in live animals. Advice is available to farmers from ADAS on the control of the disease and flock owners may also participate in a monitoring scheme under the Ministry's sheep and goat health scheme.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the incidence of scrapie in sheep during 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Scrapie is not a disease which is notifiable under the Animal Health Act 1981. However, the provisional figures for last year show that veterinary investigation centres diagnosed about 190 cases from samples of sheep brain tissue submitted for laboratory analysis.

Animal Health Standards

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the proposal of the Directorate-General for Agriculture of the European Commission that rabies, Aujeszky's disease and certain other diseases of animals, poultry and fish should be treated as third category diseases subject only to discretionary controls and voluntary eradication procedures; and what steps will be taken to protect animal health standards in relation to rabies and other diseases following the implementation of the single European Market in 1992.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 February 1989]: The European Commission has yet to make proposals to the Council of Ministers in relation to the Community animal health regime to apply after the completion of the internal market. They have, however, outlined a suggested strategy which would categorise diseases, and the rules which would apply, in relation to the relative seriousness of individual diseases and the prospects of eradicating or controling them.

In its strategy, the Commission envisage that category 1 would include serious diseases such as classical swine fever and foot and mouth disease with controls on movements from affected zones or areas; category 2 would control movements on the basis of herd freedom from diseases such as tuberculosis and brucellosis; category 3 would include Aujeszky's disease and rabies and these would be subject to voluntary health scheme controls.

The Commission has recently said that rabies would now be considered as a special category and we await further proposals. As far as Aujeszky's disease is concerned, we have said that the proposed voluntary health scheme approach (category3) would not provide the necessary safeguards against disease spread and would therefore put Great Britain's hard won achievements at risk. Other member states share our concerns.

In considering the animal health aspects of the single European market, the Government will continue to press for effective veterinary controls, including quarantine where justified, as long as these remain necessary to prevent the introduction of disease.

Farmers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the proportions of British farmers that fell into the annual income categories (a) below £8,000, (b) £8,000 to £10,000, (c) £10,000 to £12,000, (d) £12,000 to £14,000 and (e) above £14,000 for each of the last five years, at 1983 prices.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 15 February 1989]: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. The farm business survey does, however, allow estimates to be made of the proportional breakdown of farm businesses according to broad income band at nominal prices. Information relating to the five latest years for which data are available, is set out in the table.

Percentage distribution of farm businesses according to net farm income in Great Britain: 1983-84 to 1987-88
All types of farm

Years ending on average in February	Level of net farm income (£)
	Less than 0	0 to less than 10,000	10,000 to less than 20,000	20,000 and over
1983-84	20	46	18	16
1984-85	18	41	20	20
1985-86	28	41	17	12
1986-87	23	39	21	18
1987-88	20	38	20	20

Notes:

(a) Figures are derived from data collected in Farm Business Surveys by universities and agricultural colleges in Great Britain.

(b) Net farm income represents the return to the farmer and spouse for their manual and managerial labour and on tenant type capital in livestock, crops, machinery etc. but excluding land and buildings. It is calculated before the deduction of interest on any farming loans. All farms are treated as rented in the derivation of net farm income and an imputed rental value for owner-occupied land is charged as an expense in the accounts.

Family Farms

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of family farms in the United Kingdom during 1960, 1970 and 1980, together with his estimate for 1990 and 2000.

Mr. Ryder: [holding answer 16 February 1989]: Statistics on family farms are not collected as there is no statistical definition of such farms. However, the following information from a special European Community sample survey of farm work is relevant. Forecasts for future members are not made.

United Kingdom	1985
Farm holdings[1]	258·5 thousand
Farmed by a person[2]	240·5 thousand
As a percentage of holdings	93 per cent.
Estimated proportion of holdings with one or more family workers in addition to the farmer	62 per cent.

[1] These are main holdings in the annual census of agriculture. They exclude minor holdings below a defined threshold of size.

[2] ie Not farmed by a firm or institution.

DEFENCE

Anti-missile Defence System

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has received a report on the practicability of a strategic anti-missile defence system for the United Kingdom; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 26 January 1989 at column 754.

Queen's Flight

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when renewals of aircraft in the Queen's Flight will be required; if he will make it his policy to purchase such aircraft from British manufacturers; and if he will make a statment.

Mr. Sainsbury: Replacement dates for aircraft in the Queen's Flight are kept under review. Our procurement policy for such aircraft, as for other equipment, is aimed at meeting the requirement in the most cost-effective way.

Service Children's Education Authorities

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what efforts are being made to ensure that teachers working for the service children's education authorities and who have separate contracts employing them to undertake lunchtime supervision are paid (a) the back-pay due to them and (b) regularly in the future on a monthly basis.

Mr. Neubert: Arrangements for the payment of senior lunch-time supervisory duties in respect of United Kingdom-based teachers employed with the service children's education authorities have been established effective from 1 December 1988. Payment will be paid on a termly basis. We expect to resolve the question of back-pay for hours worked prior to this date shortly.

Lance Missile Replacement

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if has received any notification from the United States Defence Department on the replacement of Lance missiles with the multiple-launch rocket system missile.

Mr. Archie Hamiliton: The United States announced its choice of the M270 multiple-launch rocket system (mlrs) as a launcher for a successor missile to Lance to NATO's high level group on 5 December, publicly confirming this decision the following day. A nuclear missile for the launcher has not yet been selected. The choice of launcher and missile are national United States decisions; NATO has not yet agreed to the deployment of a Lance successor.

Armilla Patrol

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about the role of the Armilla patrol.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Armilla patrol is continuing to provide reassurance to British merchant shipping in the Gulf by independently patrolling international waters and remaining immediately available to go to their protection if necessary. Royal Navy ships will remain in the Gulf for as long as we judge that there remains a job to be done upholding freedom of navigation there.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Kampuchea

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he has done to bring about substantial reconstruction and development aid for Kampuchea.

Mr. Eggar: We do not give Government-to-Government aid to the regime in Phnom Penh. We have, however, contributed £100,000 to the FAO appeal for Cambodia and £250,000 to the UNICEF programme there. In addition, my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has announced an increase of £500,000 to support projects, including humanitarian projects in Cambodia, proposed by British voluntary agencies for assistance under the joint funding scheme.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) of 13 February, Official Report, column 14, how the study referred to defines exceptional demographic change as a result of AIDS; and what evidence he has of such exceptional demographic change in sub-Saharan African countries.

Mr. Eggar: Data are insufficient at this stage to assess accurately the long-term impact of AIDS on populations. The objective of this research project is to obtain information on how communities have coped in the past with disease and disasters which have had an impact on their populations. This will assist policy-makers establish appropriate ways of fostering and supporting community self-help methods of alleviating the potential impact of AIDS.

Amazonia (Dams)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the proposals of Electronorte for financing projects such as the Tucurui and Balbina dams in Amazonia, the United Kingdom executive director to the World Bank was instructed to support any electric power sector loan requested by Brazil.

Mr. Eggar: The Tucurui and Balbina dams were constructed without World Bank loans. The World Bank has stated that it has financed no hydroelectric power schemes in Amazonia and has no plans to do so. It is not the policy of Her Majesty's Government to disclose instructions given to our executive directors in international financial institutions.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Brazil about World Bank finance, and British private finance for Plan 2010, with regard to the proposals to build dams in Amazonia.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Zambia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what promises of aid were made by the United Kingdom to Zambia at the meeting of the World Bank consultative group held on 25 and 26 June 1988.

Mr. Eggar: The World Bank consultative group on Zambia did not meet in 1988 although an informal meeting among donors to Zambia was held under World Bank auspices in June. No promises of aid were sought or given.

Brazil (Dam Projects)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's embassy in Brasilia has given in support of British consultants seeking the consultancy for dams on the Xingu river near Altamira, and for the Grande Carajas project; and what steps the Overseas Development Administrations permanent delegation to the World Bank is taking to monitor the progress of these projects.

Mr. Eggar: No approaches have been made by United Kingdom consultants to the British Embassy in Brasilia on either of these projects. I understand that original proposals for hydroelectric power development on the Xingu river near Altamira are being reconsidered. Work on the Carajas iron ore mine project, which was financed in part by a World Bank loan, was completed some time ago.

Amazonia (Indebtedness)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the development committee of the World Bank has taken to deal with the chronic indebtedness of countries in the Amazonian basin to private banks and international institutions and with what results; and what further action is proposed.

Mr. Eggar: The development committee has repeatedly endorsed the current case-by-case growth-oriented strategy. This approach has encouraged a number of Latin American countries to embark on the economic reforms required to overcome their debt difficulties and led creditor Governments to provide financial assistance in support of adjustment programmes. The committee has called on debtors and banks further to broaden the choice of market-based options for use in voluntarily negotiated arrangements.

Brazil

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make available the World Bank's staff appraisal reports for all projects covered by the electric power sector loan requested by Brazil.

Mr. Eggar: The proposed second power sector loan will not be for specific projects. The World Bank specifies that appraisal reports may be used by recipients only in the performance of their official duties; and their contents may not otherwise be disclosed without World Bank authorisation.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the latest arrangements that the United Kingdom director has agreed to in relation to the indebtedness of Brazil and its ability to meet its obligations to the International Monetary Fund, the International Bank of Reconstruction and Development and the International Development Association.

Mr. Eggar: The executive board of the IMF agreed a loan of $1·4 billion in July 1988; the executive board of the IBRD agreed a loan of $300 million for the agriculture sector in June 1988 (Brazil is not eligible for IDA lending). These loans are designed to support the economic reforms necessary if Brazil is to overcome its debt difficulties. Debt owed to the IMF and World Bank is only a small part of Brazil's debt.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the human rights record of the Brazilian Government in relation to the Amerindians of Amazonia; and how Her Majesty's Government propose to vote in the light of such considerations on the World Bank structural adjustment loan for Brazil.

Mr. Eggar: There has been widespread concern in the United Kingdom at the constitutional provision for Amerindian landholding. We watch this closely and are in touch with interested groups. The Brazilian authorities are well aware of our concern at reports of Amerindian deaths at the hands of gold panners and settlers. Our embassy in Brasilia is monitoring developments closely. We will take account of environmental and social considerations in forming a view of the proposed second power sector loan.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what were the projects for which loans were sought from the World Bank by Brazil during each of the last five years; what was the outcome; and how Her Majesty's Government instructed their representative on the World Bank executive board to vote;

(2) what was the value of the loans made by the World Bank for each of the last five years to Brazil.

Mr. Eggar: Loans brought to the World Bank's executive board and approved in the past five years are listed in the table. It is not the policy of Her Majesty's Government to disclose instructions to our executive director.

World Bank loans to Brazil: 1984-88

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken through the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to ensure that adequate funds are available to Brazil to undertake structural adjustment programmes.

Mr. Eggar: The World Bank has lent substantial sums to support the process of structural adjustment in Brazil, and the International Monetary Fund has lent in support of stabilisation policies. An effective response by international financial institutions is dependent on the Brazilian Government promoting an adequate macro economic framework that will re-establish stability and permit the resumption of sustainable growth.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss with the World Bank methods of ensuring that Brazil repays its international debt on reasonable terms.

Mr. Eggar: As a member of the World Bank we participate in regular discussion of the World Bank's lending programme in Brazil. These discussions cover Brazil's ability to meet its obligations to the World Bank. Paris Club creditors agreed last July to reschedule Brazil's official debt. Official creditors are agreed that Brazil's commercial debts are a matter for Brazil to negotiate with the banks themselves. We and the World Bank have both welcomed the elements of debt reduction in the innovative menu agreement reached between Brazil and the banks last year.

Amazonia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to ensure that the World Bank does not make loans for projects which, if carried out, would be likely to cause environmental or rain forest damage in Amazonia.

Mr. Eggar: Environmental concerns now receive considerable attention in the World Bank, due in part to the efforts of the United Kingdom and several other members. The reorganisation of the bank in 1987 strengthened its capacity to ensure that environmental costs and benefits are systematically addressed in project appraisal.

Brazil and Colombia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what environmental and cultural policy guidelines govern project lending by the World Bank and the intergovernmental group on Brazil and Colombia.

Mr. Eggar: The World Bank incorporates environmental and sociological considerations as an overall part of project design. Projects and programmes are required to meet economic and social objectives based on the most efficient and sustainable use of environmental resources. Projects which might affect indigenous groups or wildlands must incorporate components to mitigate any possible adverse effects. The bank can offer help to strengthen the local implementing agencies if this is necessary to ensure the successful design and implementation of the components.

I have no information about any intergovernmental group on Brazil and Colomnbia.

Rain Forests, Amazonia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken as a result of the acceptance of the FAO tropical forest action plan; what was the response from the president of the World Bank to representations stressing Her Majesty's Government's belief in the importance of environmental factors in respect of other aid programmes; and what discussions he has had with fellow donors on means of donor co-ordination in protecting rain forests in Amazonia.

Mr. Eggar: Under the tropical forestry action plan more than 50 developing countries have asked for help over the formulation and co-ordination of their national forestry policies. The plan has already led to seven forestry sector reviews being completed, and another 36 are under way.

The World Bank shares our view that the environmental aspects of development must be properly taken into account.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has not had any formal discussions with other donors specifically about protecting the Amazon rain forests; but when I visited Brazil last year I made clear to the Brazilian President the concern felt in Britain about the environmental effects of deforestation in the Amazon and that season's disastrous fires. As signatories of the international tropical timber agreement, the United Kingdom and Brazil and other donor and developing countries are pledged to encourage the development of international policies aimed at the sustainable use and conservation of tropical forests.

Amazonian Indians (Gathering)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he sent to the invitation to attend the gathering of Amazonian Indians at Altamira on 21 to 25 February.

Mr. Eggar: My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development told the organisers that he was unable to accept the invitation because of earlier commitments but that he hoped to receive a report on the outcome of the meeting.

Kayapo Tribe Homelands, Brazil

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has of the destruction of Kayapo tribe homelands in Brazil; and what representations he has received on that subject.

Mr. Eggar: My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development met Chief Paulinho Paiakan of the Kayapo last November to hear his concerns for the future of his people if proposed hydroelectric power developments on the Xingu river, which would inundate a large area of rain forest, were to proceed. We understand that the Brazilian authorities are re-appraising the sites originally proposed.

St. Helena Ferry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the completion for the St. Helena ferry now that the Hall Russell company has gone into receivership; and what opportunities now exist for other British shipbuilding companies to be involved.

Mr. Eggar: It remains Her Majesty's Government's intention to complete the construction of the ship in the Hall Russell shipyard at Aberdeen if possible.

UNESCO

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make an up-to-date statement giving a breakdown, by project, of the resources reallocated to development projects resulting from the savings arising from the United Kingdom's withdrawal from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation.

Mr. Eggar: In the financial year 1987-88 the money saved by our withdrawal from UNESCO was re-allocated and spent as follows:

Re-allocation of UNESCO savings final expenditure 1987-88

	£ Committed	£ Spent
Overseas Development Administration (ODA) technical co-operation training programme	1,872,000	1,772,848
English language training courses	799,000	600,300
ODA shared scholarship schemes	320,000	320,000
Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) scholarships and awards scheme	640,000	640,000
ODA cultural projects	100,000	100,000
Public expenditure survey transfer to FCO for cultural projects	100,000	100,000
Chinese student scholarships in the United Kingdom	950,000	950,000
Distance learning project in Commonwealth countries	100,000	100,000
Nassau fellowships	500,000	650,131
Commonwealth media development fund	150,000	150,000
Royal Society	112,000	112,000
Research in arid Commonwealth Africa	300,000	300,000
Inter-governmental Oceanographic Commission	96,000	80,864
Man and the Biosphere/International Hydrological Programme/ International Association of Hydrological Sciences	200,000	200,000
Dissemination of results of research	200,000	200,000

	£ Committed	£ Spent
Total	6,439,000	6,276,143

Allocations for this financial year are similar.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary for State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was done with the £1,710,448 committed but not spent as referred to in his reply to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West on 29 July 1988, Official Report, columns 624-26, on savings arising from the United Kingdom's withdrawal from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation.

Mr. Eggar: Underspending in the year in question permitted expenditure on other aid programmes. The cash limit for the year was virtually fully spent. It is not practical to identify the specific use to which these rather than other savings were put.

WALES

Housebuilding

14. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new local authority dwellings were completed in Wales in 1988; and if he will give comparable figures for 1974 and 1979.

Mr. Grist: Provisional returns for 1988 show that 789 local authority dwellings were completed. Comparable figures for 1974 and 1979 are 3,046 and 3,010 dwellings respectively.

Labour Statistics

15. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 12 January 1989 the number of unemployed claimants in the Newport district, Gwent and Wales were 6,173, 18,614 and 116,245 respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis that enables a valid comparison to be made. I am sure the hon. Gentleman will welcome the continuing downward trend in seasonally adjusted unemployment in Wales, which fell by 25,800 in the last 12 months and by 62,000 in the last 34 months.

16. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people there were in employment in (a) Wales, (b) Mid Glamorgan and (c) the travel-to-work area in which Bridgend is situated in June 1979 and the latest month for which figures are available; and how many of these jobs were part-time.

Mr. Peter Walker: There were 1,157,000 people in employment or self-employed in Wales in June 1979. The comparable figure for June 1988 was 1,029,000. Of these, 165,000 and 190,000 respectively were female part-time employees. Figures for male part-time employees, and for Mid Glamorgan and the Bridgend travel-to-work area, are not available for the dates requested.

Housing for Wales

17. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairman of Housing for Wales; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend and I have met the chairman of Housing for Wales on a number of occasions recently to discuss matters relevant to the setting up of the new body.

Place Names Advisory Committee

18. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the place names advisory committee last met; and what it discussed.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The work of the place names advisory committee is carried out entirely by correspondence.

Pupil Costs

19. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent per pupil in primary schools in Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure for 1978-79, at constant prices.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The figures were £909 (in 1986-87), and £747 (in 1978-79). This represents a real terms increase of 21·7 per cent.

Hospital Waiting Lists

20. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to achieve his targets for maximum time on a waiting list for (a) operations and (b) out-patient appointments.

Mr. Grist: Health Authorities are not yet in a position to predict when all lists will meet the targets. However, officials of the Welsh Office will be keeping a close watch on the position through six-monthly reports from authorities.

"Working for Patients"

21. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he had received in response to the Welsh Office booklet entitled "Working for Patients", as to the continuance of local government representation on the reconstructed health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Grist: None.

Road Communications

22. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to improve road communications in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Outline plans will be announced in the Welsh Office commentary on the public expenditure White Paper and the detail will be provided in the forthcoming edition of "Roads in Wales."

Council of Ministers

23. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many meetings of the Council of Ministers a Welsh Office Minister has attended since 1979; and which Councils they were.

Mr. Peter Walker: It has not been the normal practice of Welsh Office Ministers to attend meetings of the European Council of Ministers since or before 1979. They have, of course, frequently met members of the European Commission since 1979 to discuss issues of importance to Wales.

Planning Appeals

24. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of appeals against refusals of planning permission by local authorities have been upheld by his Department during the last five years.

Mr. Peter Walker: Thirty-seven per cent.

Homelessness

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of people listed as homeless in each of the Welsh districts, at the latest count.

Mr. Grist: The number of persons in households accepted as homeless during the third quarter of 1988 (July-September) are shown in the table:

Number of persons in households accepted as homeless, July-September 1988

British Steel (Job Losses)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many meetings he personally has had with British Steel about the impending job losses in Wales and the closure of Velindre.

Mr. Peter Walker: I maintain regular contact with the company about matters of mutual interest, and I have discussed the rationalisation of tinplate production in south Wales with British Steel management. I discussed this specific closure and the prospects for dealing with job losses two weeks ago.

Welsh Water

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give in full the terms of his communication to the European Commission seeking clearance for limiting to 15 per cent. the maximum single holding in Welsh Water after privatisation and the complete text of the European Community's reply.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by the Commission Vice President, Sir Leon Brittan, on 7 February in which he said:

"The proposed 15 per cent. limit on a single share holding presents no difficulty under community law so long as its application is non-discriminatory".

Higher Education

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives of the institutions of higher education in Wales; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend and I met the vice-chancellor of the university of Wales and the director of the polytechnic of Wales, together with a number of industrialists, on 25 July 1988. The topic of discussion was the interaction between higher education and industry.

Historic Monuments

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make a statement on the future relationship between Cadw—Welsh Historic Monuments —and the Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments for Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The relationship between the Royal Commission (RCAHM(W) and Cadw—Welsh historic monuments—has been looked at in the context of a policy review of the activities and functions of the commission and the equivalent bodies for Scotland and England. This review is being conducted jointly with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. We shall be announcing conclusions in due course.

Meanwhile, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has decided that certain issues of principle can be settled now in advance of the completion of the policy review. There is the question whether RCAHM(W) should be merged with Cadw and the suggestion in a consultancy report by Peat Marwick McLintock that consideration should be given to the transfer of some functions from Cadw to the Welsh Commission. Peats recommended that the Royal Commission should be retained as a separate body responsible for maintaining the national archive of heritage information and manage the NMR. My right hon. Friend and I are persuaded by this analysis and take the view that the Royal Commission should continue as a separate body.

Peats emphasised that the arguments for and against the transfer of functions were finely balanced. We have decided that the Royal Commission should in future be recognised as the lead national body for oversight of the system of local sites and monuments records. In exercising this responsibility the commission would need to ensure proper liaison with Cadw regarding local decision-making and conservation of the built heritage of Wales generally.

On the matter of transferring listing and scheduling to the Commission, we have concluded that as its purpose is to identify buildings and monuments which should be given special consideration in the planning and development control process, listing and scheduling should be linked to considerations of conservation, rather than record, and for that reason my right hon. Friend and I have concluded that it is more appropriate for Cadw to continue to provide advice to us on these issues.

We do believe, however, that the Royal Commission should be more formally involved in this function and that a mechanism should be established that encourages Royal Commission staff to advise Cadw on sites they may visit. We have asked Cadw to consider this and recommend as appropriate. Provided the RCAHM(W)'s input to advice on listing and scheduling is formulated in such a way we take the view that the duty placed on the Royal Commission in 1908 to make its own direct recommendations to Government on buildings "worthy of preservation" should be regarded as overtaken by the development of the statutory framework of listing and scheduling and dropped from its responsibilities.

Peats comment that as experts on heritage information, the Royal Commission is best placed to judge priorities and to deal with the rescue archaeology grant system. However, we consider that there are good policy and practical arguments for the same organisation handling all aspects of archaelogical casework—scheduled monument consent, negotiations with developers and rescue archaeology if that proves necessary. Accordingly, we feel that it is best for Cadw to continue to deal with rescue archaeology.

Whatever the future dispositions of functions may be, there will always be areas where both Cadw's and the Royal Commission's expertise and concerns need to be taken into account by each other.

With these issues of principle resolved, we consider that there is now a very satisfactory basis for a supportive and constructive future relationship between the Royal Commission and Cadw. I have written to the commission's chairman to inform him of our conclusions.

EMPLOYMENT

Training (Expenditure)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much has been spent on training programmes in (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector, in each EEC country and the United States of America, Japan and Sweden (i) including the cost of training allowances, and (ii) excluding the cost of training allowances, in real terms at 1989 prices and as a percentage of annual gross domestic product for each year that information is available since 1980.

Mr. Cope: I regret that the information requested is not available.

YTS

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the average weekly take-home pay for YTS leavers in the economic region of Yorkshire and Humberside; and what steps he is currently taking to review this.

Mr. Cope: Estimates from the youth cohort study for England and Wales, covering those young people who reached minimum school leaving age in the academic year 1984-85 and were surveyed in spring 1988, show that the average weekly take-home pay for those in a job in the economic region of Yorkshire and Humberside who said that they had had YTS experience within the previous three years was £71·27.

The Government are continuing to fund the youth cohort study to establish information on this and other areas in the education, training and employment of young people.

Departmental Leaflets

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the titles and code numbers of the 10 most issued leaflets published by his Department and indicate which of these leaflets has been issued in translation and in which languages.

Mr. Cope: The 10 most issued leaflets are as follows:

Title	Code Number
1. Responsibilities of Claimants While Unemployed	UBL 18
2. Jobclub leaflet	JCL 12
3. Availability For Work (Tear-off slip)	UBL 671
4. Put you In The Picture	REST L1
5. Enterprise Allowance Scheme	EAS 102
6. Get into Training	TA M66
7. Better Off In Work	BOI W1
8. Employment Training Action Plan	M64
9. How Unemployment Benefit Entitlement Is Decided	UBL 48
10. Be Your Own Boss	EAS 113

Publication 3 "Availability For Work" (UBL 671) is presently being prepared in the following 14 languages:
Arabic; Bengali; Cantonese; French; German; Gujarati; Hindi; Italian; Punjabi; Somali; Spanish; Urdu; Vietnamese; Welsh.

Leaflet 4 "Put You In The Picture" (REST L1) is produced in the following 12 languages:
Arabic; Bengali; Cantonese; Gujarati; Hindi; Italian; Punjabi; Somali; Spanish; Urdu; Vietnamese; Welsh.

Leaflets 5 "Enterprise Allowance Scheme" (EAS 102) and 10 "Be Your Own Boss" (EAS 113) are at present only available in English, but editions are being prepared in the following eight other languages:
Gujarati; Hindi; Bengali; Urdu; Punjabi; Cantonese; Vietnamese; Welsh.

Leaflet 8 "Employment Training Action Plan" (M64) is produced in the following seven ethnic minority languages:
Urdu; Punjabi; Chinese; Bengali; Gujarati; Hindi; Vietnamese.

Retail Prices

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in which years since 1959 the annual rate of increase in retail prices was lower than in the previous year.

Mr. Lee: In 1963, 1966, 1967, 1972, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1986.

Press Notices

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many press notices his Department, including the Manpower Services Commission and Training Agency, issued in each 12-month period since 1979.

Mr. Cope: The information is as follows:

	Numbers
1979	425
1980	385
1981	415
1982	398
1983	464
1984	416

1987	402
1988	386

Note: These figures do not include press notices issued on behalf of the Department of Employment, the Manpower Services Commission and the Training Agency through the Central Office of Information regional offices.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the numbers of people unemployed for more than five years in each of the travel-to-work areas.

Mr. Lee: The following information is also in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants who had been unemployed for more than five years in October 1988, the latest available date, for each of the travel-to-work areas in Great Britain.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the latest estimate of the numbers, location and cost of the jobs created by the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. Cope: A review in 1988 of the loan guarantee scheme undertaken by National Economic and Research Associates for the Department of Employment found that in a sample of 106 firms that had used the scheme, 310 full-time additional jobs were created in the first year. The net Exchequer cost of the LGS per person leaving the unemployment count is estimated at £450. Statistics are not collected by my Department on the actual numbers or locations of jobs created by the loan guarantee scheme.

Shipyard Workers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he proposes to take following the number of successful appeals by former shipyard workers who had been denied unemployment benefit for 13 weeks, in respect of workers in other trades who have been made redundant under similar circumstances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The decision of the independent adjudicating authorities in relation to a redundant shipyard worker relates specifically to that particular worker and his terms of redundancy. Where applicable, British Shipbuilders workers whose circumstances were identical can have their benefit position reviewed. The decision has no direct effect on workers made redundant in other industries.

Cigarettes (Cost of Living Index)

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what machinery exists to register appropriate changes to the weighting of components in the cost of living index to relate to changes in normal household consumption of different items; and if he will list those as applied to cigarettes in the last 30 years;

(2) what weighting is given at the present time and 10, 20 and 30 years ago or at suitable convenient dates to cigarettes in the retail prices index or its predecessor.

Mr. Lee: The weighting of the retail prices index is updated at the beginning of each year. Since 1962 the weight for each component has been revised in the light of the latest available information on household consumption from the family expenditure survey. In the case of a few items (including cigarettes) allowance is made for under-recording of expenditure in the survey, by supplementing its results with more comprehensive information from the consumers' expenditure estimates in the national accounts. As they are introduced the new weights are published in Employment Gazette. Those for cigaretes have been as follows:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Footwear

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the United Kingdom market share of footwear produced in Taiwan and Korea for each of the last five years; and what are the corresponding figures for the home share of the same market.

Mr. Atkins: The figures are as follows:

United Kingdom Footwear Market (SIC 4510)
Percentage (by value) taken by United Kingdom production for the home market and by imports from South Korea and Taiwan

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
United Kingdom	55·5	52·8	54·5	54·6	52·9
South Korea	2·2	2·1	1·9	2·0	3·0
Taiwan	3·2	3·8	3·3	2·9	4·0

Furniture (Foam Filling)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many representations he has received from retailers requesting Government compensation for loss of retail value of suites made from foam to the new standards but without the white label and therefore needing to be sold by 1 March.

Mr. Forth: I have received a small number of suggestions from furniture retailers that compensation should be paid to them for furniture which they are legally unable to sell after 28 February 1989 because it does not meet the requirements of the new regulations. Only one or two of these representations have referred to the temporary problem of furniture lacking the prescribed label but otherwise conforming. Any retailers placed in that position should make arrangements with the furniture manufacturer to obtain new permanent labels for furniture which otherwise meets the requirements of the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulation 1988.

Sanitary Towels and Tampons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to encourage the sanitary tampon industry to standardise absorbency ratings.

Mr. Forth: No. This is primarily a matter for the industry to consider in the light of consumer demands. If a request were made to the British Standards Institution for work to be undertaken in this field, it would be considered on its merits.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will take steps to impose restrictions on the use of chemicals in the manufacture of sanitary tampons;

(2) what information he has as to what chemical traces remain in sanitary towels after manufacture.

Mr. Forth: I have asked the industry what chemicals they add to tampons and sanitary towels and what checks they run on residues of pesticides and biocides in the cotton used. When I have this information our toxicologists will advise the Government on whether they pose any hazard.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will introduce legislation requiring manufacturers to label clearly packets with a comprehensive list of the contents of sanitary towels;

(2) if he will introduce stricter controls on the manufacture of sanitary goods in respect of safety standards and sterile procedures for the manufacture of these goods.

Mr. Forth: No. I am satisfied that the existing voluntary prior approval scheme for tampons adequately ensures the safety of the public.

Disposable Nappies

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to end the use of synthetic chemicals in the manufacture of disposable nappies which are similar to those used in sanitary tampons removed from sale in the United States of America because of their association with toxic shock syndrome in consumers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: No. Toxic shock syndrome is not a problem with babies. However, I will ask the industry which chemicals are added to disposable nappies and this information will be considered by our toxicologists.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department will actively promote the use of chlorine-free paper pulp in the manufacture of disposable nappies.

Mr. Forth: The brand leaders have gone over to unbleached disposable nappies and the remainder of the industry is likely to follow. It is a good example of the market responding to consumer preferences.

Paper Industry (Bleaches)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consult the paper industry on ways to encourage the use of different methods of bleaching.

Mr. Forth: I understand that no pulp mills in the United Kingdom bleach with chlorine. However I have asked the paper industry to provide unbleached alternatives to bleached paper products so that the consumer can have a choice.

Wood Pulp

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the annual United Kingdom requirement for wood pulp.

Mr. Forth: Precise figures are not available, but it is estimated that in 1987 the United Kingdom requirements of wood pulp amounted to between 2 and 2½ million tonnes.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will make public the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the supply of beer to the United Kingdom; and if it is his intention to make a statement on the report at the same time.

Mr. Maude: The report will be published as soon as possible. It is customary for my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to announce his response to a Monopolies and Mergers Commission report at the time of its publication.

Consumer Credit

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, having regard to the proposals published in December 1988 for review of the consumer credit licensing system, he will consider extending the proposed powers to require information not only to those holding or seeking licences but also to anyone suspected on reasonable grounds of carrying out unlicensed consumer credit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Department's proposals for the consumer credit licensing system were contained in a consultation letter dated 26 October 1988. The proposed power for the Director General of Fair Trading to seek information would not be confined only to those seeking or holding licences, but would also extend to those suspected on reasonable grounds of carrying on any form of consumer credit business.

Broadcasting

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in the light of his proposals outlined in the White Paper on "Broadcasting in the 90s", he has plans to seek to amend or repeal the Marine Offences (Broadcasting) Act 1967.

Mr. Atkins: Yes, we are considering strengthening the enforcement powers in the Act. The exciting proposals outlined in the White Paper reinforce the need for vigorous action against all unlicensed broadcasting.

Sanitary Towels

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to encourage sanitary towel manufacturers to substitute biodegradeable plastics for non-biodegradeable plastics in their products.

Mr. Forth: I have no plans to do so, but I understand that the industry has approached higher educational establishments with a view to their carrying out relevant investigations.

Paper Mills (Pollution)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of the Paper Industries Research Association to discuss question of organochlorine pollution from pulp and paper mills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have not held any meeting with the Paper Industries Research Association but my Department is in touch with the association about its studies in this field.

Newspapers (Takeovers)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in how many of the 15 daily newspapers circulating in Northern Ireland the Monopolies and Mergers Commission inserted a notice inviting representations in connection with the proposed takeover of Belfast Newsletter and Sunday News by Thomson Regional Newspapers; what was the size of the notice in the press; and what is the normal size for similar notices published by the commission.

Mr. Maude: This is a matter for the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, which will be writing to the right hon. Member.

Unigate (Dairy Crest Purchase)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will refer the purchase of part of Unigate's liquid milk business by Dairy Crest to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 17 February 1989]: The proposed acquisition is currently being considered by the Director General of Fair Trading who has a duty to advise the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on whether the proposed acquisition should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the proposed merger in anticipation of the director general's advice.

Textiles and Clothing (Silberston Report)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will extend the time for receiving the report from Professor Aubrey Silberston into the effects on the United Kingdom economy of international trading policies on textiles and clothing, to allow Professor Silberston more time to consult widely and to ensure any recommendations he makes are widely supported by United Kingdom textile and clothing interests; if he will consider inviting Professor Silberston to circulate his main conclusions before his study is finalised and presented to Ministers; and if he will arrange for Professor Silberston's report to be published when available.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 17 February 1989]: The commissioning of the study was announced last September and the textile and clothing, and other interests have been given ample opportunity to let Professor Silberston know their views before the report is completed. Professor Silberston expects the report to be published in the summer.

Takeover Bids

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many deputations of hon. Members he saw on takeover bids in 1988.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 15 February 1989]: Department of Trade and Industry Ministers saw approximately 10 such deputations in 1988.

ENERGY

Market Research

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what market research he proposes to undertake in 1989 as part of his Department's programme to promote awareness of, and research in, technology transfer and renewable energy sources.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Market research is an esential part of our renewable energy research and development programme, both in determining the most appropriate methods of informing and influencing the future market for renewable sources of energy, and in gauging the success or otherwise of publications that flow from the programme.

Technology transfer plans are being developed for each technology classed as economically attractive. During 1989 a number of market research studies are planned in order to obtain a better understanding of technical transfer processes and the characteristics of those market sectors relevant to the renewable technologies.

Over the next weeks the first of these studies will be undertaken to provide detailed information on the size and scope of the market that needs to be addressed. The results will be used to develop and target the most appropriate promotion material in support of our technology transfer activities. Recently completed market research has shown that our publications have been well received by the general public, industry and professionals.

Electricity Supply Industry

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the rate of return achieved by the electricity supply industry for the last year for which figures are available; and what were the figures in 1979-80.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In 1987-88, the last year for which figures are available, the industry's current cost rate of return on average net assets was 2·42 per cent. In 1979-80 the figure was 0·5 per cent.

Electricity Distribution Boards (Chairmen)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he will next be meeting the chairmen of distribution boards; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the area board chairmen regularly to discuss various matters of mutual interest.

British Coal (Engineering Workshops)

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the British Coal national engineering workshops closed since July 1985; together with the number of redundancies declared with each workshop closure; and the number of redundancies declared in other British Coal national engineering workshops since July 1985.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the management of the British Coal Corporation and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

BNFL

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made with the implementation of the integrated dry route kiln (IDR) process to convert uranium hexafluoride into ceramic uranium dioxide at British Nuclear Fuels plc, Springfields.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for British Nuclear Fuel plc and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

BNFL (Uranium Imports)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to refuse permission for British Nuclear Fuels plc to import natural uranium from South Africa for processing and re-export.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 23 May 1988 at column 8.

Pressurised Water Reactor (Construction)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will initiate a study of the net energy consumed and resultant carbon dioxide gas release from fossil fuels used in the manufacturing and construction of a 1300 Mw pressurised water reactor and in the manufacture, storage and processing of its fuel and resultant radioactive wastes; and if he will publish a table giving comparable information for a coal-fired station of the same net output and fitted with flue gas desulphurisation technology.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I do not consider that such a study would be worthwhile.

Efficiency (Appliances)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will initiate a departmental study to compare the volume decrease in carbon dioxide emissions that could be achieved by introducing a policy of energy efficient light bulbs and energy efficient labelling on refrigerators, water heaters and stoves, instead of building the equivalent number of power plant to provide the electricity saved.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. It has always been the policy of the energy efficiency office that energy-efficient lamps should be used wherever they are cost effective and appropriate.

Under a recently concluded agreement by the European Committee of Manufacturers of Electrical Domestic Equipment, appliance manufacturers present the energy consumption data of major energy using domestic appliances in the same form. This allows comparisons by consumers no matter where in western Europe the appliances come from or are sold.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Properties (Rate Arrears)

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 585, he will list the rate arrears for individual diplomatic properties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Rates owed by missions on properties accepted by Her Majesty's Government as being in diplomatic use, and on which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are taking action with the missions concerned are:

Burkina	6,456·00
France	107,479·02
Costa Rica	758·37
Iran	12,123·47
Iraq	134,504·91
Laos	2,215·91
Libya	24,486·95
Morocco	15,100·40
Nigeria	9,242·97
Paraguay	2,680·11
Somalia	10,677·84
Sudan	113,800·00
Uganda	33,051·17

In certain cases the arrears are in dispute and under discussion between the mission and rating of Government property department.

The following amounts are owed by diplomatic missions on properties which are not accepted as being in diplomatic use on which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is similarly taking action:

Grenada	2,452·83
Iran	32,595·52
Libya	371,026·32
Nigeria	33,942·01

Rail Ozhegov

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russians about the fate of Rail Ozhegov.

Mr. Waldegrave: Rail Ozhegov has only very recently come to our attention. We shall underline our concern about this case to the Soviet authorities at the next suitable opportunity, and shall continue to press the Russians until there is a satisfactory outcome.

Kampuchea

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to seek to produce an international peace settlement on Kampuchea.

Mr. Eggar: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) on 8 February at columns 739-40.

South Africa (Hunger Strikes)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made known to the South African Government the concern felt by British people for the hunger strikers in Johannesburg and Port Elizabeth.

Mrs. Chalker: We have repeatedly urged the South African authorities to release all those detained without trial, and have done so again recently. We welcome the reported commitment by the South African Minister for Law and Order to give urgent personal consideration to the case of each detainee.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any specific representations to his counterparts in France and the People's Republic of China in regard to their respective joining the nuclear non-proliferation treaty before the 1990 NPT review conference.

Mr. Waldegrave: British Ministers and officials take advantage of every appropriate opportunity to urge all non-members (including France and China) of the non-proliferation treaty to accede, and will continue to do so. We attach great importance to securing the widest possible adherence to this treaty.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the date and venue for the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, scheduled for 1990, have yet been set.

Mr. Waldegrave: The 1990 non-proliferation treaty review conference will probably take place in Geneva during August/September 1990. The precise dates and venue will be discussed and confirmed with other state parties at the first preparatory committee in New York on 1-5 May.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations on Iraqi use of chemical weapons the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) made to the Government of Iraq on his recent visit to that country; and what was the response.

Mr. Waldegrave: I repeated to the Iraqi Foreign Minister the serious view we take of use of chemical weapons and the great importance we continue to attach to repeated Iraqi undertakings not to make further use of these weapons.

Brussels Treaty

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he now expects Her Majesty's Government to ratify the protocol dated 14 November in respect of the accession of Portugal and Spain to the modified Brussels treaty of 23 October 1954.

Mr. Waldegrave: The protocol of accession of Portugal and Spain to the modified Brussels treaty was laid before the House on 2 February. It should therefore be possible to ratify the protocol early in March.

Mr. Moshe Arens

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on his meeting on 15 February with Mr. Moshe Arens, Foreign Minister of Israel.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend had an important and constructive first exchange of views on Arab/Israel and other international issues. He looks forward to continuing the dialogue.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Care

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, what evidence he has of any increased take-up in community care grants as against loans within the social fund budget.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Take up of community care grants has increased steadily over recent months. Expenditure in December 1988 was £3·9 million representing 79 per cent. of monthly profiled expenditure. Provisional figures for January 1989 show that expenditure increased to £5·1 million, representing 109 per cent. of monthly profiled expenditure. Expenditure on loans was £12·1 million in December 1988, representing 103 per cent. of monthly profiled expenditure and was provisionally £10·6 million in January 1989 representing 96 per cent. of monthly profiled expenditure.

Social Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance he proposes to give to local offices about exceeding nominal monthly social fund allocations in the light of the shortfall in spending evident in the early months of the financial year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Guidance relating to the management of social fund budgets is contained in paragraphs 2000-2056 of the social fund manual. The Department has recently written to local office managers drawing attention to this guidance and reminding them that the objective is for payments to approach the year's budget as closely as possible while maintaining so far as possible consistency of priority-setting and decision-making throughout the year.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will revise the guidance contained in the social fund manual in order to ensure that the full budget is spent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to amend the existing guidance in the social fund manual regarding management of the social fund budget. The guidance relating to community care grants is currently being revised.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants in the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of South Yorkshire were paid under the cold weather payments scheme for the last five years; how much benefit has been paid in each of the last five years; and how many claims were refused.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows the information requested for the Department's local offices covering the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of South Yorkshire. These offices made no cold weather payments in the winter of 1987-88.

	1984-85[1]		1985-86			1986-87[2]		1988-89
	Number of claimants paid	Amount paid £	Number of claimants paid	Amount paid £	Number of £5 payments made	Amount paid £	Number of claims refused	Number of claims refused
Doncaster East	218	2,034·53	477	11,783·44	4,286	21,430	1,075	6
Doncaster West	509	5,776·11	764	28,808·23	4,321	21,605	2,068	—
Wath-on-Dearne	180	1,890·61	567	14,368·33	3,207	16,035	868	—
Total	907	9,701·25	1,808	54,960·00	11,814	59,070	4,011	6

[1] Details of the number of claims refused in 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1987-88 are not available.
[2] It is estimated that 6,000 claimants received payments.

Medical Boards

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance is available to members of medical boards concerning cases involving their own patients or former patients.

Mr. Scott: Guidance on the subject is contained in handbooks which are issued to all adjudicating medical practitioners (medical boarding doctors). These are, "The Handbook for Industrial Injuries Medical Boards" and "The Severe Disablement Allowance Handbook for Adjudicating Medical Authorities."

Supported Lodgings

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on entitlement to (a) income support and (b) housing benefit for those in supported lodgings from April 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From April 1989, those people in supported lodgings who are entitled to income support will receive housing benefit to help with their accommodation costs and normal income support (including any appropriate premiums) for other expenses. This change will mean that many supported lodgers will be better off, after meeting charges for accommodation and the provision of care, than under existing benefit arrangements. As at present, those in supported lodgings who are not eligible for income support, but who have low incomes, will be able to claim housing benefit to help with their accommodation costs.

Mr. N. Scott

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the reason for the delay in the case of the appeal to the social security appeal tribunal of Mr. N. Scott of 17 Elysdon drive, Gorton, Manchester, between the receipt of the adjudication officer's submission from his Department on 3 November 1988 and the receipt of Mr. Scott's letter of appeal by the tribunal on June 1988; and if he will take steps to ensure that no such delays occur in the future.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 30 January 1989]: Mr. Scott's appeal was one of a considerable number of similar appeals prompted by a welfare rights take-up campaign. There was a delay in submitting the appeal to the social security appeal tribunal whilst the adjudication officer sought advice from the regional adjudication officer on how to prepare the appeal submission.

The flow of appeal submissions from the Department to the social security appeal tribunal will be affected when numbers dramatically rise as in the case of take-up campaigns. There has, however, been an improvement nationally in the time taken to process appeals. Latest statistics show that the national average time taken from the date of lodgment to the date of submission to the social security appeal tribunal is 18 days.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inflation

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received recent representations from the Confederation of British Industry about inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received representations from the CBI on economic priorities for 1989. His priority remains to bring inflation down, and the Government's policies will achieve this.

Tax Concessions

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the value of tax concessions from his last Budget that have gone to each region.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that regional estimates of the effect of the changes in taxation announced in the 1988 Budget are not available.

Share Ownership

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he has any plans to promote wider share ownership.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend is always looking for ways in which further to promote wider share ownership.

Capital Account

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the statistics produced by his Department give an indication of the current state, and changes in the state, of the capital account of the economy.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement regarding his Department's policy on the collection and publication of statistics showing the state of the capital account of the economy.

Mr. Major: The only statistics relevant to the capital account for which the Treasury is directly responsible are the official reserves. Other data on the capital account of the balance of payments are collected by the CSO and published regularly in "Economic Trends."

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to increase the rate of detection and prosecution of tax avoiders.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue will continue its efforts to improve its effectiveness in counter-avoidance work, but tax avoidance itself is not a criminal offence.

Relocation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Civil Service jobs will be transferred to (a) Nottingham and (b) the Chalfont drive site, Aspley, Nottingham as a result of the Government's recent announcement.

Mr. Brooke: As indicated in my answer on 9 February 1989, at columns 751-2, to my hon. Friend, the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran), the policy is for Departments themselves to review the location of their work. They are well aware of the benefits for regional and urban policy of transferring work to such areas, and will take this into account where appropriate.

Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to relocate staff for which he is responsible to the north-east of England, particularly Teesside.

Mr. Brooke: Departments for which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is responsible have in hand the serious and substantial reviews of relocation opportunities referred to in the answer I gave on 9 February 1989, at columns 751-2, to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran). Areas which are the focus of the Government's regional and urban policies, such as the north-east of England, will be considered where appropriate. Decisions will be announced once the essential processes of assessment, consultation and decision for each review have been completed.

Budget Statement

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about his forthcoming Budget Statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We have received numerous representations from a variety of individuals and organisations.

Privatisation

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the state-owned commercial sector in 1979 has now been transferred to the private sector.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Since 1979, around 45 per cent. of the state-owned sector of industry has been transferred to the private sector.

Manufacturing Productivity

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the annual percentage increase in productivity in (a) the whole economy, and (b) the manufacturing sector in the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Italy, the United States of America, Japan and Sweden, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Major: The information requested is set out:

Output per head (percentage change on year earlier)

	United Kingdom	France	Germany	Italy	USA	Japan	Sweden
(a) Whole economy
1981	2·2	1·8	0·9	0·9	1·2	3·0	−0·1

Period average	5·6	3·0	2·5	3·5	4·0	3·1	3·0

[1] The figures for 1988 are based on the quarterly averages of OECD estimates of total output for the whole year and actual employment for the first three quarters (except for the United Kingdom, for which actual average productivity for the first three quarters is used). These figures for 1988 are compared with the average level of productivity in 1987.

[2] The estimates for 1988 compare the average level of manufacturing productivity in the first three quarters (except for France and the United Kingdom, for which data are available for the first half and the whole year respectively) with the average level in 1987 as a whole.

Trade Exhibitions

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency and Her Majesty's Stationery Office will not be attending the "Great North Meets the Buyer" exhibition on 4 and 5 April.

Mr. Lilley: CCTA and HMSO both decided not to participate in the "Great North Meets the Buyer" exhibition because experience of taking stands at such events has been disappointing, with a very low level of interest from potential suppliers.

Amazonia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how often he and other Ministers in the Treasury have met the executive director of the World Bank appointed by the United Kingdom to discuss the policies or reports of the World Bank in relation to Amazonia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer meets our executive director at the World Bank from time to time, usually at the spring and annual meetings of the bank and the IMF; a wide range of issues are discussed.

Pension Funds

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report details of tax reliefs which apply to the incomes and capital gains accruing to private occupational pension funds.

Mr. Norman Lamont: If a pension scheme meets the conditions laid down for tax approval its investment income and gains are exempt from tax, but any trading profits or other forms of income are taxable.

Hospital Radio Stations

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost per annum to the Treasury of exempting from the scope of value-added tax broadcasting and recording equipment used by hospital radio stations.

Mr. Lilley: I regret this information is not available.

VAT

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had about the effect of the imposition of value added tax on hospital radio equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 17 February 1989]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a number of representations since the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) on 27 October at column 447.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, Official Report, column 548, on value added tax zero rates, if he will list those matters still under discussion.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 16 February 1989]: The principal matter still under discussion with trade representatives is the question whether gas and electricity bills below a certain level should be eligible automatically for zero-rating, in the same way as is proposed for certain small scale deliveries of coal, oil and liquified petroleum gas. Interested trade and professional bodies have also been asked for technical comments on the draft legislation.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the organisations with which he is discussing his proposals for private medical insurance tax relief.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 February 1989]: Inland Revenue officials are holding detailed discussions on the relief with the Association of British Insurers, the British United Provident Association, Private Patients Plan, the Western Provident Association, the Bristol Contributory Welfare Association, the Exeter Hospital Aid Society and the Civil Service Medical Aid Association.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the dates on which his Department is meeting the private medical insurance industry to discuss tax reliefs for private medical insurance.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 February 1989]: A meeting took place on 9 February, and there will be further meetings as and when needed.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he is considering making it possible to gain tax relief for private medical insurance by extending family medical insurance policies to cover elderly patients;

(2) if tax reliefs for nursing home care are to be included under pensioners' medical insurance tax relief proposals in his discussions with the private medical insurance industry;

(3) when he will publish the results of his discussions with the private medical insurance industry on tax reliefs for medical insurance for pensioners.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 February 1989]: The details will be published in the Finance Bill.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the papers on which he is basing his discussions with private medical insurance companies on tax reliefs.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 February 1989]: No.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will invite representations from health councils, health boards and health authorities to join his discussions on private medical insurance tax reliefs.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 February 1989]: If authorities wish to make representations to the Government on this subject I have no doubt that they will do so in the usual way.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research has taken place into cost of private medical insurance tax reliefs.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 February 1989]: Estimates of the cost of tax relief for private medical insurance for the elderly are being derived using information from various sources, including providers of private medical insurance.

Lloyd's

Mr. Adley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from Lloyd's in connection with the effect of recent financial legislation on the conduct of business in the London insurance market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 16 February 1989]: These matters have been raised at various meetings with Lloyd's. I have corresponded with my hon. Friend recently about the effects of legislation on Lloyd's business. I am placing a copy of my letter to my hon. Friend of 15 February 1989 in the House of Commons Library.

Visible Trade Deficit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the non-oil visible trade deficit with (a) the EEC and (b) the rest of the world each year since 1970; and what percentage these represent of total non-oil visible trade in each year.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been asked to reply.

The information is in the table:

Family Incomes

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the net income after housing costs of a married man with children aged 13 and 16 years earning (a) £104 and (b) £105 per week;

(2) what is the net income of a married man with children aged three, eight and 11 years paying average rent and rates as used in the tax/benefit model tables earning (a) £65 per week and (b) £80 per week;

(3) what is the net income after benefits of a married man with children aged four and six years earning (a) £60 per week gross and (b) £140 per week gross;

(4) what is the net income under current tax and benefit structure of a married man with children aged three, eight and 11 years with gross earnings of (i) £65 per week and (ii) £105 per week;

(5) what is the net income under the current tax and benefit structure of a married man with children aged four and six years earning (a) £80 per week and (b) £90 per week.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to table 1 of the tax/benefit model tables for April 1988, copies of which are in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

National Savings Bank

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has recived about the increase in the minimum deposit made by the National Savings Bank; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer and I have received a number of representations. The average cost of each transaction is well over £1 in Post Office agency fees and National Savings bank running costs. It is not sensible to seek deposits so small that they are wholly or largely absorbed by the cost of processing. Deposits under £5 represent only 1 per cent. by value of all ordinary account deposits made in a year.

Earnings

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Prime Minister what are the latest figures available for gross average earnings in (a) Scotland, (b) rural Scotland and (c) Great Britain.

The Prime Minister The information available from the Department of Employment's new earnings survey is given below. As the survey does not provide results for areas within the regions of Scotland, it is not possible to provide estimates for rural Scotland. The regions given below are mainly rural; other Scottish regions have rural areas but also include large urban areas.

Average Gross Weekly Earnings of Full-Time Employees on Adult Rates Whose Pay for the Survey Pay-period Was Not Affected by Absence

April 1988	£ per week
	men	women
Scotland	233·3	152·2
Borders Region	n/a	n/a
Dumfries and Galloway Region	205·3	n/a
Highland Region	224·2	137·3
Island Authorities	n/a	n/a
Great Britain	245·8	164·2

As the survey covers a sample of about 1 per cent. of employees who are members of PAYE schemes for tax purposes, it does not cover, for example, the self-employed or those earning less than the PAYE limit, and cannot provide reliable estimates for every region of Scotland.

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Prime Minister if she will dismiss from the Government the hon. Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg), the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, for his statements relating to the alleged sympathy shown by certain solicitors in Northern Ireland for terrorist organisations.

The Prime Minister No.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister if there have been any changes in the responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Health and of the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food as a result of the establishment of the committee which she will chair, as announced by the Chief Medical Officer, Sir Donald Acheson, on Friday 10 February.

The Prime Minister There has been no change in the respective responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Health and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The plans to which the Chief Medical Officer referred on 10 February, and on which the Secretary of State for Health announced further details on 14 February at column 180, concern the establishment of an expert committee on the microbiological safety of food, under an independent chairman.

Food Safety Group

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Prime Minister if she will take steps to ensure that all those who are invited to join the expert group set up to examine food-related issues have no commercial interests in the food industry.

The Prime Minister: On 14 February at column 180 my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced the setting-up of an expert committee on the microbiological safety of food. The committee's membership and terms of reference and method of working are under consideration and will be announced shortly.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she will require the expert group, set up to examine food-related issues, to make recommendations on the suitability of cook-chill catering within hospitals;

(2) if she will take steps to suspend the further introduction of cook-chill catering in hospitals until the expert group, set up to examine food-related issues, have had the opportunity to examine the incidence of listeria in pre-cooked, refrigerated foods.

The Prime Minister: In 1980 the Department of Health issued guidelines on cook-chill catering in the National Health Service and elsewhere. We remain satisfied that provided these guidelines are followed food produced by this system is safe. The expert committee on microbiological safety of food will, of course, be free to examine any aspect of microbiological food safety.

President Ershad

Mr. Soley: To ask the Prime Minister if she discussed human rights and democracy with President Ershad of Bangladesh; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I had a wide-ranging discussion with President Ershad, covering both bilateral and regional issues.

Israeli Foreign Minister

Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on her meeting on 15 February with Mr. Moshe Arens, Foreign Minister of Israel.

The Prime Minister: I had a very good discussion of Arab/Israel issues with Professor Arens. We agreed that negotiations should start as soon as possible, but will need careful preparation. We also discussed the position of Jews in the Soviet Union.

TRANSPORT

Tyres

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motor vehicles in each of the last three years failed the MOT test because of inadequate tyre tread; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Inadequate tread is one of the tyre defects that can lead to a test failure and is not separately recorded. Tyre failure figures during annual tests for the last three years, based on a 2 per cent. sample return from testing stations are:

	Number
1985	1,249,822
1986	1,525,449
1987	1,862,980

In addition to inadequate tread, the tyre failure statistics include several other reasons for failure. These include lumps, bulges or tears caused by structural deterioration, a tyre with a cut which reaches the ply or cord, a tyre which is fouling on any part of the vehicle and a tyre which is of a different nominal size or structure type from the other which is on the same axle.

British Rail and London Underground (Women Workers)

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many women in total and in proportion to the total work force are currently employed by (i) British Rail and (ii) London Underground.

Mr. Portillo: The Department does not have this information. As it relates to a matter within the management responsibility of the operators may I suggest that the question be addressed to them.

Motorway Safety

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take measures to encourage greater lane discipline in motorway driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last year announced a package of measures to improve motorway safety with particular emphasis on improving driving standards. Since then, we have distributed over 2 million copies of the motorway leaflet containing advice on the correct use of lanes. The Department gave its full support and co-operation to the Association of British Insurers, which recently produced a video "Happens All The Time" aimed at 17 to 24-year-olds and concentrating on motorway driving skills.

We are aware of the frustration and danger associated with poor lane discipline. We work hard to encourage safe and considerate use of motorways through the highway code, the manual "Driving", stuffer leaflets, posters and television filler films. We shall not relax our efforts.

We would welcome national and regional television coverage of motorway driving which could raise awareness of good and bad or dangerous habits.

BR and London Underground (Passenger Numbers)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce restrictions on the number of passengers permitted on board carriages on British Rail and London Underground trains; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No. I am not aware of any evidence that such measures are necessary.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the current rates of vehicle excise duty applicable to each category of vehicle in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is a large number of rates. Full information is contained in leaflet V149, "Rates of Vehicle Excise Duty" available from the House of Commons Library.

Bicester Perimeter Road

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to be completed on the Bicester western and eastern perimeter road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is the responsibility of the Oxfordshire county council.

Banbury Ring Road

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to begin on stages II and III of the Banbury inner ring road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is the responsibility of the Oxfordshire county council.

Disabled People (Transport)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the composition of the Disabled Persons Transport Committee and list the names and disablement links of its membership.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Disabled Persons Transport Committee was set up under the Transport Act 1985 to advise the Sectary of State on matters relating to the needs of disabled people in connection with public passenger transport.

The chairman and members are appointed by the Secretary of State after consultation with relevant bodies. The Act specifies that, so far as is reasonably practicable, at least half of the membership of the committee should consist of people who are disabled.

Current membership is as follows:

Chairman: Sir Peter Baldwin KCB (Chairman, South East Thames Regional Health Authority)
Mrs. Jill Allen-King MBE (Joint Committee on Mobility of Blind and Partially Sighted People)
Keith Brown (Board member, London Regional Transport
W. Buchanan (Adviser on Disability, British Railways Board)
Lewis Carter-Jones (Vice Chairman, Access to the Skies Committee)
Clive Davis (Royal National Institute for the Deaf)
John Dobinson (Transport and Disability Consultant)
James Elder-Woodward (Strathclyde Regional Council)
Mrs. Claudia Flanders (OBE) (Transport and Disability Consultant)
Lady Greengross (Age Concern)
Graham Stevenson (Transport and General Workers Union)
John Hannan MP (All Party Disablement Group)
Joe Hennessy (OBE) (Disabled Drivers Association)
Peter Large (CBE (Joint Committee on Mobility for the Disabled)
Bob Ley (South Wales Transport, retired)
Bert Massie OBE (Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation)
Brian McGinnis (MENCAP)
Trevor Meadows (National Advisory Unit for Community Transport)
Leslie Stephenson (P & O European Ferries)
Dr. Adrian Stokes OBE (Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation)
Robert Taylor MBE (Birmingham International Airport)

Bottesford Bypass

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what traffic accidents have taken place on the A52 bypass around Bottesford, Leicestershire, since it opened recently; whether he will now reconsider his rejection of the traffic management proposals previously made to him by the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton and borough and parish councillors; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There has been only one reported accident on the A52 Bottesford bypass since it opened on 6 February. The police do not consider that it was caused by the junction layout. We have no proposals to alter the junctions. They are appropriate for the conditions and the volumes of traffic. We shall continue to monitor the situation. Motorists are asked to treat a new road with particular respect.

Heavy Lorries

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) fatal and (b) serious accidents in 1987 involved heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1987 there were 776 fatal accidents and 3,509 serious accidents which involved heavy goods vehicles.

Roads (Maintenance)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the totals for maintenance from 1976 to 1987 on (a) motorways, (b) trunk roads, (c) local authority maintained A roads and (d) other roads used as lorry routes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is not available for all these categories. Capital expenditure on renewal of motorways and all-purpose trunk roads in England over the period was as follows:

	£ million
1976-77	29
1977-78	33
1978-79	45
1979-80	60
1980-81	64
1981-82	108
1982-83	144
1983-84	123
1984-85	147
1985-86	157
1986-87	181
1987-88	213

Lorries (Noise Limits)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current maximum permitted noise limit for new lorries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The current limit for the heaviest lorries is 88 dB(A). From 1 October 1989 these vehicles will have to meet a limit of 84 dB(A). Britain took a lead in securing the limits set by European Community Directive 84/424/EEC, which we are implementing from the earliest dates permitted. This will mean that during the 1980s the noise from the heaviest lorries will almost have been halved.

Lorry Action Areas

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many lorry action areas have been designated; and what effect they have had on local situations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. The Department is taking steps to ameliorate lorry nuisance in other ways including building bypasses, research aimed at helping manufacturers build quieter heavy vehicles and the lorry management study.

Lorry Operating Centres

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the effect of the Transport Act 1982 in siting of lorry operating centres.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A review of the effects of the environmental provisions in the Transport Act 1982 concluded that they struck a fair balance between the interests of people affected by operating centres in their neighbourhood and those of the road haulage industry. A copy of the review was deposited in the Library in December 1986.

Weighbridges

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many weighbridges have been set up in the United Kingdom; how many lorries were checked in 1987; how many were overweight; how many of these lorries were over 38 tonnes; and what was the average fine.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department of Transport has so far a network of 63 weighbridges. A total of 126,000 lorries were weighed in 1987-88, by the Department's traffic examiners and local authority trading standards Departments. Of these 28,500 were found to be overloaded, 5,700 of them over 38 tonnes. The average fine imposed by the courts for overloading found by the Department's traffic examiners was £156.

Heavy Lorries (Pollutants)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the figures for poilutants from heavy goods vehicles in 1987; and what steps are being taken to reduce such emissions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimates, in thousands of tonnes, are as follows:

	Thousand/tonnes
Carbon monoxide	46
Hydrocarbons	95
Oxides of nitrogen	399

We shall be implementing the new limits on these pollutants contained in European Community Directive 88/77/EEC at the earliest possible date permitted, which is 1 October 1990.

Heavy Lorries (Licence Fees)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current licence fees for heavy goods vehicles in each weight category; and what are their allocated road track costs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is a large number of rates of vehicle excise duty. Full information is contained in leaflet V149 "Rates of Vehicle Excise Duty". Information on the road track costs of vehicles is published annually in the "Allocation of Road Track Costs Bulletin". Both are available from the House of Commons Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Management

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the report on effectiveness of housing management, which his Department commissioned from the centre for housing research, Glasgow university; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Copies of the report have been placed in the Library today. It shows that authorities and associations housed the same kinds of people and provided similar kinds of services, although their scale of operation was different.

While the report concludes that there is no general crisis in the management of social rented housing, there were considerable variations between the best and the worst performers amongst both local authorities and associations. In both cases quality of management was the key to their performance as a landlord. Housing associations were found to have more satisfied tenants in better maintained homes but they spent more to achieve this. Some of the best of both types of landlord operated very economically in the most difficult circumstances.

However, tenants of authorities and associations saw scope for improved services. They wanted more local offices, better repairs services and more genuine consultation by their landlords. A substantial minority were willing to pay more for better services.

This report has important messages for all committee members and housing staff in authorities and associations. Although it is reassuring to know that a majority of tenants were satisfied with the services provided by their landlords, many tenants were not, and they found it difficult to influence their landlords: quite simply landlords do not listen enough. Moreover, many authorities and associations fail to keep in mind the need to be effective, efficient and economical. The measures in the recent Housing Act and current Bill are designed to address these problems directly.

It emerged clearly that tenants wanted better contacts and services and that local managers were more effective but no more expensive than those working from the town hall. This is a message which the Department has been promoting for a decade, through the priority estates project and Estate Action.

I shall be exploring with the Housing Corporation how associations' management efficiency can best be monitored and improved, and also how the widespread public ignorance of housing associations revealed by the report can be overcome.

I congratulate Professor Maclennan and his team on producing a report which sheds much light on the future of social rented housing and will help all those concerned to move forward on a better informed basis.

Tenants

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are his Department's plans to monitor and to publish information on a regular basis concerning (a) the level of private sector capital investment: (i) through commercial landlords; and (ii) through social landlords (x) in building new dwellings for letting and (y) in rehabilitating or converting existing property for letting under the assured tenancy or assured shorthold tenancy provisions of the Housing Act 1988, part I and (b) the rate of return on capital provided by such investment;

(2) what are his Department's plans to monitor and to publish information on a regular basis concerning the number of empty dwellings brought into letting (a) under the assured tenancy provisions and (b) under the assured shorthold tenancy provisions of the Housing Act 1988, part I, on a commercial basis (i) by non-resident landlords and (ii) by resident landlords;

(3) what are his Department's plans to monitor and to publish regular information concerning the number of properties let (a) under the assured tenancy provisions and (b) under the assured shorthold tenancy provisions of the Housing Act 1988, part I (i) by commercial landlords and (ii) by social landlords (1) through new buildings, (2) through rehabilitation or conversion of existing property, (3) through re-letting of existing property and (4) through transfers of property from the public sector;

(4) what are his Department's plans to monitor and to publish regular information concerning (a) the number of complaints (i) of harassment and (ii) of illegal eviction reported to local authorities each month (1) by private tenants whose agreement commenced before 15 January and (2) by private tenants whose agreement commenced after 15 January, (b) the number of staff employed by local authorities whose job it is to respond to such complaints: (i) as tenancy relations officers and (ii) as other officers within the council and (c) the number of actions commenced by local authorities in response to such complaints against private landlords or their agents: (i) for harassment and (ii) for illegal eviction, under the provisions of the Protection from Eviction Act, as amended by the Housing Act 1988, part I;

(5) what are his Department's plans to monitor and to publish information regularly concerning the level of rents charged (a) by commercial landlords and (b) by social landlords (i) for property newly built for letting, (ii) for property newly rehabilitated or converted for letting, (iii) for property relet and (iv) for property transferred from the public sector for letting (1) under the assured tenancy provisions and (2) under the assured shorthold tenancy provisions of the Housing Act 1988, part I.

Mr. Trippier: The need for statistics data collection and research will continue to be kept under review by our Department and results will continue to be published as they become available.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to monitor and to evaluate the impact on the Government's policy of promoting care in the community of the changes in succession rights introduced by the Housing Act 1988, part I, for tenants of private landlords.

Mr. Trippier: The need for research into the effects of part I of the Housing Act 1988 will be considered in the usual way as part of the Department's research programme.

Land (Iver)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to determine the appeals against enforcement notices and a compulsory purchase order issued by the South Buckinghamshire district council in relation to land at Swallow street, Iver.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend expects to issue these decisions shortly.

Bathing Water (North-West England)

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of whether all identified bathing waters around the Fylde coast will meet the enterovirus standard of EC directive 76/160/EEC after construction of the proposed long sea outfall for the Fylde coast.

Mr. Howard: It is for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to consider all relevant aspects of the proposals from North West water authority in determining its applications for discharge consents.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list North West Water's environmental quality objectives for all identified bathing waters on the Fylde coast, Morecambe bay and the North Cumbrian coast.

Mr. Howard: The quality standards in directive 76/160/EEC.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the process whereby bathing waters in the North West region were identified for compliance with EC directive 76/160/EEC.

Mr. Howard: The waters were identified in consultation with the North West water authority on the basis of the criteria set out in the Government's response to the tenth report of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution. These, in turn, are consistent with criteria set out by the European Commission.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that all identified bathing waters in the North West region will meet the provisions of EC directive 76/160/EEC by 1995.

Mr. Howard: My officials are discussing with North West water authority, the implications—both financial and engineering—of bringing all their identified bathing waters us to EC standards by 1995.

Sewage Discharge (Fylde)

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost of North West Water's advertising campaign in support of applications for consent to discharge raw sewage from a long sea outfall and three short outfalls on the Fylde coast.

Mr. Howard: This is a matter for the North West water authority, which is required to advertise all applications for discharge consent.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the differences between top and bottom currents at and around the likely areas of impact of the proposed long sea outfall discharge off the Fylde coast;

(2) if the intended frequency of routine stormwater discharges from three short sea outfalls along the Fylde coast satisfies guidelines for disposal of sewage to the sea agreed in 1988 between Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the water industry.

Mr. Howard: These are matters to be considered in determining the applications from North West water authority for the Fylde coast scheme.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on black, grey, or red list substances present in existing discharges to enable them to form a view on appropriate consent conditions for the proposed long sea outfall for the Fylde coast.

Mr. Howard: The North West water authority has provided information on the likely presence of various substances—including those in the black, grey and proposed red lists—as part of the applications for the discharges making up the Fylde coast improvement scheme. This information will be considered by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and if the scheme is found to be acceptable, appropriate conditions will be included in any discharge consents granted.

Sewage Pollution (Lytham St. Annes)

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide estimates of what proportion of sewage pollution experienced by Lytham St. Annes is due to bacterial levels in the river Ribble; and what proportion is due to existing local discharges of sewage.

Mr. Howard: The relative proportions vary, but I understand that the Ribble is usually the larger contributor.

Sewage Treatment Works

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will revise his Department's estimate of the potential efficiency of conventional inland sewage treatment works in eliminating faecal bacteria from the aqueous phase of sewage.

Mr. Howard: Conventional inland sewage treatment works are designed primarily to reduce the biochemical oxygen demand and the suspended solids content of sewage. At the same time, treatment also substantially reduces the faecal bacteria count in the sewage effluent which is discharged. The efficiency with which bacteria are removed varies from works to works and, for this reason, the Department has made no overall estimate.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the effect on bacterial levels in the river Ribble of uprating the Clifton Marsh sewage treatment works to include full conventional treatment and disinfection using environmentally benign methods.

Mr. Howard: The North West water authority is currently evaluating the effects of uprating Clifton marsh sewage treatment works, including the effects on bacterial levels in the river Ribble.

Sewage Disposal (Guidelines)

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the guidelines for disposal of sewage to the sea agreed in 1988 between Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the water industry.

Mr. Howard: I have placed copies in the Library of the House today.

Biodegradeable Plastic

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken to encourage the use of biodegradeable plastic.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 7 February at columns 518-19.

Dioxins

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he has any knowledge of evidence that dioxins have been found in paper products made from chlorine-bleached wood pulp;

(2) if his Department has any information on how dioxins find their way into human tissue;

(3) what information he has on level of dioxin pollution present in air in the United Kingdom;

(4) what information he has on the major source of dioxins resulting from industrial processes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 14 February at columns 189-90 which made reference to the statement currently being prepared on the known source of dioxins, their possible health effects and the expected exposure of the public to them.

Information is available in the scientific literature and from measurements in the United Kingdom that dioxins may in some circumstances be formed during the manufacture of certain chemicals and pesticides and during the combustion of organic materials.

As far as is known no measurements have been made in the United Kingdom on the levels of dioxins in ambient air.

Dioxins, if present in food, air or other products, may be absorbed into the body via the digestive system, via the respiratory system or by contact with the skin, respectively.

Information has been published in the scientific literature on the levels of dioxins found in certain paper products made from chlorine bleached wood pulp.

All these issues will be addressed in the forthcoming statement.

Sanitary Towels

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the level of inshore sea and beach pollution caused by used sanitary tampons and the plastic liners from sanitary towels.

Mr. Moynihan: Where there is visible evidence of sanitary towels and tampons it is usually attributable to discharges from short outfalls. These are being replaced as part of our programme to bring bathing waters up to EC standards. Many existing outfalls have screening and maceration facilities to break down such material into unrecognisable form. Design criteria for all new long sea outfalls provide for the removal of all solids retained by fine screening and their disposal by incineration or to landfill, and consequently, the effective disposal of sanitary towels and tampons. For these reasons, we believe pollution of inshore sea and beach areas from this source is a declining one.

Football League

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with the Football League.

Mr. Moynihan: I met representatives of the Football League and the Football Association on 10 February to discuss aspects of the Football Spectators Bill.

Ozone Layer (International Conference)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to issue an invitation to the energy and environment research unit at the Open University to send observer delegates to the forthcoming international conference on the ozone layer and environmental protection sponsored by Her Majesty's Government in London in March.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Participation in the "Saving the Ozone Layer" London conference on 5 to 7 March is for Governments only. Already over 90 countries have accepted our invitation, and we expect at least 75 delegations to be led at ministerial or equivalent level. A small number of scientists and industrialists will take part in specialist discussions. Relevant United Nations agencies have been invited to send observers, but, because of restrictions of space, it will not be possible to extend invitations to any other observers.

BNFL

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to conduct an environmental audit of the nuclear fuel cycle production and management process carried out by British Nuclear Fuels plc at its Springfields, Capenhurst, Calder and Windscale works at Sellafield and Chapel Cross facilities to ascertain the amounts of carbon dioxide and chlorofluorocarbons gases released in processing and refrigeration.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Preservation Orders

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those interested and professional bodies he has consulted or plans to consult during the current review of the procedures covering preservation orders.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Informal discussions are being arranged with various bodies, which so far include the following:

Arboricultural Association
Association of District Councils
Association of County Councils
Association of Metropolitan Authorities
Civic Trust
Coed Cymru
Convention of Scottish Local Authorities
Countryside Commission
Countryside Commission for Scotland
Country Landowners Association
Council for the Protection of Rural England
Department of the Environment, South-East Regional Office
Farmers Union of Wales
Forestry Commission
London Tree Officers
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food
Nature Conservancy Council
National Farmers Union
National Farmers Union of Scotland
National Trust for Scotland
Planning Aid for London
Royal Scottish Forestry Society
Scottish Wildlife and Countryside Link
Timber Growers UK
Tree Council

Some other bodies may be submitting written comments.

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what time has been allowed for consultation with interested parties during the current review of the procedures covering tree preservation orders; and what representations he has received asking him to extend it.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It will be appropriate to carry out formal consultations if and when the Government put forward proposals for changes in the present legislation and procedures, and an adequate period of time would be allowed for that purpose. No representations have been received about the conduct of consultations.

Water (Expenditure)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will express at current prices total capital expenditure on water in England and Wales for each year since 1984-85; and if he will estimate planned capital expenditure on water in England and Wales for each year until 1990-91.

Mr. Moynihan: The capital expenditure for the English water authorities is set out in the table. Figures for the Welsh water authority are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. The remaining information requested by the hon. Member is not available.

Capital expenditure England only

Year	Number
1984-85	799
1985-86	848
1986-87	957
1987-88	1,049
1988-89	1,303

1. 1987-88 prices (£ million) deflated using the 'public works non-roads' (PWNR) index.
2. 1988-89 figure provisional.

Croxteth Country Park

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will discuss the future of the Croxteth country park with district councils on Merseyside in order to encourage support for its continued existence; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Consultations with the Merseyside district councils on the proposals by the Merseyside residuary body to transfer Croxteth hall and country park to Liverpool city council with an endowment of £3 million have already taken place. We hope to make an announcement shortly.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will extend the period of consultation for his consultation paper, "The Role and Functions of Waste Disposal Authorities"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government share the strong concern expressed by local authorities and others about the need to improve legislation on waste disposal at the earliest opportunity. Examining the role and functions of waste disposal authorities is a central element of the review that has been undertaken, and it is important to proceed as quickly as possible should an early opportunity for legislation arise. We hope authorities will be able to provide their views on the proposals within the consultation period of two months.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet received the report of Her Majesty's inspector of pollution following his inspection of the Merseyside waste disposal authority; and if he will take its evidence into account before proceeding with his proposals contained in the consultation paper, "The Role and Functions of Waste Disposal Authorities".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have yet to receive the report of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on the performance of waste disposal authorities. The Secretary of State will take account of all relevant information and views in finalising his proposals to improve the law governing waste manangement.

Water Metering

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision will be made for water metering in the limit on charges to apply to water undertakings under the model instrument of appointment.

Mr. Ridley: The abolition of the domestic rating system means that water undertakers will have to introduce alternative means of charging. This is quite independent of the privatisation of the industry. Although the Government regard metering as potentially the fairest method of charging, it will be up to each undertaker to decide how it wishes to charge.

Each undertaker will want to take into account its own local circumstances and information on practicality, costs and effects of alternatives, before deciding whether to introduce widespread metering. Those decisions will be crucially important to customers and should be made on the best available information, over the next three years as a result of the metering trials which the industry is carrying out with Government financial assistance.

The trials are making good progress. Some preliminary findings are set out in the first interim report, which I am today placing in the House of Commons Library. However, neither these findings nor other data that may become available over the next few months will provide sufficient information to allow for the cost of introducing widespread water metering in the initial charges limit to be assigned to each water undertaker on their appointment later this year. Therefore, I propose to amend the model instrument of appointments to provide for these initial charges limits to be adjusted subsequently by the Director General of Water Services in order to cover the reasonable cost of introducing widespread metering.

I propose that each adjustment should be subject to an average cash ceiling per installation, to promote economy in the development of metering solutions. In setting this ceiling the director general would be able to take into account information on the cost of installing meters in the trial area, and later from each undertaker's metering programme. There would also be provisions to ensure that the additional revenue raised would be put towards metering and no other purpose.

The detailed licence provisions will be discussed with the water industry.

Shellfish Waters

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why there are no designated shellfish waters in the Morecambe bay area under the provisions of EC directive 79/923/EEC.

Mr. Howard: We do not consider it appropriate to include Morecambe bay within the scope of the directive. Discharges to the Morecambe bay area are controlled under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, and the Public Health (Shellfish) Regulations 1934 provide adequate protection to the health of the public with regard to the consumption of shellfish.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department has responded to the advice of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution, 10th report, 1984, that competent authorities should use the provisions of part II of the Control of Pollution Act to designate more shellfish waters in the interests of public health and the protection of commercial shellfisheries.

Mr. Howard: The provisions of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 have been used to extend control of all discharges to coastal waters. We have not considered it appropriate to designate more shellfish waters under the provisions of directive 79/923/EEC as the Public Health (Shellfish) Regulations 1934 provide adequate protection to the health of the public with regard to consumption of shellfish.

English Heritage and Royal Commission on Historical Monuments

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the future relationship between English Heritage and the Royal Commission on Historical Monuments in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The relationship between the royal commission (RCHME) and English Heritage has been looked at in the context of a policy review of the activities and functions of the commission and the equivalent bodies for Scotland and Wales. This review is being conducted jointly with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales. We shall be announcing conclusions in due course.

Meanwhile my right hon. Friend has decided that certain issues of principle can be settled now, in advance of the completion of the policy review. These are the question whether RCHME should be merged with English Heritage, and the suggestion in a consultancy report by Peat Marwick McLintock that consideration should be given to the transfer of some functions from English Heritage to the RCHME.

Peat's conclusion from their study was that RCHME performed a distinctive role in maintaining the national archive of heritage information. We are persuaded by their analysis, and take the view that RCHME should continue as a separate body.

The arguments for transfer of functions were for the most part finely balanced. We have decided that RCHME should in future be recognised as the lead national body for oversight of the system of local sites and monuments records. In exercising this responsibility we have asked RCHME to ensure proper liaison with English Heritage, and to take into account their interest in SMRs as an input to the monument protection programme, to the decisions of local planning authorities, and to conservation generally.

We have concluded that the existing statutory arrangements under which English Heritage provides advice to the Department on the listing of buildings of special architectural or historic interest and scheduling of ancient monuments remain appopriate. The main purpose of listing and scheduling is to identify buildings and monuments which should be given special consideration in the planning and development control process. Listing and scheduling are, therefore, linked to considerations of conservation rather than of record, and for that reason we conclude that it is more appropriate for English Heritage to continue to provide advice to us on these issues. But in doing so, we have stressed that it must make effective use of RCHME's expertise in the architectural and historic qualities of buildings and monuments.

Finally on the funding of rescue archaeology, we feel that there are good policy and practical arguments for the same agency handling all aspects of archaeology casework —scheduled monument consent, negotiations with developers, and rescue archaeology if that proves to be necessary. Accordingly we believe that it is best for English Heritage to continue to deal with rescue archaeology. But, again, we have stressed the need for RCHME's expertise to be fed into the running of the rescue archaeology programme. With these issues of principle resolved, we consider that there is now a very satisfactory basis for a supportive and constructive future relationship between the Royal Commission and English Heritage. We have written to their chairmen to inform them of our conclusions.

Pollution

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received a report from Government researchers based at Warren Spring on lead in the air in Cardiff; what significance he places on the latest available figures for Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 16 February 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales, my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, Central (Mr. Grist) on Friday 17 February 1989.

Resources Allocation

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Government Departments use his Department's list of programme and partnership authorities for the allocation of resources and in what ways; and if he will list in the Official Report the allocations made to such authorities in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The list of 57 urban programme areas is used by the Government in a variety of ways to help target a range of measures which come within their Action for Cities initiative. In many cases this does not involve allocation of resources to local authorities; more often it is used to inform the selection of locations for new initiatives or as a guide to assessing eligibility for certain grant schemes.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Numbers

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will construct a table showing for each police authority what the bid was for increases in establishment in the latest allocation; when each bid was received in writing by the Department; what award he made in the case of each bid; and what percentage that award represents of the bid.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

Strip Searches

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many strip searches were made of female prisoners on remand in Her Majesty's remand centres at (a) Pucklechurch, (b) Low Newton, (c) Risley, and (d) Her Majesty's prison Holloway in each month of 1988, giving the number of prisoners involved and the number of times each was searched; what items the possession of which was a breach of any rule of the establishment or of any law were discovered in any such search indicating how many in each category; in how many cases remand prisoners refused to be searched and were restrained while the search was being conducted; and what were the reasons for the search under the following headings: (a) making a remand appearance at court, (b) attending trial, (c) cell change, (d) inter-prison visit, and (e) other reasons;

(2) how many strip searches were made of convicted female prisoners in Her Majesty's prisons (a) Holloway, (b) Cookham Wood, (c) Styal and (d) Durham in each month of 1988, giving the number of prisoners involved and the number of times each person was searched; what items the possession of which was a breach of any prison rule or of any law were discovered in any such search indicating how many in each category; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and were restrained while the search was conducted; and what were the reasons for the search under the following headings: (a) cell change, (b) attendance at court, (c) before/after receiving a visit, and (d) other reasons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Comprehensive records of strip searches are available only in respect of category A women prisoners. Between 1 January and 27 September 1988, one such prisoner was held on remand in Risley remand centre. During this period, she was strip searched on the following numbers of occasions:

	In connection with remand hearings	Trial	Cell change	Inter-prison visit	Other reasons

Robert Weekes

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by his Department in considering any necessary amendments to law and practice following from the decision of the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Robert Weekes, 2 March 1987, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The implications of the judgment are still under consideration. Further applications by life sentence prisoners have been heard by the European Commission of Human Rights and we shall take account of the progress of those applications in considering whether any amendments may be necessary to our law and practice.

Broadcasting

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, following his White paper on broadcasting in the 1990's, he has plans to enable a series of national independent radio stations to operate in addition to local radio stations.

Mr. Renton: Yes. Paragraph 8.4 of the broadcasting White Paper (November Cm. 517) sets out our proposals for three national commercial radio stations.

Vehicles (Removal)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his written answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of 10 February, if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the number of occasions on which he upheld a complaint by a vehicle owner against the towing-away of a vehicle on the ground that it was an unreasonable exercise of this power and as to the recompense made in each case, for the latest 12 month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner that between 1 October 1987 and 30 September 1988, the most recent 12-month period for which complete statistics are available, the charge payable following vehicle removal was waived or refunded in 2,292 cases. Information about the reasons for the waiving or refunding of the charge or about cases where any compensation was paid could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Eviction

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his Department's plans to collect and to publish information on (a) the number of criminal proceedings (i) for harassment and (ii) for illegal eviction commenced by (1) local authorities, (2) private individuals and (3) the police under the provisions of the Protection from Eviction Act 1977 as amended by the provisions of the Housing Act 1988 part I, (b) the number of such proceedings in which (i) the defendant was convicted and (ii) the plaintiff was awarded compensation and (c) the level of (i) fines and (ii) damages awarded in such proceedings.

Mr. John Patten: Information is collected and published annually for prosecutions under the Protection from Eviction Act 1977 in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Volume 1, 1987" under offence class 87. A copy is in the Library of the House.

It is possible from the information collected centrally to identify separately the number of prosecutions for (i) harassment and (ii) illegal eviction, including the number of convictions, compensation awarded and the level of fines imposed. However, information is not collected centrally on the number of prosecutions commenced by (1) local authorities, (2) private individuals and (3) the police or on damages awarded.

Figures for prosecution following the Housing Act 1988 part I will not be available until the autumn of 1989.

Tagging

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department where he will be introducing tagging as a condition of bail; and what criteria he will use in choosing these areas.

Mr. John Patten: We hope to conduct trials of electronic monitoring, with the co-operation of the courts and others concerned, in Nottingham, north Tyneside and in a third area still to be decided. In identifying possible areas for the trials to take place, we have had in mind primarily the numbers of defendants now remanded in custody by the courts concerned.

Absconders

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the police national computer holds details of (a) the names or (b) the crimes committed by persons serving in Her Majesty's prisons who have absconded.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on the names of absconders may be held on the wanted missing persons file of the police national computer where, in the police's view, this information would be operationally useful.

In addition, an individual's record on the index of criminal names held on the PNC may be amended to indicate that he or she is an absconder, where the police consider that this would be operationally useful.

Details of an absconder's criminal convictions will be available on the convictions record of the PNC, if he or she were first convicted of a recordable offence in 1981 or later. Broadly speaking, recordable offences are offences for which a term of imprisonment may be given.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will supply a list of offences for which prisoners who have currently absconded from Her Majesty's prisons were convicted.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information is not available in the form requested, and reliable information is not available for the period before 1981. Records of prisoners unlawfully at large on 31 December 1988 having, between 1 January 1981 and 31 December 1988, escaped or absconded from a prison in England or Wales (including prisoners who escaped from escort or failed to return from home leave or temporary release) embrace charges or convictions for all offences under the offence classification headings used in published prison statistics (eg, in table 1.7 of the 1987 volume, Cm. 547) except cruelty to children, gross indecency with children, theft of motor vehicle, in charge or driving under the influence of drink or drugs, drunkenness, vagrancy and courts martial prisoners. The records show the principal offence where the prisoners were charged with, or convicted of, more than one type of offence. In some cases, the offence is not recorded.

Prisoners (Suicides)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) suicides and (b) attempted suicides there were in prisons in England and Wales in 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Verdicts of suicide have been returned on 26 inmates who died in prison department establishments in England and Wales during 1988. Inquests have yet be be held on five other inmates who died in prison department custody during this period and whose deaths are thought to have been suicide.

Figures are not available for reported apparent suicide attempts for the calendar year 1988, but there were 343 reported instances in the period 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) suicides and (b) attempted suicides occurred in (i) Holloway, (ii) Brixton, (iii) Wormwood scrubs, (iv) Leeds, (v) Manchester, (vi) Birmingham, (vii) Liverpool and (viii) Wandsworth during 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is given in the following table:

	Suicides	Attempted suicides[1]
Holloway	0	19
Brixton	1	16
Wormwood Scrubs	2	9
Leeds	4	12
Manchester	2	8
Birmingham	2	11
Liverpool	0	27
Wandsworth	1	8

[1] The number of incidents reported to the prison department as specific suicide attempts.

Female Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many female prisoners served sentences separated from their children, aged 18 months or under, in 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. A census on 11 August 1986 showed that 340 females in custody were known to be mothers of 455 children aged five years or under. Of those 455, 93 aged 18 months or under were not with their mothers in prison.

Prison Discipline

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to deal with increasing prison indiscipline; and what assessment he has made of the reasons for this trend.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are provisions in the prison rules which enable suitable charges to be brought against prisoners alleged to have committed disciplinary offences. The statistics relating to offences punished do not suggest that there has been an overall increase in indiscipline in recent years.

Prison Building Programme

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost of each of the prisons under construction or planned within the prison building programme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving) on 20 January 1989 at column 349. This provides the requested information in relation to all the new prisons in the current building programme on which sufficient progress has been made for preliminary estimates to be produced.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the original estimated cost and the actual cost of building each of the completed prisons within the Government's prison building programme since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving) on 20 January 1989 at column 348.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were being held in police cells in England and Wales on 10 February.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 245.

Refugees

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he employs in deciding how to use his powers under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 in respect of special provision for refugees resettled in the United Kingdom via British colonies or Commonwealth countries.

Mr. John Patten: Under the terms of section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966, grant may be paid to local authorities only to assist with special provision required because of the presence of substantial numbers of immigrants from the Commonwealth. Refugees of non-Commonwealth origin who have arrived in the United Kingdom via a Commonwealth country are not considered to be within the scope of the legislation.

Police (Foreign Hospitality)

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department gives to senior police officers about accepting hospitality from foreign Governments.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have not issued particular guidance on this matter.

Prison Sanitation

Mr. David Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons on prison sanitation will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The report of a review of prison sanitation, conducted by Judge Stephen Tumim and his staff, is published today. I am grateful to Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons for this valuable contribution to our work on improving conditions for prisoners and welcome the detailed research which has gone into his recommendations. I am placing copies of the report in the Library and making further copies available for the Vote Office.

Judge Tumim's principal recommendation is that access to sanitation should be provided at all times for all inmates in prisons in England and Wales within a period of seven years. This should be done either by providing in-cell sanitation, or by using electronic means to allow individual prisoners to leave their cells, or by providing additional staff to allow for manual unlocking at the request of the prisoner. Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons stresses that, apart from improving hygiene and increasing self-respect, the abolition of slopping out would help both inmates and staff by allowing a better use of time.

I entirely share Her Majesty's chief inspector's view that the ending of slopping out would make a substantial difference to the lives of prisoners and of staff. It should be a high priority. All prisons built or designed since this Government came to office in 1979 have either integral sanitation within the living accommodation or free access to sanitation. About half of the existing accommodation now has access to night sanitation. There is, therefore, already considerable experience of the regimes which can be provided where slopping out can be avoided. Prison service management is well aware of the advantages to be gained. They are committed to ensuring that better regimes are achieved as the programme for improving facilities progresses.

At the beginning of this decade, it was thought that the most effective way of providing integral sanitation in existing establishments was to convert one cell in three to provide separate sanitary annexes with toilets and hand-basins for each of the other two. This system involves major structural alterations and requires whole wings to be vacated simultaneously. It thus reduces the number of prison places and can be undertaken only in conjunction with major refurbishment. This inevitably makes progress slow.

Recognising that the best may be the enemy of the good, prison service staff during the past few years have looked for alternative methods of achieving the same ends more quickly and at less cost. Among these alternative methods were electronic unlocking and the installation of toilets and wash-basins in existing cells without major building works or net loss of places. Tests carried out by the prison service directorate of works of these new methods have proved successful. As Her Majesty's chief inspector acknowledges, this work has provided the cornerstone for the recommendations in his report.

I am accordingly glad to be able to accept without reservation Her Majesty's chief inspector's recommendation that integral sanitation should be installed in many existing cells during the next seven years. A provisional programme for adding more than 6,500 cells to those already scheduled for conversion has been identified as practicable in the light of the tests already mentioned. Work has already begun or will be beginning in each of the 27 establishments listed as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made. In addition electronic unlocking is to be installed at Bullwood hall and New hall. This new programme will reduce the current 50 per cent. of places without access to sanitation to about 13 per cent. by the end of the century, that is about 8,000 places. This is a considerable improvement on the figures of 25 per cent. or 14,500 places which had been anticipated.

Each establishment not listed, and in which there is not already access to night sanitation, will be examined during the next year to determine the best way of providing such access, taking account of its individual circumstances, including the present state of its fabric and future plans for its use. In some instances it may not be practicable either to install integral sanitation or to introduce electronic unlocking. A decision whether to provide the high level of staffing required to allow for manual unlocking will have to depend on other staffing priorities. I cannot, therefore, give an absolute undertaking as to when slopping out will end totally. But the number of places without access to night sanitation will be very substantially reduced within seven years.

The other main recommendation in the report relates to the position of works staff and the need to enable them to fulfil their role effectively within establishments. The prisons board, as one of its key priorities for 1989-90, has required governors to produce and achieve a planned works maintenance programme making maximum use of the professional skills of works officers and of inmate labour. The conclusions of the review of the regional and headquarters organisation of the prison service which was announced recently on 3 February 1989 at column 420, will also be relevant to this recommendation, which will be implemented in the light of these two associated initiatives.

I endorse what is said in the report about the importance and useful part played by works staff in maintaining our establishments. Their commitment and expertise will be a significant factor in our ability to put Her Majesty's chief inspector's proposals into effect.

Mrs. Limbada (Karachi)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the British authorities in Karachi first contacted his Department about Mrs. AL, wife of MY, reference IMP Y53167/3(5); when she was interviewed; what other steps were taken by his Department in processing this case; and when the case was finally referred to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 17 February 1989]: The entry clearance officer in Karachi referred Mr. Mohammed Yousuf's application to the immigration department on 20 January 1987. The Department wrote to Mrs. Limbada on 19 February 1987 and in the light of her response concluded that an interview was necessary. Owing to a combination of pressure of work and Mrs. Limbada's absence from the United Kingdom it did not prove possible to arrange an interview until 10 August 1988. The interview report was sent to the entry clearance officer shortly afterwards. Due to an oversight, however, the entry clearance officer was not asked to reach a decision on the application until 25 February 1989. Following a re-interview of Mr. Yousuf on 12 February, the entry clearance officer decided to refuse the application.

Justices' Clerks

Mr. Gerald Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many justices' clerks are paid in excess of the JNC for justices' clerks national salary arrangements in (a) London and (b) the rest of England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 17 February 1989]: The salary scales approved within the JNC for justices' clerks do not directly apply to inner London. In the rest of England and Wales magistrates' courts committees are expected to pay justices' clerks in accordance with agreements reached in the JNC and approved by the Secretary of State for grant purposes.

No instance of payment in excess of JNC agreed salary scales has been drawn to my attention.

Extradition

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has made extradition applications for terrorist or other offences; and how often, by whom and for what reasons such requests have been rejected.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 16 February 1989]: The readily available information for extradition requests from England and Wales to foreign states, Commonwealth countries and (by police forces) to the Republic of Ireland is given in the following tables. Requests involving terrorist offences are specified where known. The Irish statistics are based mainly on information provided by police forces. Full details of reasons for refusals of requests in individual cases are not readily available; but the reasons include insufficient evidence, that the fugitive was a national of the requested state, and that the alleged offences were time-barred under the law of the requested state.

Extradition requests to foreign states

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many adults and how many children, respectively, are known to have gone missing in the Metropolitan police district during each of the last three Christmas periods.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 19 December 1988]: The available information is given in the following table:

Adults and children reported missing in the Metropolitan Police District in December and still missing on 16 December 1988

Month reported missing	Adults aged 18 or over	Children aged under 18
December 1985	10	2
December 1986	24	5
December 1987[1]	20	5

[1] New counting procedures were introduced from the beginning of 1987, hence the figures for previous years are not comparable.

SCOTLAND

Woodland Grants

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current average consultation period required for consideration of schemes submitted under the woodland grant scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Up to the end of January, the average time that elapsed between woodland grant scheme applications being sent out by the Forestry Commission for consultation and applicants being notified of the outcome was between 45 and 50 days.

Rating Reform

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce regulations to exempt all craft workshops from the standard community charge provisions of the Abolition of Domestic Rates etc. (Scotland) Act 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Under section 10 of the Abolition of Domestic Rates etc. (Scotland) At 1987, as amended, the standard community charge will be payable in respect of dwellinghouses which are not subject to non-domestic rates and which are not the sole or main residence of any person. Premises which are used exclusively as craft workshops will remain subject to non-domestic rates after 1 April 1989 and will not, therefore, attract liability for the standard community charge.

Taxi Licensing

Mr. David Marshall: to ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek to introduce legislation to permit a local authority to allow the transfer of taxi operators' licences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

"Working for Patients" (Video)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the video prepared for his Department explaining the proposals in the White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr. Rifkind: Yes.

Pupils

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils in Scottish schools stay at hostels away from home; and how many of these go home each weekend.

Mr. Rifkind: This information is not held centrally.

"Scottish Education in the Nineties"

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of requests received for copies of the video, "Scottish Education in the Nineties" giving a breakdown per (a) school, (b) parent-teacher associations, (c) school councils, (d) education authorities and (e) other.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: To date requests have been made for 216 copies in addition to a wide initial distribution which included all schools. These requests break down as follows:

	Number
Schools	2
Parent Teacher Associations	2
School Councils	0
Education Authorities	164
Others	48
	216

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost in producing the video, "Scottish Education in the Nineties", and what was the total number of cassettes produced.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: For the cost of production I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish) on 17 January at column 162. A total of 5,000 copies of the video were made.

Cheese

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations have taken place between Ministers from his Department and the Association of Scottish Hard-Cheese Makers about the Government's attitude to unpasteurised milk cheese production.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There have been no consultations with the Scottish Company of Cheese-Makers Ltd. which represents the major hard-cheese makers in Scotland. The manufacturers represented by the company do not use unpasteurised milk in making there cheeses.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the annual number of cases of listeria in Scotland involving (a) unpasteurised milk cheese production and (b) pasteurised milk cheese production, in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Over the past five years there have been 112 cases of human listeriosis but in none of these has there been a positive association with cheese.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to make an assessment of the effect of recent Government statements on the market prospects of Scottish-produced unpasteurised milk cheese; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Informal soundings indicate that sales of cheese made in Scotland from unpasteurised milk remain steady.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many workers are diréctly employed in Scottish farm cheese production made from unpasteurised milk.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At the end of 1988 there were 12 Scottish farm cheese production units using unpasteurised milk, employing some 30 people.

Potato Policy

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further representations he has received about the Government's consultation paper on potato policy in Scotland; and if he will make a statement about plans to withdraw financial support from the potato sector in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Representations on the proposals set out in the consultation paper have been received from interested organisations and individual potato producers. These are now under consideration; decisions have yet to be taken about future arrangements for potato marketing in Scotland.

Waste Disposal

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what regulations have been established for the transportation of domestic and commercial waste in Scotland from other areas of the country.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: Controlled waste arising within the United Kingdom for disposal in Scotland is governed by the Control of Pollution (Licensing of Waste Disposal) (Scotland) Regulations 1977 and the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980. The licence conditions determine, among other things, the nature of wastes which may be disposed of at a site. The Special Waste Regulations make provision for a system of consignment notes to be used by those who produce, transfer for disposal or dispose of special waste in order to notify the waste disposal authorities concerned.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he takes to prevent clinical waste beting transported for disposal in Scotland without public knowledge; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: Under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, all waste must be disposed of at a site which is being used in accordance with a licence issued by the waste disposal authority for the area (the district or islands council). Conditions prescribing the working practices are invariably attached to such licences; these may include requirements relating to the type and quantities of waste which may be accepted. The waste disposal authority must keep a register of licences available for public inspection at its principal office, and every authority does so.

The Special Waste Regulations 1980 control the movement of dangerous wastes, but clinical wastes are rarely considered to be so dangerous as to fall under the regulations.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much and what type of clinical waste was transported from London to Scotland for disposal in Glasgow, as revealed by the London waste regulatory authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information of this kind is not held centrally. Responsibility for monitoring the safe disposal of waste is a matter for the local waste disposal authority concerned.

Electronics

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current level of output in the electronics industry in Scotland; and what was the level in 1979.

Mr. Lang: The latest figures show electronics output in Scotland in the second quarter of 1988 to have been 134, based on 1985 equal to 100. This compares with an average annual figure for 1979 of 37. Since 1979 electronics output in Scotland has increased more than three-and-a-half fold.

Productivity

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the growth in productivity in the Scottish (a) manufacturing, (b) agricultural and (c) mining industries for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The average annual increase in productivity in these industries in Scotland since 1979 is set out in the table.

Output per head: Percentage change on previous year

Research Projects

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the research projects carried out with public funds, directly or indirectly, on the Scottish historical (a) cultural, (b) political, (c) economic and (d) social, institutions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has not supported, directly or indirectly, any research projects on Scottish historical institutions.

Manufacturing

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time jobs were created in the manufacturing industry for each year since 1975.

Mr. Lang: Figures are available only for full-time jobs from the regional data system which contains employment data for manufacturing units employing 10 or more people. The figures are the annual increases in number of jobs for the units which had increases. The figures after 1984 are likely to be under-estimates pending an up-date of the system using census of employment data for 1987.

Departmental Expenses

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were, for each year since 1978, the total expenses of the Scottish Office.

Mr. Rifkind: The table shows the departmental running costs of the Scottish Office, excluding the Scottish prison service, which are borne on class XVI vote 21 in 1988-89 and comparative outturn since 1983-84.

	£ million
1983-84 outturn	93·0

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Doncaster (Books Expenditure)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the total expenditure on text and library books in the Doncaster local education authority for (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools at the end of each year since 1978-79 in cash terms and in real terms, using 1987-88 prices; and what were those figures as a percentage of the national average.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is given in the table:

School Leavers (Doncaster)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table in the Official Report, showing the proportion of school leavers in Doncaster who continued into (a) university education and (b) other higher education for each year since 1979; and what was the national average in each year.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not readily available in the form requested. The table gives for the Doncaster local education authority and for England, the proportion of school leavers from maintained schools who intended to proceed to a course of further or higher education. The figures are drawn from a 10 per cent. sample of pupils at each school. Sampling error is a major consideration where a local education authority, such as Doncaster, has a relatively small cohort of school leavers. Such error alone could be the cause of fluctuations in the figures from year to year.

Pupil Expenditure

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide a table showing for (a) England and (b) Cheshire the level of expenditure in constant terms per child in (i) primary education and (ii) secondary education for each year from 1978 to the latest available year.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is given in the table:

Schools (Opting-out)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if any schools in Derbyshire have had ballots in schools to opt out of local education authority control.

Mrs. Rumbold: To date two schools in Derbyshire have held ballots on grant-maintained status. The parents at Netherthorpe school voted in favour of an application to seek grant-maintained status; the parents at Chesterfield school voted against.

Secondary Schools (Home Economics)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what advice he is giving to local education authorities about the teaching of home economics in secondary schools;

(2) what representations he has received about the absence of home economics from the national curriculum foundation subjects in secondary schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations from organisations, parents and teachers about the place of home economics in the school curriculum. Home economics is a valuable subject and is expected to remain a popular choice, outside the national curriculum, for many pupils. Within the national curriculum, home economics can contribute to teaching the attainment targets and programmes of study for science, to be finalised next month. Home economics can also contribute to design and technology (D & T). The

D & T working group has been asked to take this into account in advising on attainment targets and programmes of study for D & T.

Secondary Schools (Classics)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what advice he is giving to local education authorities about the teaching of classics in secondary schools;

(2) what representations he has received about the absence of classics from the national curriculum foundation subjects in secondary schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 31 January at columns 171-72. My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations from organisations, parents and teachers about the place of classics in the school curriculum.

Nursery Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what regulations or guidance concerning school premises and pupil-teacher ratios have been issued in respect of nursery schools and classes.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Premises for maintained nursery schools and classes are subject to the Education (School Premises) Regulations, 1981. The last central guidance on the staffing of this provision was issued 16 years ago, by way of circular 2/73 and administrative memorandum 21/73. The Government have no plans to update this. They look to authorities to determine the appropriate levels of staffing for this provision in the knowledge that the prevailing ratios—a pupil:teacher ratio of 22·9:1 within an overall pupil:adult ratio of 10·2:1—are better than those envisaged in 1973.

Audenshaw High School, Tameside

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received (a) in favour and (b) against Audenshaw high school, Tameside, opting out of the local education system.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received 21 statutory and two non-statutory objections to Audenshaw high school's application for grant-maintained status. No letters of support have been received. There is no formal provision for such representations.

Institut Laue Lange, Grenoble

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on British participation in the research of the Institut Laue Lange at Grenoble.

Mr. Jackson: The level of British participation in the Institut Laue Langevin after 1992 will be considered in the light of advice received in due course from the SERC.

School Trips (Supervision)

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to improve the existing machinery for the control of supervision by teachers on school trips and the enquiries which are made in the case of fatal accidents on these trips; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Detailed arrangements for these matters are the responsibility of the local education authorities. My Department has provided guidance for them in the booklet "Safety in Outdoor Pursuits" (HMSO). A new and fuller document will be available shortly, incorporating new material prepared in the light of recent accidents. It will be sent free to all schools, colleges and local education authorities.

Church-aided Schools, Lancashire

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what studies his Department has undertaken of capital spending on church-aided schools in Lancashire.

Mr. Butcher: Each year my right hon. Friend invites governors of aided schools in Lancashire and other LEAs to assess the need for new school building projects, and to formulate and submit appropriate plans through the LEA. Five new major building projects at aided schools in Lancashire were recently approved for a start in 1989-90; this was the largest number of new starts approved for any LEA.

Assessment of Performance Unit

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the future of the assessment of performance unit.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Responsibility for the assessment of performance unit (APU) will be transferred from my Department to the School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC) with effect from 1 April 1989. This will allow the APU's programme of work to be closely integrated with SEAC's wider programme of monitoring and evaluation, on which I have invited the council's advice by the end of July.

Human Genetics

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will outline any proposals to attract funding from agencies or other sources towards international co-ordination within the community to organise research into the mapping of the human genome, and in particular the application of work resulting from a human genetics programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 15 February 1989]: As part of the allocation of science budget funds announced on 7 February 1989, the MRC was allocated £11 million over three years for the United Kingdom human genome mapping project. This project will serve as a national focus for activities in this field, and will link with related international research. In additon to the newly allocated funds, the MRC already spends £9 million annually on genetics research of relevance to the project, and it is estimated that the United Kingdom medical research charities spend a similar sum.

The European Commission has prepared a formal proposal for a programme entitled "Predictive Medicine: Human Genome Analysis" and this will be considered by the Council later this year.

CIVIL SERVICE

Creche Facilities

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what steps he is taking to encourage more creche facilities in the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: I outlined new arrangements for financing Civil Service child care schemes in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock) on 16 February at column 311. Departments now have the freedom, within overall running cost provisions, to support child care schemes which can be justified in value for money terms. A part-time child care development officer has been appointed to the Cabinet Office, equal opportunities division to offer advice and practical help to Departments as required. A number of Departments are already developing plans for childcare provision for the under-fives. These include my own Department, the Ministry of Defence and the Home Office. The Civil Service college at Sunningdale is planning a creche which will be available to both staff and students.

Retail Prices Index (Error)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, columns 773-74, if he will list the number of organisations entitled to receive funds in respect of the RPI error; what are the individual amounts involved; which of these organisations received a payable warrant and on what date; which of these organisations were asked to repay the warrant pending parliamentary approval; whether a motion has yet been tabled for parliamentary approval for authorisation of payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The organisations benefiting funds from the error in calculation of the RPI and the amounts awarded to them on 1 August 1988 are:

Civil Service Benevolent Fund	1,229,000
Civil Service Retirement Fellowship	330,000
Civil Service Club	150,000
Civil Service Sports Council	44,000
Post Office and CS Sanatorium Society	150,000
Civil Service Pensioners' Alliance	35,000
Occupational Pensions Advisory Service	20,000

Payable warrants were sent to each of the organisations on 3 August 1988. The Civil Service pensioners alliance, occupational pensions advisory service and the Post Office and Civil Service Sanatorium Society were asked to repay the awards pending authorisation of a supplementary estimate for funds which has been submitted for parliamentary approval.

THE ARTS

Sir Douglas Bader (Memorabilia)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Arts what action is being taken to preserve for the nation wartime memorabilia that belonged to Sir Douglas Bader; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Owners are free to dispose of their property as they wish. In the event that an owner wishes to enjoy the property abroad, items over 50 years of age and worth certain monetary values would require an export licence in the normal way.

Scientific Periodicals

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 994, what discussions he has had with the British Library about the pricing of scientific periodicals.

Mr. Luce: The British Library draws my attention to the cost of scientific periodicals and other materials when it presents its financial forecasts, and I take these into account when making my arts budget allocation.

Disabled People

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) what advice the Arts Council gives to its clients on fulfilling their statutory obligations to employ people with disabilities;

(2) what information he has on the expenditure of the Arts Council on developing policy on disability and the arts;

(3) how many people who are registered disabled have been employed by the Arts Council in each of the last five years;

(4) what information he has on the percentage of the Arts Council's training budget spent on arts and disability;

(5) what information he has on the provision of access for the disabled at the Arts Council's offices with regard to (a) ramps, (b) induction loops, (c) signers and (d) Braille signs;

(6) what information he has on the expenditure of the Arts Council on facilities for people with disabilities at its offices at 105 Piccadilly;

(2) what information he has on the number of job applications received by the Arts Council from people with disabilities in each of the past five years.

Mr. Luce: As I explained to the hon. Member in my reply earlier today, the Arts Council is committed to equal opportunities for disabled people both in its own employment and throughout the arts world. The council actively seeks to recruit staff with disabilities and currently employs six people who consider themselves to be disabled. This represents over 3 per cent. of its total staff. The council has also actively endorsed the same positive approach in its clients, as set out in the council's code of practice on the arts and disability. The council monitors the implementation of the code through its regular evaluation of client organisations. For more detailed information about the implementation of the council's policy at its headquarters and in the field, the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Arts Council.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (a) how many employees and (b) what percentage of employees of the Arts Council were registered disabled, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 14 February 1989]: The Arts Council is committed to equal opportunities for disabled people and actively seeks to recruit staff with disabilities. As part of this policy, it has conducted a number of surveys amongst its staff. Since these began in December 1986, only one employee has been found to be formally registered as disabled. However, six existing employees consider themselves to be disabled although they have chosen not to register. This represents over 3 per cent. of the Arts Council's total staff.

Northern Ballet

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about the Arts Council's proposed funding arrangements for Northern Ballet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has had about the future of Northern Ballet theatre.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 16 February 1989]: I have received a number of representations from interested parties. The funding of northern ballet is, however, entirely a matter for the Arts Council.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Labour Statistics

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of how many firms, businesses and employers in the East Londonderry constituency employ more than 25 persons.

Mr. Viggers: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate as to how many firms, businesses and employers there are in the areas covered by the Department of Social Security offices at (a) Strabane, (b) Londonderry, (c) Limavady, (d) Magherafelt, and (e) Coleraine which employ more than 25 persons; what is his estimate of the total number of persons employed by all those firms in those areas; and what is the total number of employees in those areas.

Mr. Viggers: Information on the number of enterprises with more than 25 employees is not available in the form requested. Statistics on the number of employees relate to district council, rather than social security office areas. Latest available figures, based on the September 1984 census of employment records, are as follows:

	Number
Strabane	7,480
Londonderry	27,930
Limavady	5,920
Magherafelt	7,640
Coleraine	15,810

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate as to how many firms and businesses in the East Londonderry constitituency employ more than 25 persons;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate as to how many firms and businesses in the Foyle constituency employ more than 25 persons.

Mr. Viggers: The information is not available in the form requested.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available on the numbers of claims for additional requirements, including backdated claims under supplementary benefit, which were granted from 1 January to 10 April 1988 and those granted from April 1988.

Mr. Needham: Under the supplementary benefit scheme additional requirements were an integral part of benefit entitlement and claims for them were not made or recorded separately. Accordingly the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement indicating the total amounts of money paid under all supplementary benefit regulations in each social security office from 11 April 1988.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not available.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

European Legislation

Mr. Mates: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many recommendations for debate were made by the Select Committee on European Legislation in the last session.

Mr. Wakeham: In 1987-88 there were 117 such recommendations.

Mr. Mates: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. and right hon. Members took part in the deliberations of Standing Committees on European Documents who were not members of the Standing Committee, in the last Session.

Mr. Wakeham: In 1987-88, six hon. Members took part in deliberations of Standing Committees on European Documents, of which they were not a member.

Debates

Mr. Mates: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many debates were held following recommendations of the Select Committee on European Legislation on the Floor of the House in the last Session of Parliament.

Mr. Wakeham: In 1987-88, 29 debates were held on the Floor of the House, covering 84 documents, in addition to 15 debates in Standing Committee, covering 31 documents.

HEALTH

General Practitioners (Rural Area)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to meet representatives of the British Medical Association to discuss the future of general practitioners in rural areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Consultations with the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association have been continuing for about one year on the detail of implementing changes to GPs' terms of service and remuneration system. These consultations will cover changes to the family doctor services throughout Great Britain, as proposed in the White Papers "Promoting Better Health" and "Working for Patients" including matters of special relevance to rural general practice. I last met the representatives of the GMSC for a discussion of progress in these consultations on 9 February 1989. I have no present plans for a further meeting.

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what National Health Service staffing information he collects centrally; and what information relating to the number of vacant posts in all National Health Service staff categories was considered in the National Health Service review which led to the White Paper, "Working for Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department collects detailed information on staff-in-post as at end of September each year. Less detailed statistics are available for other quarter points in the year

Information on vacant posts is collected annually for consultants and senior registrars (hospital services) and for RMO, DMO, SCM, senior registrars and registrars in the community services.

RAWP System (North Staffs)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money will be lost by North Staffordshire district health authority as a result of the Government's proposals to change the basis of allocations on the resource allocation working party system.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No money will be lost by the district health authority from its present allocation but in future years, district health authorities, like regional health authorities, will be funded for their own populations weighted to take account of age and propensity to sickness. This will provide a fair basis for the calculation of the district's share of future growth in NHS revenue.

Tampons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence there is that tampons produced from chlorine-bleached fibres can provide a means whereby dioxins enter the human body.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 14 February at column 179.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to require sanitary tampon manufacturers to print warnings regarding toxic shock syndrome on the packets.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will issue safety guidelines for sanitary tampon manufacturers;

(2) if he will take steps to alert consumers of sanitary tampons to medical research which has suggested that there are health problems related to them.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 14 February 1989]: Four years ago the Government set up a voluntary prior approval scheme with the sanitary protection industry, under which manufacturers submit to Government any new tampon or tampons to which there have been significant changes in design or materials, and toxicologists from the Department of Health scrutinise them to decide whether they pose a health hazard. I am satisfied that this scheme is adequate to safeguard the public and I commend it as a good example of a responsible industry voluntarily looking after the interests of its customers. Sanitary tampon manufacturers already include with their products leaflets giving consumers information on toxic shock syndrome and personal hygiene.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now include sanitary towels and tampons among the articles covered by the good manufacturing practice specified by the Department of Health.

Mr. Freeman: No. The voluntary prior approval scheme set up four years ago by the Government and the sanitary protection industry already ensures that any new tampon or major change in tampon design or materials can be properly checked to decide whether or not they pose a health hazard.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will fund research on the health effects of using sanitary tampons.

Mr. Freeman: We look to the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science, for the support of biomedical research.

Cigarettes

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, when negotiating the renewal of voluntary agreements with the tobacco industry, he will make it his policy to seek a ban on the sale of single cigarettes on the grounds that they cannot carry a Government health warning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The sale of single cigarettes is one aspect of the larger problem of tobacco sales to children. This area is already covered by the Protection of Children (Tobacco) Act 1986 and the Government are looking into ways of improving the enforcement of this legislation.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department's scientific and medical advisers have investigated the studies into electromagnetic wave theory and possible relationships with cot death syndrome; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Neither this Department nor the National Radiological Protection Board, which has a responsibility to advise on hazards from electromagnetic fields, are aware of any authoritative, peer-reviewed studies that have demonstrated an association between sudden infant death syndrome and exposure to these fields at any frequency.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he will list those research projects which are currently receiving Government funding and which examine the possible causes of cot death syndrome; and whether he will list the academic or medical institutions at which such research is taking place;

(2) what is the total sum of grant made available by his Department for research into the causes of cot death syndrome in the current financial year; and what is the projected sum for the financial year 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: The Medical Research Council is the main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom. The MRC receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. I understand that in 1987-88, the latest financial year for which figures are available, the MRC spent approximately £83,000 on research into sudden infant death syndrome. The following list shows the current research supported by this money.

a. Clinical Research Centre—Division of Clinical Sciences, Harrow, Middlesex.
Project Title: Arterial oxygen saturation monitoring for respiratory disease, heart failure, cot death, anaesthesia.
(ii) Grant Holders in University Departments
a. Professor V. Dubowntz, Department of Paediatric and Neonatal Medicine, Royal Postgraduate Medical School, London.
Project Title: Continuous 4 channel EEg monitoring in the high risk neonate.
b. Professor J. K. Stothers, Department of Paediatrics, London Hospital Medical College, London.
Project Title: An investigation into the incidence and clinical significance of obstructive apnoea in children.
c. Professor A. D. Milner, Department of Child Health, University of Nottingham, Nottingham.
Project Title: Apnoea bardycardia and high frequency oscillation in the neonatal period.
d. Professor P. J. Watt, Department of Microbiology, University of Southampton.
Project Title: Respiratory Syncytial Virus Polypeptides: age-related antibody responses and the significance of material IGC.

In the same year, the council made available a further £322,000 for other research which may contribute to the understanding of the sudden infant death syndrome.

Former Ministers (Facilities)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his answer of 13 February, Official Report, col. 79 what is the cost of granting the former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health the temporary use of a room at the Department plus the part-time assistance of an administrative officer to manage and safeguard the papers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There is no additional cost as the former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health is using a room that was vacant pending the refurbishment of the building. The administrative officer spends up to a maximum of three hours a week managing and safeguarding the papers at an approximate cost of £170 for the nine weeks of research.

Sea Bathing

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider Government funding for urgent research into the extent of infection from viruses associated with sea bathing.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 31 October 1988 at column 546.

Babies (PCDFs)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response his Department has made to reports about the effects on babies of high levels of PCDFs.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is aware of studies in Japan and Taiwan which tentatively suggested health effects in babies whose mothers were exposed to cooking oil containing polychlorinated biphenyls contaminated with PCDFs. The Department's advisory committee on the toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment is currently reviewing the toxicity data on PCDDs and PCDFs, including these studies, and the committee's advice is expected shortly.

Cancer (Paper Products)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has any statistics regarding increased lifetime cancer risk resulting from dioxin exposure via paper products.

Mr. Freeman: Research indicates that levels present in such products are very low and they would be expected to present a negligible risk. However, we have asked the relevant trade associations to provide information on levels found in products on sale in the United Kingdom. A further assessment of risks to health will then be made.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on research conducted by the United States Environment Protection Agency into the risks of cancer from paper products.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the Environment Protection Agency is preparing a report with the American paper industry which is expected to be ready by April 1989.

Birth Deformities

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department is aware of any research indicating links between dioxins and birth deformities.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is aware of toxicological studies indicating that some dioxins can cause deformities in certain species of laboratory animals. The significance of these findings for humans is currently being assessed by the Department's advisory committee on the toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment as part of a review of all the toxicity data on PCDDs and PCDFs. The committee's advice is expected shortly.

Aluminium (Home Cooking)

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in view of the scientific evidence linking aluminium with Alzheimer's disease, he has considered the control on the use of aluminium in food processing, including cooking utensils and aluminium foil; and what advice he has for home cooks.

Mr. Freeman: No controls on the use of aluminium in food processing are warranted. My replies to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 27 January at columns 797-799 explain the known medical effects of aluminium from all sources.

Dioxins

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department is carrying out or funding about the effects of paper and similar products containing dioxins on the health of people.

Mr. Freeman: None. Research in Sweden has shown that levels present in those products are extremely low and are likely to present a negligible risk to health. However, the Department's committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment has been asked to advise on the possible health effects from dioxins.

Cook-chill Food

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on what date the Yorkshire regional health authority determined to introduce cook-chill catering in hospitals throughout the region;

(2) on what date members of staff of the Yorkshire regional health authority were informed that a policy decision had been made to introduce cook-chill catering in hospitals throughout the region.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The decision to introduce cook-chill catering into hospitals within Yorkshire region was taken at the regional health authority meeting on 24 March 1988. Information about the decision and its implementation was formally communicated to Yorkshire district health authorities and the media the same day. Similar information was conveyed to staff in the region in the RHA's newspaper "Health View", April 1988 edition.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospitals in the Yorkshire region currently operational, or in the process of construction, have facilities to receive and distribute cook-chill food.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The proposed new Halifax district general hospital, all hospitals within the Wakefield and Dewsbury boundaries, all hospitals administrated by Bradford health authority with the exception of the Bradford royal infirmary, St. Luke's hospital and Linfield mount hospital, the Alfred Bean hospital, Driffield and the Brumby hospital, Scunthorpe.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which cook-chill installations currently in operation within the National Health Service contravene his Department's 1980 guidelines.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I expect health authorities to satisfy themselves that cook-chill installations all conform to my Department's cook-chill guidelines.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if facilities exist to ensure it is possible for the requirement of the Yorkshire health authority's expert group that all cook-chill food must be served within 15 minutes of reheating to be met following the proposed introduction of cook-chill catering in Wakefield's hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I understand that the DHA's arrangements, using heated trolleys, would meet this requirement and I expect the DHA to ensure that performance is monitored.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 30 January to the hon. Member for Wakefield if, in the light of scientific and medical evidence of the potential importance of listeria monocytogenes in cook-chill catering, he will now withdraw the 1980 guidelines prepared by the expert group.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 7 February 1989]: We remain quite satisfied that, provided the 1980 guidelines on cook-chill catering are followed, the food produced by this system will be safe.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his answer of 2 February to the hon. Member for Wakefield, he will list the published and unpublished papers on the safety of cook-chill and low temperature pathogens considered by his Department's expert group.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 7 February 1989]: The purpose of convening an expert group is to ensure a broad information base for decisions on the preparation of guidance. The group considered a wide range of information on the scientific basis of the cook-chill system from a variety of sources. It is not possible to compile a complete list of all material which members of the group will have taken into account when formulating the guidelines.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the evidence presented at a symposium on cook-chill catering at Danbury technical college held on 9 July 1988, by a consultant microbiologist at Plymouth health authority on the incidence of patients with listeriosis treated in Plymouth hospitals during 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 7 February 1989]: The evidence presented by a consultant microbiologist from Plymouth health authority at this symposium showed that all patients found to have listeriosis in Plymouth hospitals during 1987 and 1988 acquired this infection before their admission.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to give his replies to the questions tabled for priority written answer on 7 February and to which a holding reply was given relating to cook-chill catering and his Department's expert group, and to Plymouth.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I replied to the hon. Member today.

Hospice Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the funding of the pay award to nurses working in the hospice movement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1988-89 the Government made available to health authorities an additional £5·5 million to meet the costs of the nurses' clinical regrading exercise incurred by hospices and mainly charitable hospitals with which they had contractual commitment or to which they regularly gave financial support. This allocation was made because of the exceptional nature of the increase in pay costs and about one quarter of it was expected to go to hospices.

That sum is being carried forward to 1989-90, and increased by 5 per cent. The Government have not included any further provision in the additional funds being made available in respect of the 1989 nurses' pay award, but health authorities may wish to provide extra financial support from the very significant overall increase in financial resources at their disposal in 1989-90.

My Department has asked for more information to be collected on the general pattern of financial support of hospices by health authorities and will consider the need for any further action in the light of this.

Chief Nursing Officer (Letter)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter sent by the chief nursing officer to all district and regional nursing offices on 18 January.

Mr. Freeman: I shall be placing copies of the letter and accompanying paper in the Library.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the consequences on employment and pay scales for nurses resulting from the guidelines on nursing contained in the letter sent from the chief nursing officer to all district and regional nursing offices on 18 January.

Mr. Freeman: We do not envisage that there would be any consequences on employment and pay scales for nurses arising from this letter.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the purpose and status of the letter sent by the chief nursing officer to all regional and district nursing officers on the role of nurses.

Mr. Freeman: The purpose of the letter on nursing routines and improving efficiency, which was sent by the Chief Nursing Officer and chairman of the standing nursing and midwifery advisory committee at the specific request of members to regional and district nursing officers and to the chief nursing officers of special health authorities, was to encourage local nursing and midwifery advisory committees to study the use of some routine nursing practices with a view to considering whether they were still relevant in their local circumstances. They were asked to take whatever action they considered necessary to develop innovative ideas to increase the efficiency of effectiveness of nursing care, so that unnecessary practices can be eliminated, releasing nurses to provide a quality service which not only benefits patients but provides increased job satisfaction for nursing staff.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response there has been to the letter sent on 18 January to all regional and district nursing officers from the Chief Nursing Officer about the role of nurses.

Mr. Freeman: Some nursing officers have already replied in a positive way indicating the initiatives and developments they are undertaking.

Sickle Cell Anaemia and Thalassaemia

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, North, Official Report, 9 February, column 802, if he will review his decision not to include a question on local funding arrangements in his Department's questionnaire to all district health authorities on screening and counselling for sickle cell anaemia and thalassaemia.

Mr. Freeman: The questionnaires were issued to district health authorities on 22 June 1988 and the Department is currently analysing their responses. The need to see further information will be considered in the light of this analysis.

Listeria

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will detail the number of cases of United Kingdom produced cheeses in which listeria infection has been identified over the past 12 months; if he will express that number as a proportion of the total United Kingdom cheese production over the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 16 February 1989]: One case of listeriosis associated with United Kingdom produced cheese has been reported to the Public Health Laboratory Service in the past 12 months. Cheese production in the United Kingdom in 1987, the last year for which figures are available centrally, totalled 263,900 tonnes.

There has been a variety of published evidence indicating the risk associated with both unpasteurised and pasteurised soft cheeses. In particular, I draw the hon. Member's attention to the "Report of the WHO Informal Working Group on Foodborne Listeriosis", Geneva 15-19 February 1988 and "Occurrence in the UK of Listeria species in Raw Chicken and Soft Cheeses" published in the International Journal of Food Microbiology 1988 vol. 6. However, as indicated in his public statement on 10 February 1989, the Government's Chief Medical Officer has recently been taking further expert advice on the risks.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of listeriosis have been attributed to (a) unpasteurised milk, (b) unpasteurised milk products, (c) pasteurised milk, and (d) pasteurised milk products in each of the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 16 February 1989]: Confirmed reports to the Public Health Laboratory Service show that in England and Wales there have been two cases of listeriosis associated with products made with unpasteurised milk, one in 1986 and one in 1988. In both cases, the milk was heated beyond pasteurisation temperatures during the manufacturing process. There have been no reports of listeriosis attributed to either pasteurised or unpasteurised milk, or to products made with pasteurised milk.

Cheese

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many instances have been notified to his Department of poisoning caused through the consumption of contaminated soft cheese or unpasteurised milk during each of the last three years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 16 February 1989]: Confirmed cases of food poisoning associated with the consumption of soft cheese and unpasteurised milk reported to the Public Health Laboratory Service in the years from 1986-88 are as follows:

	Unpasteurised milk	Soft cheese
1986	347	1
1987	366	—
1988	[1]22	1

[1] Provisional.

There has been a variety of published evidence indicating the risk associated with both unpasteurised and pasteurised soft cheeses. In particular, I would draw the hon. Member's attention to the "Report of the WHO Informal Working Group on Foodborne Listeriosis", Geneva 15-19 February 1988 and "Occurrence in the United Kingdom of Listeria species in Raw Chicken and Soft Cheeses" published in the International Journal of Food Microbiology 1988 volume 6. However, as he indicated in his public statement on 10 February 1989, the Government's Chief Medical Officer has recently been taking further expert advice on the risks.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any evidence of the incidence of (a) salmonella enteritidis, and (b) any other strain of salmonella in cooked prawns.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 23 January 1989]: Studies on imported cooked prawns by the Public Health Laboratory Service between 1976 and 1986 show that a small number of the samples tested contained isolations of a wide variety of serotypes of salmonella. Any action on such imported produce is a matter for the port health authorities. In 1986 and 1988 there were no reported outbreaks of food poisoning associated with cooked prawns. In 1987 there were two reported outbreaks possibly associated with this food.

Radiated Food

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to bring in legislation requiring all radiated food to be clearly marked.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply.

Ministers have agreed for advice from officials on the regulatory framework, including labelling that would be necessary for irradiation of food on general sale to be permitted in this country. This advice is expected shortly.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Poultry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he now intends to ban the use of animal protein, other than fish meal, for feeding poultry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) on 19 January at column 314-15, I have no plans to do so. My officials have routinely inspected all protein processing plants to monitor their compliance with the Diseases of Animals (Protein Processing) Order 1981 which requires the manufacture of a salmonella-free product. A new statutory provision to stop the supply of salmonella-contaminated animal protein has been introduced recently and further control measures are under consideration.

Research and Medical Staff

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many research medical or scientific staff in his Department with expertise in (a) egg production, (b) milk and cheese production, (c) food poisoning and (d) consumer demand there were in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 February 1989]: Details are as follows:

	1979	1988
(a) Egg production	418	325
(b) Milk and cheese production	473	377

(c) Questions relating to food poisoning are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

(d) Expertise in consumer demand is available widely in the Ministry for different commodities. Total staff numbers could not be ascertained without disproportionate cost.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ensure that British farmers receive the maximum allowable nationally funded element of the suckler cow premium once changes to the beef variable premium scheme have been agreed by the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government are considering the appropriate rate for the suckler cow subsidy in the light of the changes being made to the beef regime and will announce the rate in good time before the start of the 1989 scheme on 15 June.

Beef (Special Premium)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the method of payment of the special premium which is to be introduced to replace the beef variable premium scheme;

(2) what male animals will qualify for the special premium after abolition of the beef variable premium scheme; and how the numbers so entitled will be verified.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As a result of the agreement reached by the EC Council of Agriculture Ministers at its meeting on 23-24 January 1989, the United Kingdom's beef variable premium is to be replaced by a premium on male cattle paid at a rate of £28·42 per head up to a maximum of 90 head per producer.

The premium is payable once only in the lifetime of each animal. We have the option to pay the premium either on animals retained by the producer on his holding, or on animals sold by producers for slaughter whether sold direct to slaughterhouses or through liveweight auction markets. The Government are currently considering which of these two systems should be applied and the appropriate administrative arrangements for ensuring compliance with the 90 head limit. The legal texts implementing the arrangements have yet to be agreed and adopted by the Council. The intention is that the new arrangements should come into effect on 3 April 1989.

Beef (Hormone Implants)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the import from the United States of America of beef from animals where growth was artificially induced by hormone implants.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The import of beef from the United States of America has now been prohibited because the US authorities are not complying with the European Community's requirement that beef imports should be certified as derived from animals not treated with hormone growth promoters. The Government have consistently opposed the ban on hormones because we believe that it has no scientific basis. We are continuing to work for a solution to the trade difficulties with the United States which it has caused.

Universities (Research)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether those working in universities on research commissioned by his Ministry are required to sign a declaration under the Official Secrets Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This is not our normal practice, though it may be considered necessary if the work involves access to sensitive or commercial information.

Cheese

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) on what evidence he indicated that he was considering a ban on unpasteurised milk cheese production; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what evidence he has that cheese produced from unpasteurised milk is less safe than that produced from pasteurised milk; and if he will make a statement;

(3) which representatives of the dairy products industry he consulted prior to his statements concerning soft cheese; and if he will indicate the company or organisation with which each is associated.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the consultation document which I shall shortly place in the Library of the House.

Fylde Coast (Sea Outfall)

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the frequency and nature of contacts between his Ministry and North West Water in connection with the proposed construction of a long sea outfall from the Fylde coast.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Officials were informed of North West Water's work at an early stage. Before plans were drawn up MAFF was asked to provide information about fisheries in the Fylde coast area. After consultation with local fisheries organisations this information was provided with a view to seeking to ensure that interference with fisheries was avoided. MAFF has since sought from North West Water information about the possible locations of the discharge and the nature and likely effect of the effluent. The Ministry has now been formally consulted under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 on the proposed outfall.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how his Ministry intends to obtain sufficient baseline ecological data to enable it to form a view as to the necessity for consent limits for the proposed long sea outfall for the Fylde coast.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department undertakes a continuing programme of routine monitoring of contaminant levels in fish and shellfish. In addition, information would be obtained, as appropriate, from work undertaken by other relevant organisations.

Shellfish

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information is held by his Ministry on the virological quality of shellfish harvested in Morecambe bay and adjoining coastlines;

(2) what information is held by his Ministry on the bacteriological quality of shellfish harvested in Morecambe bay and adjoining coastlines.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Ministry is aware of the status of the shellfisheries as determined by the environmental health departments of the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is held by his Ministry on the chemical quality of shellfish harvested in Morecambe bay and adjoining coastlines, with particular reference to compounds identified as black, grey or red list.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Both shellfish and finfish from the Morecambe bay area are sampled as part of the Ministry's national monitoring programme. Samples of the edible mussel Mytilus edulis were collected in 1985 from Morecambe and Barrow-in-Furness and analysed for the metals mercury, cadmium, lead, copper and zinc, the pesticides HCH, HCB, dieldrin and DDT and PCBs. In addition a sample of brown shrimp (crangon crangon) was obtained from the Lune Deeps area in 1982 and analysed for metals.

Using the guidelines listed in appendix 3 of the MAFF aquatic environment monitoring report No. 16, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, contaminant levels found would not be considered to be elevated in any of these samples.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the potential for hydro-transportation of sediment-associated viruses from the proposed long sea outfall for the Fylde coast to shellfisheries in Morecambe bay and the adjoining coastlines.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This is one of the factors that the Ministry will take into account in providing comments on the proposal under the terms of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Relevant to the Ministry's consideration will be the design characteristics of the proposed outfall and the location of the shellfisheries concerned.

Meat (Transhipment)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are taken by his Ministry, and port or local council officials to ensure that meat landed in Great Britain for onward transhipment to a third country is not sold for use in Great Britain.

Mr. Donald Thompson: All meat entering Great Britain, whether intended for consumption here or for transhipment to a third country, must comply with our animal and public health requirements. There are no health reasons, therefore, to require that meat in transit is not diverted for sale in Great Britain.

Feedstuffs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to introduce statutory measures for the monitoring of feedstuffs which contain non-animal products.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As part of the further measures to combat the salmonella contamination of animal feed I intend to introduce statutory monitoring requirements for complete animal feedingstuffs.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ban the importation of salmonella-contaminated feedstuffs.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A very small proportion of compound animal feedingstuffs is imported. The majority of imports are of the raw materials including animal protein for incorporation into feedingstuffs. The importation of animal protein is already prohibited except under the authority of a licence. These licensing arrangements are being strengthened to further reduce the risk of contaminated products entering the country.

Fisheries (Research)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place the details of near market research projects in fisheries in the Library.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I will place in the Library the list of projects at Torry research station which we have identified for termination unless industry funding can be arranged. These projects are primarily concerned with the development of new products and processes. We will be continuing to fund work at Torry which is needed in support of Government policies for food safety and quality.

No near market projects are being carried out at my Department's other fisheries laboratories.

Veterinary Officers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many veterinary officers he has employed in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of veterinary officers permanently employed in all grades of the Ministry's state veterinary service throughout England, Scotland and Wales for each of the last 10 years is:

	Number
1979	580·5
1980	578·5
1981	563·5
1982	557·0
1983	549·0
1984	539·5
1985	527·5
1986	506·5
1987	464·5
1988	444·5

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the recruiting of staff with veterinary qualifications to his Ministry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Ministry regularly recruits, via the Civil Service Commission, staff with veterinary qualifications for posts in England, Scotland and Wales.

Staff with veterinary qualifications who are recruited into the Ministry must be members of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons.

Listeria

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has of listeria being passed to poultry via contaminated feedstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Clinical listeriosis in poultry is extremely rare. I know of no evidence indicating that listeriosis has been passed to poultry from contaminated feedingstuffs.

Salmonella Enteritidis

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many or what proportion of birds are monitored when laying flocks of poultry are investigated for salmonella enteritidis.

Mr. Donald Thompson: At present, a statistical sampling technique is used to detect salmonella enteritidis in poultry which ensures a very high confidence level of detecting the disease. Statutory provisions for the bacteriological monitoring of poultry laying flocks are to be introduced shortly.

Livestock Stress

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been undertaken by his Department into the possible connection between livestock stress and vulnerability to infection.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food funds research at the Institute of Animal Health on the influence of social and other stress on immunosuppression in poultry vaccinated against Marek's disease virus, and on the effects of stress in early life on the incidence and pathogenesis of infectious stunting syndrome in poultry.

In addition, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food funds programmes of research into the causes and effects of stress in farm animals and its objective assessment, and into the causes/pathogenesis and immune responses to infections. Connections between stress and vulnerability to infections are continually kept in mind and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will commission further investigations as considered necessary.

Southwold Harbour

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects his Department to resolve its consideration of the navigation and coast protection interests relating to the repair scheme for Southwold harbour put forward by Waveney district council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: These proposals raise questions of navigational safety which still have to be resolved. I understand that Waveney district council is seeking expert advice, which it is hoped will help to resolve the difficulties.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to reduce the incidence of cross-infection in slaughterhouses.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Statutory hygiene controls, enforced by local authorities, apply at all stages of meat production to reduce the risk of cross contamination. My Department is continuously seeking ways of further reducing the incidence of cross infection.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations have been received from EEC inspectors regarding the conditions in British slaughterhouses over the last two years; and what response has been made to these representations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The reports made by EC commission inspectors on individual plants are confidential. They are discussed with the inspectors, with the local authority concerned and with the plant management and any corrective action which is necessary is put in hand.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to introduce legislation to require that all milk containing bovine somatotropin is clearly marked.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. All milk contains traces of bovine somatotropin.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Vietnamese Refugees

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the agreement by the United States of America, Canada and Australia to admit more Vietnamese refugees, he will now confirm the agreement to increase the United Kingdom quota announced on 22 December 1988; what the arrangements will be for the increased numbers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have been encouraged by the responses to our call for a new international effort to take more Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong. We are now considering whether we can confirm the decision announced on 22 December 1988.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is to be taken in respect of Cynthia Wright, a foreign national living in the London borough of Brent, in respect of her visitor's visa which expired 14 years ago.

Mr. Renton: Consideration is being given to whether the original deportation order should now be enforced.

Commonwealth Refugees

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Commonwealth refugees have been assisted under the terms of section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: Grant under section 11 of the local Government Act 1966 is paid to local authorities only in respect of the employment of staff. No information is available on the numbers or status of persons assisted by such staff, though some will have been refugees.

Police (Assaults)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has concerning the total number and category of assaults perpetrated upon serving police officers in each different force and in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available;

(2) what information he has concerning the total number of days lost through absence on sickness leave following assaults upon serving police officers in each different police force in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available;

(3) if he will make a statement summarising his Department's achievements since 1979 in giving protection to serving police officers against assaults.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There has been no central record of assaults on police officers or of sick leave following assaults. Arrangements have, however, been made for information relating to assaults to be collected in 1989 and subsequent years. This will be published in the annual reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary.

Cheshire Constabulary

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current establishment of the Cheshire constabulary in terms of (a) police officers and (b) civilian personnel; and what was the establishment in 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

Establishment (at 31 December)

	Police	Civilian personnel
		full time	part time
1979	1,805	378	129
1988	[1]1,860	499	129

[1] Will increase to 1,868 from 1 April 1989.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the expenditure upon the Cheshire constabulary from (a) central Government and (b) Cheshire county council; and what were the comparable figures in (i) real terms and (ii) cash terms in 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

Cheshire Constabulary—Expenditure 1979-80 and 1987-88

	1979-80 cash	1979-80 real terms (1987-88 price base)	1987-88 (provisional) cash
Net expenditure (relevant for grant)	20,008,493	35,130,353	47,267,338
Other expenditure	288,843	507,143	674,000
Net revenue expenditure	20,297,336	35,637,496	47,941,338
Expenditure met by police specific grant[1]	10,004,246	17,565,177	24,106,342
Expenditure met by Government block grant and by the rates[2]	10,293,090	18,072,319	23,834,996

[1] Police specific grant paid directly by the Home Office was at 50 per cent. until 31 March 1986 and at 51 per cent. since 1 April 1986.
[2] The expenditure met by Cheshire country council is made up by a contribution through block grant by the Department of the Environment together with the local ratepayers contribution. Through police specific grant and block grant it is estimated that the Government contributed about 62·9 per cent. of total expenditure on the police in Cheshire in 1987-88. Comparable information is not available for 1979-80.

Pensioners

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider creating a standing committee of representatives of the pensioners' movement together with the Minister and senior civil servants dealing with the areas mainly affecting the retired in matters for which he is responsible.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 17 February 1989 at column 404.

Drink-driving

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in rank order, starting with the police force with the highest number of breath tests, the number of breath tests administered in each police force area, the percentage of positive tests and the number of accidents in each police force area expressed per head of population for the Christmas period 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions for drink-driving offences were made during the Christmas period in the Bolton area, for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 31 January 1989]: The information available centrally is given in the table; corresponding figures for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Comprehensive information is not collected on the date of offence but sample inquiries indicate that court proceedings for drink-driving offences take on average, throughout England and Wales, about three months from offence to completion.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Self-employment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total growth in self-employment since 1979.

Mr. Major: Between June 1979 and September 1988 the number of self-employed people in Great Britain rose by 60 per cent. to nearly 3 million.

EC Budget

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions and how much money cumulatively has been transferred each year from one chapter of European Community budget appropriations to another by decision of the European Parliament against the wishes of the Council.

Mr. Brooke: This information could not be made available without disproportionate cost. However, unsigned explanatory memoranda are provided in respect of all transfer proposals and, following a request last year by the Select Committee on European Legislation, the memoranda indicate the positions taken by the Council and the European Parliament.

Civil Servants (Incentives)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about incentive schemes for civil servants.

Mr. Brooke: We have introduced a number of schemes in the Civil Service for encouraging and rewarding high performance.

At senior levels, additional discretionary awards can be paid to grade 2 and 3 staff for sustained high performance. Below this, new flexible pay arrangements which include provision for performance related pay are in place for grades 5-7, professional and scientific grades and staff in the Inland Revenue.

Performance pay is also a feature of the provisional agreements that the Treasury has recently reached with the National Union of Civil and Public Servants and the Civil and Public Services Association. If those provisional agreements are endorsed, nearly all the non-industrial Civil Service will be covered by new performance-related pay schemes.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate of the cost of private medical insurance tax relief for each of the five years following its introduction;

(2) how many elderly persons would be eligible for tax relief as private income; what is his estimate of the number who currently hold private medical insurance; and how many more he estimates will take out health insurance under this new scheme;

(3) what proportion of the cost of private medical insurance tax relief he estimates will be paid out to those who already have private medical insurance;

(4) what proportion of the cost of private medical insurance tax relief he estimates will go to taxpayers paying tax at 40 per cent.;

(5) how many persons over 60 years have private medical insurance; and what is his estimate of how many would be entitled to tax reliefs under his proposals;

(6) what is the estimate of the average cost of tax relief at the top rate for the typical private medical insurance policy for a person at the age of (a) 60 years, (b) 70 years and (c) 75 years.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the cost of tax relief on premiums for health insurance for those aged 60 years or over under the National Health Service White Paper;

(2) if he will estimate the average cost per year of tax relief as proposed in the National Health Service White Paper for a person over 60 years who has private health insurance.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the deadweight cost of giving income tax relief from April 1990 on medical insurance premiums for those aged 60 years and over.

85. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates the cost to be of introducing tax relief on private health insurance for the elderly, as proposed in "Working for Patients," Cm. 555.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 6 February 1989, 9 February 1989, 16 February 1989 and 17 February 1989]: Estimates of the cost of this relief will be announced in the 1989-90 Financial Statement and Budget Report. The number of people affected and the average value of the relief will depend on the precise details of the scheme, which are under consideration.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Kampuchea

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, further to its recent decision to share in funding projects supported by Christian Aid in Kampuchea, the Government will now consider substantial reconstruction and development aid for Kampuchea.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the right hon. Member for the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 20 February. The decision to support projects in Cambodia proposed by voluntary agencies, including Christian Aid, does not affect our policy of not giving Government-to-Government aid to the regime in Phnom Penh.

Development (Education)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the amount spent on education about development, including separate figures for internal expenditure and grants to outside bodies, for each year since 1979, in constant 1988 prices, and in current prices.

Mr. Eggar: The Overseas Development Administration has a programme of press, publications and other information activities about Britain's official aid programme. The cost, excluding staff and general administrative costs, for each year since 1979 was:

£ thousand

Financial year	Current prices	Constant 1987 prices
1979-80	110	193
1980-81	130	193
1981-82	143	193

1983-84	159	192
1984-85	176	202
1985-86	208	226
1986-87	207	218
1987-88	265	265

Expenditure on grants to non-governmental organisations for their development activities was:

£ thousand

Calendar year	Current prices	Constant 1987 prices
1979	385	698
1980	450	682
1981	331	450
1982	154	195
1983	158	189
1984	104	119

1986	121	126
1987	141	141

Note: 1988 prices are not yet available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Footwear

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the EEC market share of footwear imports from Taiwan and South Korea, for each of the last five years; and what have been the corresponding figures for the EEC market share of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: The EC market share of footwear imports from the United Kingdom was 1 per cent. for each of the years 1983 to 1987.

Figures for the EC market share of footwear imports from Taiwan and South Korea are available for 1986 and 1987 and are given in the table:

	Imports to rest of the EC from the United Kingdom	Total EC market[2]	Imports from the United Kingdom as a proportion of total EC market	Imports from South Korea as a proportion of total EC market	Imports from Taiwan as a proportion of total EC market
	Million pairs	Million pairs	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.

Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what will be the scope of the consultations he will have before further descriptions of institution are specified under section 174 of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 as educational establishments for the purposes of parts I and II of that Act; and what educational organisations will be consulted over the substance of the order to be made;

(2) what consultations his Department is having with educational organisations with a view to formulating advice as to what further descriptions of institution it would be appropriate to specify as educational establishments for the purposes of parts I and II of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

Mr. Forth: We are giving careful consideration to the question of which educational establishments should, in addition to schools, benefit from the limited exceptions to copyright to be provided by the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988. It is our intention to consult both copyright interests and educational bodies before finalising the terms of any order under section 174. I hope to be in a position to do this very soon.

Paper Products

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to make statutory the provisions of the good manufacturing practice guide for soft tissue paper products.

Mr. Atkins: I have no plans to do so.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consider initiating research into ways of curbing the increased consumption of paper products because of the environmental implications of production and disposal thereof.

Mr. Forth: I see no reason to do so.

Clothing Industry

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from the knitwear industry about the need to extend the multi-fibre arrangement after it expires; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I met representatives of the knitwear industry on 31 October 1988 to discuss the future of the multi-fibre arrangement and other matters of interest to them. Several hon. Members have also drawn to my attention a statement on this subject issued by the Knitting Industries' Federation in co-operation with other textiles associations. I explained to the industry, and to the House during the debate on the MFA on 9 December 1988, Official Report, columns 553-618, that although the United Kingdom, as part of the European Community, is already committed to examining the "modalities" for returning trade in textiles and clothing to GATT rules, the Community has continued to make clear in negotiations that any such return must be accompanied by a strengthening of those rules and include liberalisation of trade by all countries, including the better of developing countries. This remains the United Kingdom's and the Community's objective in negotiations.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will raise in the European Council of Ministers the possibility of maintaining some cross-border scrutiny of knitwear moving within the European Community after 1992, so as to maintain statistical information on imports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: A proposal for an EC Council regulation, which sets out a revised methodology for the collection of trade statistics between member states of the European Community after 1992 to replace the current procedure based on Customs documentation, has been prepared by the EC Commission and will be considered by EC Ministers over the coming months.

Trade statistics will continue to be collected both for intra-EC trade and for trade with third countries. But the level of detail for commodity classification will be the subject of related legislation and will be discussed by a working party of officials from member states later this year. The Government are seeking to ensure that the collection of these statistics does not impose unnecessary burdens on business involved in trade between member states.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will raise in the European Council of Ministers the possibility of permitting the expression "Made in the European Community" to be attached to garments made in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: No. It is already possible to do so.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received from the knitwear industry regarding (a) the general state of trade at present and (b) the imports of garments from China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My hon. Friend the Minister for Trade and officials have received various representations from the knitwear industry about concerns on the current general state of trade and imports of garments from China.

Negotiations between China and the European Community for a new bilateral textiles and clothing agreement under the multi-fibre arrangement were concluded in December 1988. The text of the agreement reached is set out in the annex to the Council decision 88/656/EEC which is published in the official journal of the European Communities, dated 31 December 1988, reference OJL 318, which is available in the Library of the House.

Full details of the application of the agreement in each member state, in the form of an EEC implementing regulation, are still awaited from the Commission. The agreement has been provisionally applied by the Council of Ministers from 1 January 1989. The agreement will be submitted to the Council for final approval in due course.

Betting

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will initiate an inquiry into the concentration of power in the betting industry.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 17 February 1989]: It falls to the Director General of Fair Trading in the first instance to keep competition in the United Kingdom economy under review. I understand that he is continuing to monitor developments in the betting industry under the competition legislation for which he is responsible.

Remote-sensing Satellite (Purchase)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the decision on purchase of a remote-sensing satellite, the polar platform to be taken by the European Space Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 17 February 1989]: The European Space Agency and its member states are currently examining which configuration the polar platform (an important element in the Columbus programme) should have. Studies have been conducted by British Aerospace and Matra on the basis of two alternative concepts. The merits, and costs, of each are now being reviewed. The ESA hopes to be able to take a decision at the meeting of its council on 13 and 14 March.

Earth Observation Data Centre

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the implications for the British space industry of the development of the earth observation data centre as a result of the ESA recommendation on the polar platform order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 17 February 1989]: The Government are supporting the creation of the earth observation data centre at Farnborough because of the key role that it will play in the progressive commercial development of the United Kingdom's capabilities in this field. We expect that the private sector will, in due course, take over the EODC as a wholly commercial facility. The centre will receive data from various satellites, and not merely from the polar platform. But it remains a United Kingdom objective to achieve a polar platform series which will facilitate effective commercialisation.

PRIME MINISTER

Scotland

Q22. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Scotland.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply. My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

Whales

Q41. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise, when next she meets the Prime Minister of Japan, the issue of Japanese whaling operations in the Antarctic.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend will not be meeting the Japanese Prime Minister immediately, but the Government have expressed their views firmly on the current operations to the Japanese Government both directly and through the International Whaling Commission and have asked that the operations cease.

Hillmorton, Rugby

Q62. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Hillmorton, Rugby.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.
My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

Bristol, East

Q143. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Bristol, East.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.
My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Q149. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to meet the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.
My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

Research Bases

Mr. Warren: To ask the Prime Minister if she will review the operation and current value of the Rothschild principle adopted in 1972 establishing the relationship between Government Departments and research bases; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.
The Government reviewed this matter in 1987. I refer my hon. Friend to paragraph 21 of the White Paper on civil research and development (Cm 185) which the Government published in response to the First Report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology.

Engagements

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 February.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 February.

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 February.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 February.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 February.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 February.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 February.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 February.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

This morning my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister was in Germany for an Anglo-German summit. This afternoon she is attending the memorial service in Belfast for those who died in the air crash at Kegworth.

University Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give the figures for university academic pay increases for the years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 and the comparative figures for the police, doctors and dentists, local authority clerical staff, National Health Service administrative and clerical, primary and secondary teachers and university clericals.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

The information is set out in the table below.

Percentage settlements	Period 1 August to 31 July in
	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89

[3] Equates to 16·4 per cent. over full year.
[4] Not yet available.
[5] The overall pay bill in the financial year 1989-90 will rise by about 7·5 per cent. as a result of changes made to the structure of teachers' pay in 1987 and 1988.

DEFENCE

Rear-Admiral Sir Anthony Miers

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is going to carry out an internal inquiry into the actions of the late Rear-Admiral Sir Anthony Miers, VC, DSO, when in command of the submarine Torbay in the Mediterranean in 1941.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. I am advised that all records relating to this case are already accessible to the public.

Condor Base (Hospital Facilities)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on proposals to develop hospital facilities at Condor Base, Arbroath.

Mr. Neubert: As stated on 6 May 1986 at column 102 of the Official Report, we have made part of the Royal Marine base, Condor at Arbroath available to the United States Navy for development of facilities for storage of medical supplies and equipment in peacetime and to accommodate a hospital unit, which would be activated in the event of war.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the complaints submitted to senior officers in the 10 military districts in the United Kingdom involved allegations of racial discrimination or abuse in the last five years.

Mr. Neubert: No complaints under section 181 of the Army Act 1955 involving racial discrimination or abuse are recorded as having been received at district level in the United Kingdom in the last five years.

United States Army (Munitions Store)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a list of the categories of munitions stored at the United States Army munitions store at Caerwent, Wales.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member by my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) on 9 May 1988 at column 1.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Opting-out)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he makes when deciding whether to allow a school to opt out of local education authority control of the extent to which the school may be seeking to avoid the consequences of local education authority rationalisation programmes.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend judges applications for a school to become grant maintained at the same time as he considers any parallel statutory proposals, for example, to close the school in question. In such circumstances, both proposals or sets of proposals will be considered on their merits and each will be evaluated against the other.

Teachers (Convictions)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report for each of the past 10 years and for each local education authority the number of serving teachers convicted of a criminal offence, separately distinguishing the type of offence, including those of a sexual nature.

Mr. Butcher: This information is not available.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how his Department conveys information to local education authorities regarding serving teachers convicted of a sexual offence.

Mr. Butcher: When a serving teacher is convicted of a criminal offence it is the responsibility of the chief officer of police for the area in which the offence is committed to report the conviction both to the teacher's employer and to the Department. So it is not primarily a matter for the Department to inform the local education authority.

All cases reported to the Department by the police are, however, considered to determine whether action by the Secretary of State under the power conferred on him by the Education (Teachers) Regulations 1982 to bar or restrict a person's employment as a teacher is necessary, and in the case of a serving teacher the Department routinely informs his employer of the outcome of that consideration.

Academic Staff

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science and if he will set out in the Official Report details of intakes and outflows of full-time wholly university financed academic staff from each year from 1979-80 to 1986-87.

Mr. Jackson: The information is shown in the table.

Intakes and outflows of full-time wholly university financed academic staff

Great Britain

[1] Figures exclude transfers between universities.

"Intake" covers new recruits to university service or staff returning after a period in other employment. "Outflow" covers members of staff leaving university service.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will give further details of the criteria which he will adopt in deciding upon an application for grant-maintained status from a school which is full but for which a section 12 closure procedure is proposed as part of a wider secondary review arising from falling rolls and surplus places in other schools; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend will consider proposals by a local education authority for the closure or reorganisation of a school in accordance with the Education Act 1980 at the same time as he considers any proposals by the governing body of the school to become grant-maintained under the Education Reform Act 1988; but he will determine the latter proposals first. He will consider and decide all such proposals on their merits, taking all relevant factors into account.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will set out in tabular form the progress, since the initial resolution of the governors, of each individual school which has expressed the desire to his Department to transfer to grant-maintained status; and how many firm inquiries have been made to his Department prior to an initial resolution of governors or a signed requisition by parents under the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department continues to receive a large number of inquiries from parents and governors about making an application for grant-maintained status. It receives formal notification of only two stages of such an application:

> the result of a ballot of parents; and > where the parents have voted in favour of proceeding with an application, the subsequent publication of formal proposals by the governing body.

The Education Reform Act 1988 requires the Secretary of State in due course to determine any such proposals. The table shows the stage which individual schools have reached:

School and LEA	Ballot result "Yes/No"	Proposals published
Skegness Grammar School, Lincs	—	Yes
Audenshaw County High School, Tameside	—	Yes

Droylsden County High School, Tameside	No	—
Siddal Moor High School, Rochdale	No	—
Hadham Hall School, Herts	No	—

In addition, I understand that the following schools have received a request from parents or passed governors' resolutions requiring that a ballot be held:

Hindley Park High School, Wigan

Gaynes School, Havering

Bacup and Rawtenstall Grammar School, Lancashire

Weald of Kent Grammar School For Girls, Kent

St. Francis Xavier's School, Liverpool

Beechen Cliff School, Avon

Claremont High School, Brent

St. Helena School, Derbyshire

Ribston Hall High School, Gloucestershire

Marling Grammar School, Gloucestershire

Stroud Girls' High School, Gloucestershire

Cardinal Vaughan Memorial School, ILEA

Knowsley Ruffwood Comprehensive School, Knowsley

Long Field High School, Leicestershire

Kettering Boys' School, Northamptonshire

The Guildford County School, Surrey

Secondary School Teachers

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many vacancies exist for secondary school teachers in Greater London.

Mr. Butcher: The latest vacancy figures, which are collected annually, relate to January 1988, when the total number of secondary teacher vacancies in Greater London was 660.

Teacher Shortages

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has regarding shortages of science and craft, design and technology teachers in Greater London.

Mr. Butcher: In general, teacher shortages are at a higher level in London and the south-east, partly reflecting the higher costs in housing in these areas. The number of unfilled posts reported by LEAs in maths, physics, chemistry and CDT in Greater London over the past two years was as follows:

	1987	1988
Maths	90	71
Physics	31	21
Chemistry	23	12
CDT	75	48

My Department and the teaching as a career unit are in regular touch with LEAs about measures to increase teacher supply

Further Education

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how further education courses provided at institutes within the new polytechnics and colleges funding council sector will be funded for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Education Reform Act 1988 places a duty on local education authorities to secure provision for their area of adequate facilities for further education. Consistent with this, the local authority associations have encouraged their member authorities to maintain support for further education courses, including those of national significance, provided now by polytechnics and colleges in the new sector. Practical steps are also being taken by the LEAs collectively to consider the reform of the existing arrangements under which local education authorities can mutually recoup the costs of places on the FE courses they provide which are taken up by students whose homes are in the area of other authorities.

The Government have accordingly decided that the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council will not generally be put in funds to support further education provided in the institutions under its control. However, exceptionally for 1989-90 alone, we have put the PCFC in funds to support further education courses running now in the voluntary and other colleges currently grant-aided by the Department of Education and Science. This is in order to allow these institutions time to find local authorities to support the further education courses they provide.

Student Fees

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines have been issued about fees for students on courses of further and higher education in the academic year 1989-90.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: For the academic year 1989-90 I have indicated the following maximum amounts for the reimbursement of fees through the awards system for home students and for students from other European Community countries on full-time courses (fees for 1988-89 are shown in brackets):

Postgraduate courses	1,890	(1,800)
First degree and diploma courses	607	(578)

In relation to other courses, I understand that the Council of Local Education Authorities has recommended fees for 1989-90 for home and EC students as follows (fees for 1988-89 are shown in brackets):

	Higher Education		Further Education
Full-time	£609	(£578)	£429	(£390)
Sandwich/block-release (weekly rate)	£16·80	(£16·00)	£12·00	(£11·00)
Part-time per course hour	57p	(54p)	41p	(37p)
Part-time annual fee for one session per week	£60·90	(£57·80)	£43·00	(£39·00)

The Government's policy is that students from outside the European Community should pay fees that reflect the full cost of their education here. It is for the institutions and local authorities to determine the actual fees to be charged to overseas students in the light of this policy and of their own circumstances.

TRANSPORT

Railways (Electrification)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has yet received British Rail's submission for the electrification of the cross city line from Lichfield to Redditch via Birmingham New Street.

Mr. Portillo: No I have not.

Pensioners

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider creating a standing committee of representatives of the pensioners' movement together with the Minister and senior civil servants dealing with the areas mainly affecting the retired in transport.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on Friday 17 February at column 404.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning route one of the proposed Channel tunnel high speed rail link.

Mr. Portillo: We have received a large number of representations about all of BR's route proposals for this link.

Buses (Greater London)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to establish a licensing and regulatory body for bus services in Greater London which has no direct or indirect commercial interest in the operation of such services.

Mr. Portillo: London Regional Transport has a statutory duty to provide or secure the provision of public transport services for London, and to consult the relevant authorities and persons when it proposes to introduce, vary or withdraw bus services. Operators of bus services other than these under the control of LRT must obtain a licence from the traffic commissioner, which is an independent statutory authority.

Lockerbie Air Disaster

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has raised aviation security aspects of the Lockerbie disaster with the International Civil Aviation Organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: On 15 and 16 February I attended a special ministerial meeting of the council of the International Civil Aviation Organisation in Montreal. The meeting was the result of a joint United Kingdom and United States initiative, to discuss aviation security following the Lockerbie disaster.

The meeting was successful. It was attended by Ministers (in most cases the Transport Minister) from 12 member states of the 33-strong ICAO council, and by senior officials from seven other member states. Our immediate objectives were all achieved; they were:

(i) to register concern at the sabotage of PAN AM 103,
(ii) to call upon states to ensure that existing international security standards were being fully implemented,
(iii) to gain agreement to the strengthening of the ICAO security secretariat, and
(iv) to set in progress work in ICAO under an eight-point plan to establish tighter standards to counter sabotage.

My eight-point plan calls for international action on the following:

(i) New standards for the screening of checked passengers' baggage both at check-in and when transferred between flights;
(ii) A requirement that airline baggage reconciliation procedures should be 100 per cent. reliable;
(iii) New higher standards for screening cargo and mail, including that placed on flights by courier companies;
(iv) New higher standards for controlling access to sensitive areas at airports, including searches of people and vehicles entering these areas and searches of aircraft, particularly for high risk flights;
(v) A new approach to the carriage of items which cannot be searched, such as radios, computers and other electronic and electric equipment that cannot be easily opened;
(vi) A new drive to develop equipment for the reliable detection of explosives and explosive devices; those countries with the scientific and industrial capabilities should now redouble efforts to develop equipment in this field;
(vii) Continuing consideration of proposals for building security into the design of aircraft, such as inexpensive modifications to make it harder to hide a bomb and easier for security staff to search cabins, toilets and galleys;
(viii) The strengthening of the powers and organisation of ICAO to enable it to play a more active part in implementing these new standards; this would include developing the provision of training for administrators and managers; the provision of advice to states on the formulation of aviation security regulations; the setting up of an inspectorate for the systematic checking of standards at airports.

A joint United Kingdom and United States resolution was unanimously agreed at the meeting. The resolution condemned the destruction of Pan American flight 103 on 21 December 1988 called upon states to intensify their efforts for the implementation of existing standards and set out a plan of action for ICAO embracing all the points in my eight-point plan.

Light Dues

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decisions he has taken concerning light dues in 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I am pleased to report that the general lighthouse authorities continue to make progress in containing and reducing their costs. This will permit a further reduction of just over 10 per cent. in the overall amount of light dues collected in the coming year; this includes the abolition of deck cargo dues. This means that light dues will be 40 per cent. lower in real terms than eight years ago.

I am grateful for the constructive comments received from bodies consulted about the possible reforms of light dues, which I announced on 7 November last. Some of these reforms, including a change from net to gross tonnage for assessment purposes, require further consideration before they are implemented, but I am able to announce the following changes effective from 1 April 1989:

(a) Abolition of deck cargo dues on foreign-going voyages, to bring foreign trade ships into line with those in the home trade. This will be particularly welcome to shipping engaged in container and other part-cargo traffic.

(b) A merging of the tariffs for home trade and foreign going ships based on a standard charge of £3·06 per 10 net registered tons up to a maximum of seven voyages. This represents a 2 per cent. cash reduction in the basic tariff.

(c) A new separate tariff for roll-on/roll-off ferries, which will be charged on the same number of voyages as other ships at the following rates: £3·06 per 10 net registered tons on the first 1,000 NRT and £6·12 per 10 NRT on any excess over 1,000 NRT. The objective here is to secure a modest increase in the very small contribution currently made by such vessels to the general lighthouse fund. The change will less than double the ferries' present contribution of around 1·5 per cent. to light dues.

Other minor changes will be introduced. The payment period for fishing vessel dues will be brought into line with the financial year, and a half-yearly charge will be introduced for this class. The concessionary light dues scale for visiting cruise ships will be terminated. A minimum payment of £25 per voyage will be introduced for vessels paying on a voyage basis. Home trade vessels will be given the option of paying light dues on no more than two voyages a month (currently three voyages). I am minded to extend this facility to foreign-owned ships in 1990 and at the same time to replace the present complex rules defining chargeable voyages in this sector.

These changes represent a continuing reduction of the burden of light dues combined with a first round of constructive reforms to simplify the light dues system. The necessary order will be laid shortly.

I have previously stated that the British Ports Federation is conducting a feasibility study into possible ways in which owners of pleasure crafts might contribute to the cost of lighthouse authorities. But, whatever the outcome of the feasibility study, I would not envisage any changes in 1989-90.

Aircraft Safety

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many tests have been conducted since 1986 in aircraft requiring certification in the United Kingdom to demonstrate the current requirement that all passengers and crew should be able to leave the aircraft through 50 per cent. of the exits in 90 seconds;

(2) how frequently examinations are conducted of civil aircraft on the British register to ensure compliance with the provision that a minimum distance of 12 in is observed between seats on either side of safety exits.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Matters concerning aviation safety are the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. As the questions require detailed technical answers, I suggest that my hon. Friend contacts the chairman of the CAA direct.

Southwold Harbour

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects his Department to resolve its consideration of the navigation and coast protection interests relating to the repair scheme for Southwold harbour put forward by Waveney district council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 20 February 1989]: This application gave rise to a number of problems which took time to resolve. Consideration has now been completed and a consent to the repair works, with a modification, will be issued shortly.

Road Haulage

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the figures from 1976 to 1987 on goods lifted by road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 20 February 1989]: Estimates of total goods lifted by road between 1976 and 1987 are shown in the table. The figures include work done by heavy goods vehicles (over 3·5 tonnes gross vehicle weight) and also by small commercial vehicles (less than 3·5 tonnes gross vehicle weight). These figures are also published in "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1977-1987" (tables 1.13 and 7.3).

Heavy Lorries

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the total numbers from 1976 to 1987 for lorries over 7·5 tonnes, over 16 tonnes, over 24 tonnes, over 32·5 tonnes and over 38 tonnes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is shown in the table, but with a number of qualifications. No information was collected on goods vehicles over 38 tonnes prior to 1983. Since then only about 50 have been identified each year. Information is available for goods, vehicles over 32 tonnes but not for those over 32·5 tonnes. Before 1982, information was not available for vehicles over 7·5 tonnes, so the number over 8·5 tonnes has been included in the table. There have been a number of changes in tax class definitions and in the vehicle census methodology, which make some of the earlier figures less reliable.

Roads (North Devon)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road construction projects which were started and completed since 1959 in north Devon in the areas adjacent to Barnstaple, Ilfracombe and South Molton.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following trunk road schemes were started and completed since 1979 in the areas adjacent to Barnstaple and South Molton. There are no trunk roads in the vicinity of Ilfracombe.

A39 Severn Brethren Bank, Barnstaple
A39 Yelland Improvement
A39 Improvement at Higher Road, Fremington
A361 Improvement at East Kerscott, Swimbridge
A361 Stags Head junction improvement, Filleigh
A361 New Moor Cross, Bishops Nympton
A361 Improvement at Aller Cross, South Molton
A361 Improvement at Woodside, Newton
A361 Improvement at Haache Lane, South Molton
A361 Layby at Swimbridge
A361 Mini-roundabout, Victoria Road, Barnstaple
A361 Visibility improvement, Taw Vale, Barnstaple.

Details of trunk road schemes prior to 1979 are not available. Devon county council has details of its own roads.

US Federal Aeronautical Administration

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many security bulletins he received from the United States Federal Aeronautical Administration in the last 12 months; and what action was taken in each case.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department received 26 such bulletins during 1988, most of them containing a wide variety of specific and general information. This information was collated with other information received. All identifiable threats emerging from the collated information were subjected to the assessment process my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State described to the House on 10 January; and, when appropriate, the relevant provisions in the aviation security programme were adjusted accordingly.

Rail Freight

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the average costs per tonne from 1976 to 1987 of (a) a tonne of rail freight and (b) a tonne of road freight.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The only available estimates are from total user expenditure on road and rail freight expressed as an average per tonne lifted. The table shows average expenditure per tonne lifted for road and rail freight in current prices (cash) and in 1987 prices. Such simple expenditure comparisons between road and rail give a misleading picture of the comparable costs of the two modes because of the different types of freight carried services provided. Rail freight consists of mainly bulk commodities; full train loads accounting for over 90 per cent. of tonnes lifted. By comparison, road freight is largely concerned with individual loads often of several different commodities for several destinations—bulk loads accounting for about 35 per cent. of tonnes lifted.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mental Handicap Nurses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many mental handicap nurses from each of the old grades have been assimilated to each of the new grades in Northern Ireland; and whether he will list them by board.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not held centrally. However all mental handicap nurses in Northern Ireland who were subject to the new clinical grading criteria have been assimilated to the new grades.

Social Security Payments

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the numbers of single parents claiming income support at each social security office in Northern Ireland in 1988 and the number of single parents who claimed supplementary benefit in each social security office in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 February 1989]: Reliable information is not available in the form requested. The available information is as follows:—

Supplementary Benefits

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available on the numbers and total value of supplementary benefit single payments made in each social security office in Northern Ireland from 1 January to 10 April 1988 and from 11 April 1988.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The available information is as follows:

Single payments from 11 April 1988 to 31 December 1988

Social security office	Number	Amount £

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has had any discussions with the Irish Minister of Agriculture regarding the occurrence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in the Republic of Ireland, and on the possibility of bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected products being imported into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have not discussed the recent case of BSE in the Republic of Ireland with its Minister of Agriculture. However, there is contact at official level, including between veterinarians, in relation to this issue. The Republic is shortly to introduce legislation which will require the compulsory slaughter and destruction of all animals affected with BSE. This is in line with the precautionary measures adopted here last August.

Listeria

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will specify the number and occurrence of warnings which have been issued to United Kingdom cheese producers over the past 12 months concerning possible incidence of listeria infection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 16 February 1989]: Where listeria contamination has been found, local staff, working closely with environmental health officers, have taken action directly with the producers concerned to eliminate the problem. Detailed analysis of all such occurrences are not readily available.

EMPLOYMENT

Bonnybridge Employment Office

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what attempt he has made to assess the opinion of unemployed people before proposing to close the part-time employment office at Bonnybridge.

Mr. Lee: The Secretary of State has not sought to assess the opinion of unemployed people in Bonnybridge because the office that he proposes to close is a small part-time unemployment benefit office outhouse which is open only two hours per week.

Wages Councils

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of responses to the consultation document on wages councils received (a) by the closing date and (b) after the closing date; and whether those received after 3 February will be considered.

Mr. Nicholls: Three hundred and three responses were received by the closing date and 68 subsequently. Replies received shortly after 3 February are being taken into account.

Employment Training

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a breakdown by region and travel-to-work area of the numbers of participants on the old community programme, and indicate how many in each case have transferred to the employment training programme and how many have declined to do so.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The following table gives the number of filled places on the community programme (excluding managers and supervisors) nationally and by region on 2 September 1988. At the end of December 1988, the latest date for which information is available, it is estimated that more than 9,000 people had transferred from the community programme to employment training. The number who have declined to do so is not available.

Filled places (excluding managers and supervisors) on the community programme at 2 September 1988

	Numbers
South East	7,100
London	11,100
South West	10,400
West Midlands	20,500
East Midlands and Eastern	13,000
Yorkshire and Humberside	20,600
North West	29,200
Northern	25,100
Wales	16,400
Scotland	25,500
Great Britain	179,000

Labour Force Survey

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the figures from the 1988 labour force survey showing, according to the International Labour Organisation/Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development measures of unemployment, the number of (a) men, (b) women and (c) all unemployed, the number not in the claimant count, and the number of claimants; what are the comparable figures according to the labour force measure of unemployment; in both cases, what are the changes since spring 1987; and what is the claimant count both unadjusted and seasonally adjusted for 1988.

Mr. Lee: Results from the 1988 labour force survey are not yet available.

Health Workers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the health of workers employed in the manufacture of disposable nappies styled superabsorbent.

Mr. Nicholls: I am not aware of any specific health problems among these workers.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will draw up a licensing system for all wet cooling tower air conditioning installations in urban areas to assist the locating of potential sources of legionnaire's disease.

Mr. Nicholls: Such a licensing procedure would be of limited value in locating the source of outbreaks of legionnaire's disease. The existing system of controls based on general powers under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and guidance material is adequate to deal with the problem of legionnaire's disease. The Health and Safety Commission and Health and Safety Executive will, however, be keeping this matter under review.

Earnings

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has about the number of people in full-time work who earn less than two thirds of median male earnings by standard region.

Mr. Nicholls: The information available from the distribution of gross weekly earnings which most closely spans the figure for two-thirds of median full-time adult male earnings in Great Britain is provided in the table:

Proportion with gross weekly earnings less than £140 and £150, by standard regions of Great Britain
Full-time adult employees whose pay was not affected by absence, April 1988

Per cent.

Standard region	Less than £140 per week	Less than £150 per week

Job Clubs

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average cost per job entry for each unemployed person finding work through (a) a jobcentre job club and (b) an agency job club for the latest available year.

Mr. Lee: During the period 1 April 1988 to 30 December 1988, the average cost for an unemployed person finding work through a jobcentre job club was £249. In the same period, the average cost per job entry for an agency job club was £396.

Figures on a comparable basis are not available prior to 1 April 1988.

Wages Councils

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of workers covered by visits from the wages inspectorate was shown as being paid below the relevant wages council rate for the latest available year.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1988 9·1 per cent. of workers whose pay was checked by visit were found to be underpaid. This cannot be taken as indicating the general level of compliance with wages council orders because the inspectorate concentrates its visits on establishments where underpayment is more likely to be found.

Tourism

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to publish a Green Paper on tourism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The tourism review report is currently under consideration. An announcement will be made in due course.

Training Agency (Research)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the reasons why the Training Agency does not undertake specific research into the opinions of employers about courses provided by individual managing agents; and if he will institute such research.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 20 February 1989]: As part of its evaluation of YTS, the training agency seeks the opinion of employers through a range of surveys and studies, targeted external market research and local monitoring of schemes including work experience placements. In addition, training agency welcomes comments from individual employers about their experience in participating in YTS whether on local or more general aspects.

ENVIRONMENT

Toxic Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of imported toxic waste that travels through Yorkshire and Humberside; what proportion remains within the three counties of Yorkshire; if he will list in each of the three counties of Yorkshire the number of toxic waste sites that accept imported toxic waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statistics on imported waste are not collected centrally in a manner that allows the question to be answered exactly.

The figures available to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution indicate that some 19,273 tonnes of waste were imported into the United Kingdom via ports in Humberside in the calendar year 1987. This waste was destined for disposal in Greater Manchester, west midlands, Essex and Gwent. All this waste was destined for either specialised treatment or incineration. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has no record of any waste disposal site in the three counties of Yorkshire which received imported toxic waste during that period.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing his assessment of the disaggregated contribution made to the increase since 1979 in greenhouse effect cases from (a) the electricity generating sector, (b) transport, (c) agriculture and (d) the industrial sector; and if he will make a statement on his Department's policies to reduce the emission of greenhouse gases from United Kingdom sources.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Emissions of carbon dioxide for each year since 1977 for the different sectors will be given in the Department's "Annual Digest of Environment Protection and Water Statistics", to be published later this month. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

The Government are actively supporting the international efforts to tackle the greenhouse effect, which is a global problem. Our policy is to press ahead with improving our scientific understanding of the greenhouse effect and meanwhile to take actions to mitigate it which are justifiable on additional grounds. We have called for a cut of at least 85 per cent. in worldwide emissions of CFCs by the turn of the century. To take this proposal forward my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will participate in a conference next month which is to be hosted by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on "Saving the ozone layer".

Local Government Finance

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to exemplify the figures for a system of local government finance based on capital value rates plus local income tax, in the proportions of 80:20, respectively, as they might apply in Cambridgeshire.

Mr. Gummer: Figures illustrating the impact of a system of capital value rates plus local income tax were placed in the Library on 23 June 1988. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has undertaken to illustrate the impact of such a system in any particular case described by an hon. Member.

London Docklands

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give a breakdown of the total value of all future public expenditure currently committed for the London docklands urban development area under the following headings (i) expenditure on improvements to the A13, (ii) expenditure on new roads, including the docklands highways, (iii) expenditure on the dockland light railway including planned extensions, (iv) expenditure on other transport infrastructure and (v) other committed expenditure;

(2) if he will give a breakdown of the total value of all public expenditure incurred by Government to date in the London docklands urban development area under the following headings (i) total expenditure by the London Docklands Development Corporation, including grant-in-aid, (ii) other expenditure incurred by his Department, including urban development grant, derelict land grant, city grant and Inner Urban Area Act moneys, (iii) total expenditure by the Department of Transport on new roads, road improvements, the docklands light railway, including the Bank extension and any other transport infrastructure, (iv) total Government expenditure incurred by the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone, including rates foregone and capital allowances claimed and (v) all expenditure incurred by any other Government Departments.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. Member.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of projected grant-in-aid to the London Dockland development corporation for each year for the next five years.

Mr. Trippier: The Government currently plan to make the following grant in aid available to the London Docklands development corporation:

Financial year	£ million
1989-90	86
1990-91	104
1991-92	94

No provision has been made for 1992-93 and beyond at present.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make publicly available any research undertaken for or by either the Government or the London Dockland development corporation on changes in land or property values in the London docklands urban development area since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has not commissioned such research. Relevant information is held by the LDDC, but is commercially confidential.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what arrangement the London Docklands development corporation has with the London borough of Newham to deal with training; how many people are in docklands-related training in Newham, categorised by age, gender and ethnicity; and what are the targets for future years;

(2) how many jobs have been created by the London Docklands development corporation in the London borough of Newham; and how many of them went to Newham residents;

(3) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East of 14 February, what specific steps the London Docklands development corporation has taken to ensure jobs in docklands go to Newham residents.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the job description, powers and responsibilities of Ms. Dru Vestey of the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: Director of the corporation's royal docks area team.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements the London Docklands development corporation has with industrial training boards for training.

Mr. Trippier: The LDDC works closely with the relevant industrial training boards, on industrial training initiatives and projects. A particularly close relationship is enjoyed with the construction industry training board, which is a member of the Tower Hamlets training co-ordination group set up jointly by the LDDC and the borough council.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements the London Docklands development corporation has with developers for training.

Mr. Trippier: Where appropriate, the LDDC as landowner or local planning authority encourages developers to participate in the improvement of training in docklands, for example by providing direct contributions to or facilities for training initiatives.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to make available minutes of member level meetings between the London borough of Newham and the London Docklands development corporation to hon. Members.

Mr. Trippier: No. The availability of minutes of meetings is a matter for the two bodies concerned.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount of land receipts received by the London Docklands development corporation each year since 1981; and to what ends these receipts have been put.

Mr. Trippier: The London Docklands development corporation has reported the following receipts from the sale of land:

Financial year	£ million
1982-83	1
1983-84	2
1984-85	5
1985-86	8
1986-87	22
1987-88	41

The receipt for 1982-83 was surrendered to the Exchequer. All subsequent receipts have been deployed by LDDC to regenerate docklands.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites in England and Wales where chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants can be either safely disposed of or recycled.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Both United Kingdom manufacturers of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) offer a reprocessing service to their customers. ICI has recently announced a major extension to its Europeanwide scheme for recovery and recycling of CFC refrigerants. Once techniques for the safe destruction of CFCs have been identified and approved under the terms of the Montreal protocol, the question of providing disposal facilities can be addressed more fully.

Estate Action

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to extend his Department's Estate Action scheme to housing associations and housing societies.

Mr. Trippier: No. Funds for the improvement or repair of registered housing association stock are made available by the Housing Corporation within its annual development programme approved by Ministers. For the future, rent deregulation will progressively enable associations to provide for repair work out of their own income and to raise private finance for other projects.

Football Membership Scheme

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has made a study of the implications for the commercial opportunities associated with the football membership scheme of a decision by individuals to opt out of having their names and address on various mailing lists, and of the percentage of opt-in necessary to maintain these opportunities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: No.

Bats

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigations his Department is undertaking into the use of the chemicals lindane and pentachlorophenol for wood preservative treatment and its effects upon bats; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of the Environment is one of six responsible for approving all pesticides, including wood preservatives, under the Control of Pesticides Regulations. Following the advice of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, all timber treatment products containing lindane must be labelled as "DANGEROUS TO BATS". Because of concern about the effects of wood preservatives on bats, Departments have asked the advisory committee to consider the issue further and a sub-group has been set out to advise on appropriate action. Its report is awaited.

Boundary Changes

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if cost/benefit considerations are or can be taken into account by the local government boundaries commission before it makes recommendations for county boundary changes; and what steps he is taking to analyse the costs of such changes before reaching his own conclusions.

Mr. Gummer: Neither the Commission nor my right hon. Friend is specifically required to take account of the cost of proposed boundary changes, or to quantify expected benefits. By the Local Government Act 1972, however, the commission's proposals and, thus, my right hon. Friend's decisions, must be "in the interests of effective and convenient local government".

This criterion must include a very broad range of social and economic factors, and their effects over the longer term as well as the short term. Assessment may be helped if such factors can be quantified. The commission has therefore initiated research to find out how far such analysis is feasible.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the European Economic Community directives on the disposal of hazardous and toxic wastes that have been implemented by the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The United Kingdom has implemented the following European Economic Community directives on the disposal of hazardous and toxic wastes:

Directive 75/439/EEC on the disposal of waste oils
Directive 76/403/EEC on the disposal of PCBs and PCTs
Directive 78/319/EEC on toxic and dangerous waste

In addition, directive 84/631/EEC on the supervision and control of transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste has been implemented in respect of Great Britain. It is expected to be implemented in respect of Northern Ireland next month.

Sanitary Towels (Disposal)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to fund research into the role that incineration can play in the safe disposal of used disposable nappies and sanitary towels and tampons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government already support research into incineration as a safe means of disposal of domestic wastes of which nappies and sanitary products form a very small part.

Home Insulation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was (a) the total number of grants paid and (b) the total cost of grants, under the home insulation scheme for each year from the inception of the scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Numbers and amounts of grants paid under the homes insulation scheme for 1978 to 1986 appear in table 7.7 of "Housing and Construction Statistics, 1977-1987"; figures for 1987 and the first three quarters of 1988 are published in table 2.21(a) of "Housing and Construction Statistics", part 2, volume 35. Copies are available in the Library.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what papers and what representation his Department will have at the conference on radioactive waste management at the Gloucester hotel, London on 22 and 23 February.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department will not be represented at this conference.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress in the Commission of the European Community's performance assessment of geologic isolation systems project on heat generating high level radioactive waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 17 February 1989]: The studies have been completed. Reports are being prepared and will be reviewed at an international symposium in June 1989.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress in the Commission of the European Community's performance assessments of confinement of medium active wastes study.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 17 February 1989]: Satisfactory progress is being made and the study will end in June 1989. I understand the Commission of the European Community intends to publish the results of the study as soon as practicable after this date.

Pollution Control

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have taken place under section 3 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974; and how many have been successful.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There have been 720 prosecutions between the time section 3 came into effect in 1976 and the end of 1987. A total of 531 have been successful.

Environmental Protection

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the next annual "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Publication of the next annual "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" is planned for 24 February. An associated departmental information bulletin will be issued as with previous issues and a copy of the digest will be deposited in the House of Commons Library.

Rose Theatre, Southwark

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from English Heritage concerning the archaeological discovery of the Elizabethan Rose theatre in Southwark; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None so far. Imry Merchant Properties, which has been granted planning permission by the London borough of Southwark for an office development, has allowed the Museum of London time and provided equipment and funds for archaeological evaluation of the site. It was in the course of this evaluation work that the recent finds were made, which English Heritage officials have confirmed are likely to be those of the Elizabethan Rose theatre. Consultation between English Heritage, the Museum of London, and the developers are continuing with a view to allowing further archaeological evaluations. The extent of the finds may however be limited as much of the site is likely to have been affected by earlier development. This is a good example of voluntary co-operation between developers, archaeologists and English Heritage.

Bathing Water

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the results of the survey of bathing water quality made in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The results of the survey carried out during the 1988 bathing season show that 67 per cent. of our bathing waters in England, Wales and Northern Ireland met the mandatory coliform bacteria standards of the EC bathing water directive. This represents a significant improvement over 1987 when, measured on the same basis, only 55 per cent. of our waters met these standards.

Since 1987, we have tightened the way in which we monitor and assess compliance with the directive in order to put the figures on a consistent basis with those produced by the European Commission for all member states. For this reason, the 1988 results are not directly comparable with those announced last May for 1987, by my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan).

Measured on the new basis, 254 of the 380 bathing waters in England, Northern Ireland and Wales met the directive's mandatory coliform bacteria standards during the 1988 bathing season. This compares with 206 out of 370 waters (55 per cent.) in 1987, and only 184 out of 358 waters (51 per cent.) in 1986, measured on the same basis.

These figures are encouraging and show that we are continuing to make good progress in cleaning up our bathing waters, mainly as a result of the major programmes of capital expenditure by water authorities in renewing sewers in coastal towns and constructing long sea outfalls. We attach a high priority to bringing all our remaining bathing waters up to EC standards, and are discussing with water authorities how to accelerate these programmes. In 1989-90, water authorities expect to spend about £100 million on schemes to improve bathing waters.

The 1988 results are set out in the tables in summary form. I shall arrange for a more detailed summary of the results to be placed in the Library.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will tabulate in the Official Report the current and proposed levels of value added tax required or suggested by the Council, or the Commission of the European Economic Community, in respect of the supply and disposal of water and services for each connected thereto, together with estimates made by Her Majesty's Government in respect of both net and gross amounts paid, or received, consequential to the imposition of such taxes.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply.

The Council has neither required nor suggested particular levels of VAT on water and sewerage services. Under the Commission's proposals for approximating rates of VAT in the Community, water would be taxed at a rate of between 4 and 9 per cent. Sewerage services would be taxed at a rate of between 14 and 20 per cent., assuming that they are not regarded as synonymous with "water". The theoretical annual revenue yield from supplies other than to industry would be some £25 million to £75 million in respect of water and some £175 million to £250 million in respect of sewerage services. Changes to EC tax law require unanimity. The Government have, of course, made it clear that they consider tax approximation to be unnecessary for the completion of the single market.

Alaska Works, Southwark

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the basis on which the grant to Alaska works in Southwark was made; what special factors made the award a priority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The Alaska works project has been offered city grant of £4,162,000. It has been appraised by the Department and conforms to the guidelines set out in the city grant guidance notes, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Detailed information provided in the course of the city grant appraisal is commercially confidential.

Housing (Leasing Schemes)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the lease and leaseback schemes concerning housing development submitted by local authorities following his announcement on 9 March 1988 he (a) has approved, (b) has turned down and (c) is yet to consider.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 17 February 1989]: My right hon. Friend had by 7 February 1989 received 499 applications for additional capital allocations under the schemes introduced following his announcement on 9 March 1988. A total of 138 have been approved, 78 were premature or have been withdrawn or were unnecessary, and 171 had been refused. Thirty-nine applications were awaiting further information from the applicant local authority and 73 were under consideration in the Department. Fifty one of the successful and 33 of the unsuccessful applications primarily related to housing.

Homelessness

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the results of his Department's review of homelessness legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 February 1989]: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Tottenham (Mr. Grant) on 17 January at column 150.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will be issuing a consultation paper as a result of his review into homelessness legislation; and if he will be bringing forward legislation as a result of this review.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 February 1989]: The review is not yet complete. When it is, I will decide on consultation.

Flats

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether payments for leaseback of flats to public sector bodies under section 100 of the Housing Act 1988 will count as prescribed expenditure under the Local Government (Prescribed Expenditure) (Amendment) Regulation 1988 (SI, 1988, No. 434); and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 17 February 1989]: I will write to the hon. Member.

Officers

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the numbers of (a) trading standards officers and (b) environmental health officers employed in 1978 and 1988.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 17 February 1989]: Trading standards officers and environmental health officers are employed by local authorities. The available information is contained in "Trading Standards Statistics" and "Environmental Health Statistics" published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what inherited Greater London council services are still the responsibility of the London residuary body; and what is the timetable for disposal.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 17 February 1989]: Hampstead Heath is due to be transferred to the corporation of the City of London on 31 March 1989. The London residuary body expects to complete most of its remaining GLC-related work by 1 April 1990.

The superannuation fund and staff compensation are still the responsibility of the London residuary body. In addition, the LRB currently retains responsibility for a number of financial rights and liabilities.

Tower Hamlets (Housing)

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution to the housing revenue account the Tower Hamlets council has made from its rate fund in each year since 1979; and what is his estimate of the average subsidy per week that this represents.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 16 February 1989]: Tower Hamlets informs me that it has made the following rate fund revenue account contributions to its housing revenue account each year since 1979. These contributions are also expressed as average weekly amounts, by dividing them by 52.

	£ million	Average subsidy per week £'000
1979-80[1]	9·557	184
1980-81[1]	12·377	238
1981-82[2]	10·279	198
1982-83[2]	6·661	128
1983-84	13·887	267
1984-85	15·143	291
1985-86	13·003	250
1986-87[3]	44·489	856
1987-88	43·044	828
1988-89[4]	32·893	633

[1] including local authority contributions to rent rebates (standard amount), all allowances in excess of the standard amount and the cost of administering the rent rebate scheme.

[2] including rent rebates allowances in excess of the standard amount and the cost of administering the rent rebate scheme.

[3] in July 1985 Tower Hamlets took responsibility for approximately 30,000 GLC Council dwellings.

[4] budgeted amount.

Water Boards

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the amount of money he proposes to grant over each of the next two years to the water boards for anti-pollution measures, listing the works scheduled for implementation under this grant aid.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 February 1989]: Water authorities are self-financing bodies and are generally required to recover the costs of their services through charges, borrowing and internally generated funds. The Government do not provide grant aid, although grants are available under the Rural Water Supply and Sewerage Acts of 1944 and 1971 and the Industrial Development Act 1982 but only for the first-time provision of sewerage. Some authorities have received grant aid from the European regional development fund for pollution control and other aspects of their operations.

Legionella

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, pursuant to his answer of 13 February, the regular bacteriological tests of the air conditioning system and the standby generator serving the underground car park have the potential to identify (a) legionella and (b) similar organisms.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 16 February 1989]: Yes. The regular bacteriological sampling counts all aerobic and anaerobic bacteria present. Tests for specific bacteria such as legionella would be done only if the general bacteriological count gave cause for concern.

Parish Councils

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements exist to require the disclosure of financial interests in specific topics by parish councillors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 16 February 1989]: The provisions of sections 94 to 98 and 105 of the Local Government Act 1972 require members of local authorities, including parish councillors, to declare pecuniary interests in any council business and, unless they receive a dispensation (in the case of parish councils, from the appropriate district council) to abstain from speaking or voting on that matter.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the law providing protection for individuals from illegal or improper action by parish councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 16 February 1989]: The existing arrangements appear satisfactory. Parish councils, like other local authorities, must act within the law and are subject to the supervision of their auditor and the courts. Any local government elector for the parish may raise matters with which he or she is dissatisfied at the parish meeting.

Rivers (Derbyshire)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many kilometres of rivers in Derbyshire are adversely affected by discharges from abandoned mines; and what representations he has received asking him to bring such discharges under the control of a responsible body.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 15 February 1989]: I understand that up to 60 km of rivers in Derbyshire may be adversely affected by discharges from abandoned mines.

I am aware of the concern which has been expressed about the problems caused by these discharges in some areas. It will be for the National Rivers Authority—as the responsible body for regulating all discharges to water—to tackle these problems where the discharges are preventing the achievement of river quality objectives.

Exchequer Grant

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the aggregate Exchequer grant paid to local authorities in England for each financial year since 1978-79, broken down by standard economic region showing Greater London separately from the rest of the south-east (a) in cash terms and, (b) at 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 15 February 1989]: The information available is as follows:

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to offer derogations from the European Economic Community regulations on nitrate pollution to private water companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 February 1989]: We have no plans to grant to private water companies derogations from the nitrate standard of the EC drinking water directive.

SCOTLAND

Primary School Teachers

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many teachers there are in primary schools in rural areas in Scotland at the latest date for which figures are available; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) to the hon. Member in answer to this question on 25 July 1985 at column 697. The most recent information on the number of teachers in primary schools by education authority is contained in SED statistical bulletin No. 1/B1/1988. Copies of this and earlier bulletins on the same subject are available in the Library.

Primary Schools (Closure)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many primary schools in rural areas in Scotland have been closed since 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: Rural areas are not defined for statistical purposes.

Forestry

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the proportion of broadleaves of the total planting in Scotland by (a) the Forestry Commission and (b) private sector companies in the year 1987-88.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Broadleaves made up 8·3 per cent. of the Forestry Commission's planting and 6·7 per cent. of grant-aided planting by the private sector during this period. Separate figures for the forestry companies are not available.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the value of the planting grants made to the private forestry sector in Caithness and Sutherland for each year since 1979; and if he will reprice the figures for inflation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is given in the table:

Year to 31 March	Planting grants paid (£ thousands)	Planting grants paid (£ thousands revalued to 1988 equivalents)
1980	14	24
1981	34	50

The figures cover the full range of visitor facilities. The figures I provided to the hon. Member on 20 November 1987 at column 537-38 covered only those categories of facilities which included forest walks and footpaths.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount of forest recreation and amenity subsidy made to the Forestry Commission in Scotland and in England and Wales in each year since 1979; and if he will reprice the figures for inflation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table:

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the items of expenditure covered by the forest recreation and amenity subsidy made to the Forestry Commission in Scotland in the year to 3 March 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The forest recreation and amenity subsidy is spent on a wide variety of items, including visitor centres, picnic areas, car parks, toilet blocks, forest walks, interpretative facilities, wildlife conservation, streamside improvements, archaeological conservation, amenity work, landscape improvement and the provision of facilities for specialised pursuits and events such as horse-riding and orienteering.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been lost through afforestation in each year from 1983.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics on comparative job losses and gains as a result of afforestation are not collected.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of Forestry Commission trees in Scotland have been damaged by atmospheric pollution.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 5 December 1988 at column 46.

Farm Woodland Scheme

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farmers have applied for grants under the farm woodland scheme; what acreage has been planted under the scheme; and what proportion of this acreage has been planted with (a) broadleaves and (b) conifers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since the scheme opened at the beginning of October 1988, a total of 130 farmers in Scotland have applied for grants under the farm woodland scheme relating to a total planting area in excess of 1,300 hectares; twenty applications have so far been approved and it is expected that the vast majority of the remaining 110 applications will be dealt with in time for planting to be undertaken in the current planting year. Information on the amount and nature of planting undertaken is not yet available.

Football Matches (Arrests)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the number of association football matches played at Ibrox Park, Glasgow, during the 1987-88 season, (b) the total attendance during the season, (c) the total arrests in association with these matches, (d) the average attendance per match, (e) the average number of arrests per match and (f) the arrests as a percentage of the attendance.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Glasgow Rangers football club and the chief constable, of the Strathclyde police, have provided the information on which the following table is based:

Association Football Matches at Ibrox Park, Glasgow during season 1987-88

	Number
a. Matches played.	43
b. Total attendance.	1,072,001
c. Total associated arrests.	407
d. Average attendance per match.	24,930
e. Average number of arrests per match.	9
f. Arrests as percentage of attendance.	0·038

Heritage

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the main conclusions of the policy review of the Royal Commission on the ancient and historical monuments of Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As part of the Government's programme of periodic reviews of non-departmental public bodies, a policy review has been undertaken of the activities and functions of the Royal Commission on the ancient and historical monuments of Scotland (RCAHMS) and the equivalent bodies for England and Wales. This review is being conducted jointly with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales. We shall be announcing the detailed conclusions of the review in due course.

There are however certain major issues of principle arising from the review which my right hon. and learned Friend has decided can be settled now, in advance of the completion of the review. These are the question of whether the RCAHMS should be retained, the organisational and management arrangements of the royal commission, and the scope for transfer of heritage functions to the royal commission.

The review has established that the task of creating and maintaining a national heritage archive remains a necessary and important feature of heritage policy. We have concluded that the RCAHMS should remain as a separate body charged with performing this function and designated as the national body for survey and recording of historic building and ancient monuments.

We have also decided that the royal commission's activities should be more closely aligned with wider considerations of heritage policy. To facilitate this, the historic buildings and monuments directorate of the Scottish Development Department will become sponsoring Department for the RCAHMS. This will be accompanied by changes in the management operations of the commission to bring it into line with current practice. These will include the institution of a corporate planning system, the development of performance measures and indicators, and the provision of a financial memorandum.

The study by outside consultants which formed the first stage in the policy review suggested that there might be scope for transferring certain heritage functions from the directorate of the RCAHMS. These functions included some features of responsibility for the listing of historic buildings, the scheduling of ancient monuments, and rescue archaeology. My right hon. and learned Friend has, however, concluded that the existing arrangements for the listing of historic buildings and the scheduling of ancient monuments remain appropriate. Listing and scheduling are linked to considerations of conservation rather than of survey and record. As regards funding of rescue archaeology, the arguments of principle for and against a transfer are finely balanced, but we have concluded that transferring this responsibility to the RCAHMS is not practicable at this stage.

With these issues of principle now resolved, we consider that the review has mapped out a clear role for the royal commission in the future conservation of our heritage and has identified the organisational and management arrangements necessary to assist the commission in discharging this role to the full. I have written to the chairman of the RCAHMS to inform him of our conclusions.

Nuvan 500 EC

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the proportions of toxicity data for Nuvan 500 EC which have been extrapolated from laboratory tests and from field studies, such as bioassays and ecological surveys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 January 1989]: Data has been provided by the manufacturer of Nuvan 500 EC to the veterinary products committee in support of the company's application for the product to be licensed for use as a medicine. Information in support of an application for a medicinal product licence is a matter of commercial confidentiality. The publication of such information and the tests on which it is based would be a matter for the company concerned.

The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland has carried out its own investigations into the environmental effect of dichlorvos, the active ingredient of Nuvan and its possible toxicity to a number of marine organisms. All of the toxicity data so far obtained by DAFS scientists in these investigations is derived from laboratory studies.

As I indicated in my reply of 12 January to the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) at column 726, results of the studies so far of the toxicity of dichlorvos to the larval forms of the lobster (Homarus gammarus) and the herring (Clupea Hargenus) will be published later this year. Other studies (including possible field studies) are planned on the effects on marine life of prolonged or repeated exposure to low levels of dichlorvos.

Inverclyde Royal Hospital

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the past five years the number of deaths which have occurred at the Inverclyde royal hospital; what was the cause in each case; how many of these deaths were the subject of a fatal accident inquiry; what was the result in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 February 1989]: The table shows the number of deaths recorded for eah year over the period. Mandatory or discretionary inquiries under the Fatal Accidents and Sudden Deaths Inquiry (Scotland) Act 1976 are known to have been held in respect of five deaths. Two of these related to accidents which occurred outwith the hospital and did not involve consideration of any treatment received. In each case a determination was issued by the sheriff. These are available on request from the sheriff clerk's office, Greenock.

Shipyards

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money his office is putting into the St. Helena ferry project for the Overseas Development Administration following the collapse of Hall Russell, Aberdeen; and if he will make a statement on his policy for subsidising Scottish shipyards.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 February 1989]: Hall Russell won the order for the St. Helena ship in open competition after full evaluation of the competing bids. When confirming the placing of the contract the Government were aware that Hall Russell could face financial difficulties if additional orders were not secured. In order for the contract to proceed in Aberdeen the Scottish Office agreed to make a contribution to the overseas aid programme in the event of additional costs above an agreed level being incurred. Additional costs will now inevitably arise because of receivership at Hall Russell, but the amount of any Scottish Office contribution has still to be determined.

Polkemmet Bing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking through Scottish Department officials to alleviate the position at Polkemmet Bing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 February 1989]: Power of control over emissions of smoke and fumes from colliery spoil banks rests with local authorities under the terms of the Clear Air Act 1956, but my officials have been in contact with West Lothian district council to offer advice and assistance with monitoring of air pollution levels and interpretation of results. They have visited Polkemmet together with officials of the district council and have participated in discussions with British Coal as to how best to tackle the Bing.

Chapelcross Power Station

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) Official Report, 26 January, column 716, whether the spent nuclear fuel cooling ponds at Chapelcross are built to the same structural standards as the nuclear power plant; and whether the site licences take into account air crash potential on spent nuclear fuel cooling ponds.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 9 February 1989]: The spent nuclear fuel cooling ponds at Chapelcross are an integral part of the nuclear power station and are built to the same structural standards. The ponds themselves have a robust construction, are partially below ground and therefore have a degree of internal strength.

The nuclear site licences cover the whole plant including the spent fuel cooling ponds as well as the reactors themselves. All aspects of safety including potential air crashes are considered by the nuclear installations inspectorate in the granting of licences to operators of nuclear plant.

The safety considerations applying to the cooling ponds are therefore the same as those outlined in my reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen).

SOCIAL SECURITY

Race Relations and Equal Opportunity

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will describe his Department's principal achievements in respect of race relations and equal opportunity since May 1979.

Mr. Moore: In the employment field my Department has implemented many of the recommendations of the joint review of policies and procedures on race relations in the Civil Service (1983) and the programme of action for women (1984), through its network of equal opportunities officers established in 1985. The more significant initiatives on race equality which have been carried out include:

(a) participation in the phased programme of departmental ethnic surveys of staff which was completed last year with the then DHSS response rate averaging 75 per cent.,

(b) the introduction of ethnic monitoring of recruitment in 1987 when early surveys indicated a shortfall in ethnic minority recruits compared with the ethnic minority working population; positive action in recruitment such as the use of ethnic media to attract ethnic minority recruits,

(c) participation (as one of four departments) in an OMCS initiative in London and the south-east to provide access training for potential executive officer recruits from ethnic minority groups,

(d) a study in 1987 of ethnic monitoring of promotion which is being followed up this year with further monitoring of promotion and job allocation, and

(e) the commitment to sponsor a Windsor fellow in 1990.

With regard to sex equality, my Department has seen an increasing number of women progressing to middle and senior management grades—about 16 per cent. of SEOs and above are women. Encouragement is also given to part-time working and job sharing with 6 per cent. of staff now working part time—over 5,500 officers. Improved special leave provisions have specifically targeted help for single parents and those caring for elderly or infirm relatives and a keeping in touch scheme was introduced in 1988 which allows preferential reinstatement for people who have to take a break from work for domestic reasons. In the area of child care, care parent and holiday play schemes assist staff working at the Department's Newcastle office and further holiday play schemes are planned for 1989. My Department also runs a successful management development course for women in grades HEO to grade 7.

As far as benefit policy and service provision and concerned ethnic origin is not relevant to entitlement to benefit. There has been a continuing programme to ensure that social security legislation conforms with the requirements of the relevant Community directives on equal treatment for men and women in statutory and occupational schemes. Thus, clause 19 and schedule 3 of the Social Security Bill currently before this House will, if Parliament passes it, implement Council directive 86/378/EEC.

As far as means-tested benefits are concerned, income support and its predecessor, supplementary benefit, have been available to men and women on exactly the same conditions since November 1983. Prior to this date only the male partner of a couple could claim benefit.

My Department has recognised the particular problems faced by members of ethnic minorities in claiming benefits and has developed a range of measures to assist them. The more important initiatives include:

(a) publication in six Asian languages and Turkish, of the leaflet "Which benefit?", which covers the whole range of social security benefits,

(b) a free telephone advice and information service in Urdu and Punjabi,

(c) training courses for local office staff which are designed to equip them to serve successfully a multi-racial community,

(d) an interpreter/liaison service in Bradford, and

(e) signs and posters to help ethnic minority callers in local offices and public areas.

Model guidance on equal opportunities implications of policy proposals, recommended by the ministerial group on women's issues, covers race and sex discrimination and has been extended in my Department to include disability issues. This guidance will shortly be circulated to divisional heads and this will direct attention to equal opportunities issues in all areas of the Department's business.

National Insurance

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the yield from employers' national insurance contributions in the last year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

Estimated yield from employers' national insurance contributions

	£ billion
1987-88	14·38
1988-89	15·28

Figures include National Health Service allocation contributions and exclude deductions in respect of statutory sick pay and the statutory maternity pay. Estimates for 1988-89 were published in the Autumn Statement.

Mrs. Rhoda Thompson

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why Mrs. Rhoda Thompson of 25 Lerwick crescent, Middlesbrough has still not been sent her transitional payments in respect of November; and why payments are not being sent to the temporary address notified to the transitional payments unit on a number of occasions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Payments are now being made correctly and I have written to my hon. Friend today.

Benefits (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are claiming income support in the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of South Yorkshire; what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979; what was the actual percentage increase or decrease between the figures for 1979 and the latest figures; and what are the comparable national figures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows the number of people receiving income support and its predecessor, supplementary benefit.

Figures have been supplied for the Department's local office at Doncaster East, Doncaster West and Wath-on-Dearne which serve the Don Valley constituency, although their boundaries are not conterminous.

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action. The figures given include a small number of cases not actually in receipt of benefit. The data for 1988 are provisional and subject to amendment.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many new claims for income support were made in each month since 11 April 1988 at the Doncaster and Mexborough officers of his Department; and how many claims were determined each month;

(2) what was the average number of new claims and cases since 11 April 1988 awaiting review at the Doncaster and Mexborough offices of his Department which were recorded as outstanding each month; and how many related to (a) supplementary benefit claims and (b) single payment claims;

(3) how many unlinked items of correspondence were recorded each month since 11 April 1988 at the Doncaster and Mexborough offices of his Department;

(4) what load of current cases the Doncaster and Mexborough offices of his Department have carried in the past six months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information available is set out in the tables.

The figures on unlinked post are supplied from local office records. The source of the live load count is the 100 per cent. count of cases in action and is available only on a quarterly basis. The figures given include a small number of cases not acually in receipt of benefit.

Medical Boards

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance is available to members of medical boards concerning the grounds for review of mobility allowance awards.

Mr. Scott: Members of every medical board dealing with an application for a review are supplied with guidance notes. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Board and Lodging Allowance (Lambeth)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a list of the organisations and hostels for which board and lodging allowance is paid in the London borough of Lambeth.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no plans to publish a list of organisations or hostels in Lambeth which accommodate income support recipients.

Income Support

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes are planned for April in the procedures for claiming income support.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No changes are planned for April in the procedures for claiming income support.

We have been monitoring the operation of the income support claim procedures, and in particular the claim forms, and are satisfied that they are generally working well. Revised claim forms will be introduced in April to reflect the introduction of the community charge in Scotland—there will be separate versions for Scotland and for England and Wales. The revised forms will also incorporate some minor amendments with a view to improving still further our service to the public.

We shall, of course, continue to monitor the effectiveness of the claim forms and procedures and improve them where necessary.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the current number of people in private rest homes receiving income support, (b) the total cost of income support for people living in private rest homes, (c) the current number of people in private nursing homes receiving income support and (d) the total cost of income support for people living in private rest homes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. However, relevant information in respect of independent—that is private and voluntary—homes was provided in my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 21 December 1988 at columns 304-6.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report the total number of people currently receiving attendance allowance; if he will give a breakdown of the numbers receiving the higher and lower amounts; what are the total costs involved; and if he will give the total number of those receiving the allowance living in private (a) rest homes, and (b) nursing homes.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the table. Details of the allowances in payment to residents of rest homes and nursing homes are not kept.

Pensioners

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider creating a standing committee of representatives of the pensioners' movement together with the Minister and senior civil servants dealing with the areas mainly affecting the retired in social security matters.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 17 February at column 404.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners have received reduced housing benefit; what this figure is as a percentage of all pensioners since April 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of increasing income support for (a) all pensioners and (b) all beneficiaries by 10 per cent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The estimated costs for income support—excluding boarders and residential or nursing home residents—are:—

(a) £550 million
(b) £1,300 million

Because of the alignment of income-related benefits, the total costs of such changes would be £850 million and £1,850 million respectively.

Retirement Age

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost for equalising retirement ages for men and women at the ages of 60, 62, 63 and 65 years assuming that everyone elects to retire at the specified age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The most recent estimates, which are based on 1985-86 benefit rates, are that the approximate net annual cost to public funds of equalising state pension age at 60 years would be £3,000 million and at 62 years £800 million; equalisation at 65 years would save about £500 million. Estimates are not available for equalisation at 63 years.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost of abolishing the earnings rule for retired pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We estimate that abolition of the retirement pension earnings rule in 1990-91 would involve a public expenditure cost of about £250 million.

Residential Homes for the Elderly

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number and average cost of private residential accommodation for the elderly in 1986 and 1988; how this increase compares with the retail price index; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that information is not available in the precise form requested. However relevant information in respect of income support payments to people in independent—that is private and voluntary—homes is provided in the table. Over the corresponding period, the increase in the retail price index was 9·9 per cent.

Mr. N. Scott

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to give a substantive reply following his holding answer of 30 January, to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with respect to the case of Mr. N. Scott; and if he will set up an internal inquiry into the reasons for both the delay which was the subject of the original question and the delay in replying substantively to that question.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I replied to the right hon. Member yesterday. We have no plans to hold an internal inquiry into either of the delays to which he refers.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) when he next plans to meet the chairman and officers of the Association for the Conservation of Energy, in order to discuss the application of British energy efficiency systems and equipment to deal with global warming and the greenhouse effect;

(2) what information is available to British embassies or trade legations to enable them to deal with inquiries for British energy efficiency systems and equipment designed to combat global warming and the greenhouse effect;

(3) what steps he proposes to take in order to promote the availability of British energy efficiency systems and equipment as solutions to global warming and the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Peter Morrison: British embassies and trade missions have available to them the literature and contacts provided by the trade associations of the energy efficiency industry, and the services of the Department of Energy and the Department of Trade and Industry. Ministers and officials of both Departments frequently promote the British energy efficiency industry overseas. The identification and follow-up of export opportunities is one of the objectives of the energy efficiency office.

My right hon. Friend will be meeting the chairman of the Association for the Conservation of Energy shortly and will be very happy to discuss these matters with him.

HEALTH

Patient Statistics

8. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of patients treated by the National Health Service in 1979 and in the latest available year.

Mr. Mellor: Between 1979 and 1987-88 more than 1 million more in-patient cases were treated in National Health Service hospitals in England, a rise of 22 per cent. from 5·40 million to 6·62 million cases. In the same period provisional figures suggest that day cases have risen by 71 per cent. from 592,000 to more than 1 million, and new out-patient attendances by 10 per cent.

Infant Mortality (Listeria)

13. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of perinatal deaths, stillbirths and miscarriages which have occurred over the past year have been examined for the presence of listeria monocytogenes.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Post-mortem examinations for still births or perinatal deaths to establish the presence of listeria monocytogenes would be carried out only at the request of clinical staff or a coroner, and we do not hold information on those requests centrally.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many miscarriages and stillbirths have been related to the consumption of soft cheeses in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 16 February 1989]: To date, there have been no confirmed reports to the public health laboratory service of miscarriages and stillbirths associated with the consumption of soft cheese. There were nine reported stillbirths associated with listeriosis in 1988.

Cottage Hospitals

14. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether cottage hospitals, either separately or collectively, will be permitted to opt for National Health Service hospital trust status under his proposals outlined in the recent White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is the Government's intention that any hospital or group of hospitals which meets the criteria set out in the White Paper will be eligible to apply for National Health Service hospital trust status. Each application will, of course, need to be carefully considered on its merits.

Food Irradiation

16. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy towards the irradiation of food.

Mr. Freeman: As the hon. Member will be aware, the Government announced early last year that they accepted expert advice that, under prescribed conditions, irradiated food is safe and wholesome. However, we also stated that the general prohibition of the process would remain until we had received advice on the scope and format of regulatory controls necessary to ensure good industrial and marketing practices. In that connection, my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I expect a report from officials shortly. I should add that any proposals to amend or adjust the current prohibition will be subject to full public consultation as is required under the Food Acts.

Health Service Personnel (Training)

18. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Health Service personnel are trained by the private sector.

Mr. Mellor: Precise figures are unavailable. It is known that while little basic professional training takes place in the private sector, there is a range of in-house post-registration training from which the NHS benefits if staff move back into the service. Representatives from the Department and the private sector have recently agreed to a joint working group with the aim of increasing the total stock of skilled staff available to both sectors.

Nurses (Pay)

19. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of nurses' pay in 1979 and in the latest available year, in real terms.

Mr. Mellor: The average pay of all nurses has gone up by 45 per cent. in real terms since 1979 and now stands at its highest ever real terms level. A typical experienced staff nurse on the maximum of the scale now has basic pay of £10,650, compared with £3,813 in 1979—an increase of £3,645 or 52 per cent. in real terms. Nurses will receive a further increase of 6·8 per cent. from 1 April 1989.

Waiting Lists

21. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce hospital waiting lists.

Mr. Mellor: The reforms in our White Paper "Working for Patients" (Cm. 555) will provide a better service for patients, including shorter waiting times.

We shall create 100 additional consultant posts over the next three years, above planned expansion levels, targeted at the worst waiting problems. We shall give hospitals, for the first time, a real incentive to treat patients quickly and efficiently by paying them for the work they actually do. There will also be better waiting times information for GPs to enable them to refer patients more easily to where waiting times are shortest. In addition, some GP practices will manage their own budgets, so as to get the best possible deal for their patients.

We have also made £86 million available from the waiting list fund over three years to tackle the worst waiting problems.

25. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps patients will be able to take to reduce waiting times for treatment following implementation of his proposals contained in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The White Paper proposes that some family doctors should have the freedom to manage their own budgets for hospital services, so as to get the best possible deal for their patients. Better information will be available to all GPs and patients about hospital services, including waiting times. Hospitals will have a real incentive to treat patients quickly and efficiently because they will be paid for the work they do. The White Paper also proposes that it should be easier for patients to change their doctor if they wish to do so.

As a result, the NHS as a whole will become much more responsive to the individual patient. Patients will be able to discuss real choices with their GPs, and both will be able to act effectively in the best interest of the patient.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to cut waiting lists through the more efficient use of cross-boundary flows.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The reforms in our White Paper "Working for Patients" (Cm. 555) will end the present arrangements which provide little incentive for health authorities to treat patients from outside their boundaries. In future, hospitals will be free to offer their services to different health authorities and will receive NHS funds for the patients they treat. For the first time, hospitals will have real incentives to treat patients quickly and efficiently regardless of where they live. and patients will be able to go to hospitals where waiting times are shortest.

Abortion

22. Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of abortions at 28 weeks were performed during 1987 because the child was likely to be born handicapped.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987 there was only one notification of an abortion which took place with a gestation period at 28 weeks. This was carried out under ground 4 of the 1967 Abortion Act which states

"there is a substantial risk that if the child is born it would suffer such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped."

30. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions have been carried out during the last 10 years for which figures are available by each of the six statutory grounds.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table. Comparable data is not available for earlier years.

Number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 to residents and non-residents of England and Wales by statutory grounds (mentioned) 1981-87. These figures represent the number of times each of the statutory grounds reported (mentioned) rather than the number of operations.

[1] The statutory grounds under which an abortion may be performed are that:

1. the continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk to the life of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.
2. the continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.
3. the continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk or injury to the physical or mental health of any existing child(ren) in the family of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.

4. there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped, or in emergency, certified by the operating practitioner as immediately necessary—
5. to save the life of the pregnant woman, or
6. to prevent grave permanent injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman.

39. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women in England and Wales in 1988 underwent their fourth abortion operation.

Mr. Freeman: The number of notifications of women having their fourth abortion (legal terminations or spontaneous miscarriages) in England and Wales for the period January-June 1988 is 906. Of these, 322 notifications were for women who had previously had three legal terminations with no spontaneous miscarriage.

77. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were performed at 18 weeks or more gestation in England and Wales in 1988 to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Freeman: There was one notification of abortion in England and Wales in the period January-June 1988 at 18 weeks or more gestation which had been performed under ground 5 of the 1967 Abortion Act which states "to save the life of the pregnant woman".

78. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of abortions at 21 weeks, 23 weeks and 24 weeks gestation were performed during 1987 because the child was likely to be born handicapped.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table.

Notifications of abortions which took place with a gestation period of 21, 23 and 24 weeks, showing the number with a mention of ground 4 of the 1967 Abortion Act, which states
"there is a substantial risk that if the child was born it would suffer such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped"

75. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of abortions according to the grounds of termination in 1987 for 18 weeks and each week thereafter to 28 weeks.

Mr. Freeman: The information is given in the table:

Consultants

23. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future position of consultants within the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: The White Paper "Working for Patients" fully recognises the continuing key role of consultants in the National Health Service and emphasises the need for them to play an increased role in the management of the service. In particular there will be five significant developments. First, the new funding arrangements will steer resources to those consultants best able to provide a good quality service and to treat more patients. Secondly, the Government hope that within the next two years all consultants will be taking part in "medical audit" and thus be taking the lead in improving the quality of service to patients. Thirdly, the rapid expansion planned for the resource management initiative will provide budgetary and information systems to allow consultants to make the best use of the resources available to them. Fourthly, the day-to-day management of consultants' contracts will take place at district (rather than regional) level and the managerial element of consultants' duties will be better recognised in the distinction award system. Finally, we intend to introduce a scheme under which 100 extra consultant posts can be created over the next three years.

Community Care

24. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to meet the Association of Metropolitan Authorities social services committee to discuss Sir Roy Griffiths' report on community care.

Mr. Mellor: We hold regular meetings with the local authority associations, including the Association of Metropolitan Authorities (AMA) to discuss issues of current interest in the social services field. Recent items have included Sir Roy Griffiths' report on community care.

The then Minister of State for Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton), met the AMA separately last June to hear their views on Sir Roy's report and we shall take account of its representations along with the others that we have received.

63. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals other than those in the Griffiths report he has considered for the delivery of community care.

Mr. Freeman: We are looking closely at all possible models for the delivery of community care, along with the many reactions we have received in response to Sir Roy Griffiths' report, as part of the work we have in hand to frame our own proposals.

51. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent represenations he has had on the recommendations of the Griffiths report on community care.

Mr. Freeman: We have received over 250 representations from hon. Members, organisations and members of the public about Sir Roy's recommendations. Recent responses have been received from a number of national groups and local authorities. We are studying all the responses carefully as we frame our own proposals.

Patient Care

26. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of staff providing direct patient care in the National Health Service in 1979 and in the latest available year.

Mr. Freeman: The number of whole-time equivalent staff in post in England, providing direct (patient) care at 30 September 1979 was 457,600 and at 30 September 1987, 526,000.

The 1979 figure has not been adjusted to take account of the transfer of operating department assistants (ODAs) (some 2,600 at 31 March 1984) from ancillary to professional and technical staff group on 1 April 1984 and reduction in nurse working hours (from 40 to 37½ per week) during 1980-81.

Day Cases (Treatment)

27. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of day cases treated by the National Health Service in 1979 and in the latest available year.

Mr. Freeman: During 1979, 592,000 day cases were treated in NHS hospitals in England whilst in 1987-88 the number had risen to 1,016,000 (provisional), an increase of 72 per cent.

In-Patients

28. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of in-patients treated by the National Health Service in 1979 and in the latest available year.

Mr. Freeman: There were 6·62 million in-patient cases treated in National Health Service hospitals in England during the 1987-88 financial year. Earlier figures were for calendar years and in 1979 5·4 million in-patient cases were treated. The figures for 1987-88 represents a rise of over 1 million, or more than 22 per cent. compared with 1979.

Hospices

29. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many terminally ill patients are now being cared for in hospices in England and Wales; and how many there were five years ago.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected centrally.

Cot Deaths

31. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will hold an investigation into cot deaths; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Social Services Select Committee in its recent report recommended further research into the causes of infant death, particularly those attributed to sudden infant death syndrome. The Government will be responding shortly.

Mental Illness Hospitals

33. Sir Geoffrey Pattie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will undertake an urgent review of the current and planned pace of rundown of mental illness hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: It is for health authorities to determine the pace of rundown of the old, large and often remote mental illness hospitals, which should be matched by the development of comprehensive locally-based psychiatric services.

As indicated by my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Health in his reply to my hon. Friend on 16 December 1988 at column 766, the annual review process provides Ministers with the opportunity to assess the performance of each regional health authority in matching the development of locally-based services against the rundown of older hospitals. In addition, I shall be meeting some of the individual regional and district health authorities most affected during the course of the year to review specific aspects of this transfer to locally-based care.

Breast Cancer Screening

34. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on achieving the implementation of the recommendations of the Forrest report on breast cancer screening.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 24 January at columns 533-37.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he gives to health authorities on the provision of breast cancer screening services; in what circumstances authorities may charge users for such services; in what circumstances authorities may refuse to screen those attending such clinics with a referral letter from a general practitioner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Department of Health guidance to health authorities on the provision of breast cancer screening is contained in two letters, copies of which are in the Library: DA(87)14 of 31 March 1987 with which a draft health circular and the report "Breast Cancer Screening" by the Forrest working group were enclosed; and EL(88)P/48 of 15 April 1988. These require health authorities to provide three-yearly screening under the National Health Service on a routine basis for women aged 50 to 64 and on request for older women.

A woman with symptoms should be referred by her general practitioner to a clinician specialising in breast disease. In the case of a woman outside the eligible age group who does not have symptoms but who is considered to be at high risk, for example because either her mother or her sister has a history of breast cancer, her general practitioner can consult the screening service. It is for the service in consultation with clinicians specialising in breast disease and the local general practitioners to decide how such cases should be handled.

Health authorities can charge users for services which they are not required to provide under the National Health Service.

Self-governing Hospitals

35. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the reactions from the public to his proposed plans for self-governing hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Reaction is still at a very general level, but is encouragingly positive. Some of the early respondents had been unnecessarily alarmed by the Labour party's insinuations that self-governing hospitals would be in the private sector, but I believe that the message is now successfully getting through that they will remain fully part of the National Health Service.

37. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the steps he envisages will have to be taken before a National Health Service hospital can apply to become self-governing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I would refer my hon. Friend to section 5 of the NHS review working paper (1): "Self-Governing Hospitals", which was published yesterday. That briefly outlines the process for achieving self-governing status.

72. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many inquiries he has received so far about his plans for self-governing hospitals, contained within the White Paper.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is too early to expect firm proposals from hospitals seeking self-governing status. But we have received a number of inquiries for further information.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to propose any minimum size for a hospital wishing to leave the control of the district health authority.

54. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to permit hospitals other than major acute hospitals to become self-governing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Any hospital which meets the criteria in chapter 3 of the White Paper "Working for Patients" would be eligible for self-governing status, regardless of size or specialism.

46. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the suitability of hospitals in Liverpool for conversion to trust status.

81. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals on Merseyside will be eligible for self-management under the Government's new National Health Service proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is too early to make such assessments. Over time, I expect that as many hospitals as are willing and able to do so will become self-governing.

NHS (Reform)

36. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received recent representations from the British Medical Association about reform of the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) today.

Cervical Smear Tests

38. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will review the advice issued by his Department on the regularity of cervical smear tests.

Mr. Freeman: We have recommended to health authorities a maximum interval of five years between tests, which we know can reduce deaths among women screened by a substantial proportion. However, we also know that the majority of women who die from cervical cancer have never had a smear test. We therefore believe that it is more important to achieve as a first priority a high response rate from all women in the eligible age group rather than aim to reduce the interval between screening. If a health authority decides it can offer more frequent screening—and we know that some have adopted a three-yearly programme—we would expect it also to be achieving a high response rate and to be able to cope with the much higher number of tests three-yearly screening creates. Of course, if any woman patient presents with gynaecological symptoms or has any reason to believe something is wrong, she can be referred for further investigation outside the screening programme. The recommended recall interval is kept under review.

Nurses

40. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to extend the role of nurses in hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have given advice on delegation to a nurse of tasks not included in basic training in HC(77)22: "The Extending Role of the Clinical Nurse —Legal Implications and Training Requirements". A copy is in the Library.

With the increasing complexity of treatment and the growth of the specialist expertise of the nurse, various initiatives have been taken to extend the role of nurses in hospitals. In the White Paper "Working for Patients" the Government state that local managers, in consultation with their professional colleagues, will be expected to re-examine all areas of work to identify the most cost-effective use of professional skills.

Patients (Treatment)

41. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department intends to take to ensure that patients receive the most suitable treatment and medication for their conditions.

Mr. Freeman: The diagnosis and treatment of patients is and will continue to be a matter for the professional judgment of doctors.

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received following the publication of the White Paper "Working for Patients", and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the Government's White Paper on the future of the National Health Service.

42. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the recent White Paper, "Working for Patients."

47. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the White Paper "Working for Patients."

48. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on his White Paper, "Working for Patients"; and if he will make a statement.

83. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has so far received on the National Health Service White Paper "Working for Patients."

65. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reactions he has had to the White Paper "Working for Patients" from the medical profession and the public in general.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friends and hon. Members to my reply to my hon. Friends the Members for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce), for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) and for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) earlier today.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give further details of the relationship between the new chief executive officer and the regions and districts as set out in the White Paper.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have already indicated my intention to delegate to the chief executive the central management of the NHS. He will act within a framework of resources and policies set by Ministers, and will in turn be responsible for applying similar frameworks to regional health authorities and, through them, to districts.

52. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received any representations from Norwich district health authority following the publication of the White Paper, "Working for Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Salford Health Authority

43. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next intends to meet the chairman of Salford health authority; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans to meet the chairman of Salford health authority.

Private Medical Insurance

49. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figures he has available for the number of people over the age of 60 years who currently hold private medical insurance.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The general household survey 1986 (latest available data) suggests that among the population of Great Britain aged 65 and over 4 per cent. were covered by private medical insurance.

NHS (Review)

50. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to date of preparing, publishing and presenting the Health Service review.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Regarding the cost of preparation of the NHS review, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 7 February at column 642.

The costs of publication of the White Paper "Working for Patients" and its attendant working papers will be borne by HMSO. However, copies of the White Paper and working papers have been purchased for distribution by my Department at a cost of £35,675 and an estimated £65,000 respectively.

Regarding the cost of presenting the White Paper, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 9 February at columns 75-76.

GPs (Practice Budgets)

53. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on general practitioners' reaction to the proposed plans for general practitioner practice budgets.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have been encouraged by the positive response of many general medical practitioners to these proposals. We expect that general medical practitioners will increasingly see the scheme as an opportunity to improve the range and quality of service they can offer to their patients and to increase their own job satisfaction.

59. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of general practitioner practices he expects to apply, and to be ready, to manage their budgets in April 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My aim initially is to encourage a substantial number of the larger general medical practitioner practices to apply to manage their own budgets with effect from April 1991. It is too early to estimate what the level of take-up of the scheme will be.

Hospitals (Trust Status)

55. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for consultation with local communities which are served by National Health Service hospitals which decide to establish trusts under his recent proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It will be for regional health authorities to publicise locally all proposals for hospitals to become National Health Service hospital trusts. They will consider the views of everyone who expresses an interest, including the health authorities concerned, staff at the hospital, general practitioners and community health councils. Regional health authorities will be asked to submit responses from the public, together with any comments they may have on them, to me so that I can take them into account in considering applications.

75. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service hospital trusts he expects to be established in April 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is too early to estimate numbers.

71. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will disclose the names of hospitals in London about which his Department has been in discussion with regard to the formation of National Health Service hospital trusts, as envisaged in his White Paper.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department has discussed the proposals only in general terms. It is too early to discuss which hospitals might become National Health Service trusts until all interested parties have had the opportunity to consider the working paper on self-governing hospitals, published yesterday.

GPs (Drug Budgets)

56. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the White Paper proposals for general practitioner drug budgets.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I will be publishing shortly a working paper which discusses arrangements for the introduction of indicative drug budgets.

Drugs and Medicines (Warnings)

57. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives he plans to improve the legibility of danger warnings on drugs and medicines.

Mr. Freeman: All medicines must be treated with respect. The Medicines (Labelling) Regulations already require clarity, legibility and ready discernibility to purchaser or user. We are now considering comments on proposals we made last year to promote safer use of medicines by, amongst other things, label warnings which would be better understood by the public.

Drugs (Expenditure)

58. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total amount spent on drugs in the National Health Service for each year for the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is set out in the table for England, itemised between the cost of drugs in hospitals and in the family practitioner service.

	Hospitals £ Million	FPS £ Million	Total £ Million
1978-79	128·063	554·048	682·111
1979-80	155·719	632·880	788·599
1980-81	185·280	766·382	951·662
1981-82	213·923	876·490	1,090·413
1982-83	244·765	1,008·891	1,253·656
1983-84	266·552	1,130·119	1,396·671
1984-85	278·778	1,191·598	1,470·376
1985-86	296·613	1,274·620	1,571·233
1986-87	318·246	1,377·784	1,696·030
1987-88	351·839	1,539·010	1,890·849

AIDS

20. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department is spending on AIDS education advertising.

Mr. Mellor: Our budget for the current year is £10 million; £8·7 million of this funds the work of the health education authority, and £1·3 million has been allocated to the national AIDS helpline, which provides a free, confidential telephone advice service. We are also spending £2 million on a nationwide campaign warning of the dangers of injecting drug misuse.

60. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to give statutory force to the British Medical Association's recently issued guidelines to doctors on the disclosure of information to insurance companies about people who have undergone an HIV test.

Mr. Freeman: I have no such plans. The Access to Medical Reports Act 1988 already contains safeguards about the disclosure of information by doctors to insurance companies.

44. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to expand community-based AIDS education programmes.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities were asked in the planning guidelines circular (HC(88)43) issued last July, to develop community based prevention initiatives aimed at helping people in selected target groups to change behaviour which puts them at risk of HIV infection. We expect a total of £14 million to be spent on this work by health authorities in 1989-90. In addition, the Health Education Authority's AIDS programme includes work to reach particular target groups and to support local programmes, and a number of voluntary organisations which we support have AIDS education programmes aimed at specific sections of the population.

Nurses (Regrading)

61. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the present position regarding nurses' regrading.

Mr. Freeman: All nurses and midwives have been told their new grades and have received their backpay from 1 April 1988. This has resulted in an average pay increase for 1988 of 17·9 per cent. and provides a greatly improved career structure.

Rural Health Services

62. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for safeguarding rural health services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The plans outlined in "Working for Patients" will not only safeguard, but improve, services in all parts of the country, including rural areas.

Hospital Building

66. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the amount spent on hospital building for the National Health Service in 1979 and at the latest available year in real terms.

Mr. Freeman: The annual accounts of health authorities do not specifically identify expenditure on hospital building as such. Following are figures of total capital expenditure derived from the annual summarised accounts of health authorities in England:

	1978-79 £000 (cash)	1978-79 £000 (at 1987-88 prices)	1987-88[1] £000 (cash)	Real-terms increase per cent.
Hospital services	289,140	593,304	749,635	26·3
Hospital and community health services (HCHS)	367,352	753,792	1,001,444	32·9

[1] Provisional figures (as yet subject to audit).

Notes:

1. Capital expenditure includes the acquisition of land and buildings, the cost of new building construction and major adaptations to existing buildings together with associated professional fees, equipment and engineering work costs. It also includes general expenditure on the purchase of all vehicles and other major items of equipment.
2. HCHS includes hospital, community health, ambulance, blood transfusion and other services.
3. The 1978-79 figures have been expressed at 1987-88 prices by the use of the gross domestic product deflator.

By-pass Operations

67. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many coronary by-pass operations were carried out in the four Thames health regions in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the corresponding figure for 1978.

Mr. Freeman: The figures for the latest available year are in the table. Thames region residents treated by the London postgraduate special health authorities are not included. Figures for 1978 are not available by region.

Regions	1987-88
North West Thames	516
North East Thames	999
South East Thames	1,363
South West Thames	480

Chronically Sick and Disabled People

68. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that chronically sick or disabled people in the community who have high health care costs continue to receive the health care they require after the proposed changes to the National Health Service take effect in 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No chronically sick or disabled person will be disadvantaged by the White Paper proposals. Each district health authority will be responsible for ensuring the health care needs to everyone living within its boundaries are properly provided for, and will be funded accordingly.

NHS (Plans)

69. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about his future plans for the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my statement to the House on 31 January 1989 at columns 165-70.

Hip Replacements

70. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of hip replacement operations carried out in 1979 and in the latest available year.

Mr. Freeman: The number of total hip replacements and other arthroplasty of hip performed in NHS non-psychiatric hospitals in England in 1979 and 1986 (the latest year for which information is available centrally) are 29,520 and 40,900 respectively.

Non-emergency Treatment

74. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration has been given and what evidence was received by his Department, concerning the preference of patients in deciding between speed and location of non-emergency treatments at hospitals consequent on the adoption of his recent proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government's policy is to provide for a more effective choice for individual patients and their GPs when they decide where non-emergency treatment should be sought. The proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" will allow NHS funds to follow patients across administrative boundaries where GPs and their patients choose treatment elsewhere because, for example, a shorter waiting time is on offer.

Paediatric Consultants (South Tees)

76. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many paediatric consultants are presently employed by the South Tees health authority.

Mr. Freeman: Contracts of employment for consultant medical and dental staff, except in the case of teaching health authorities, are held by regional health authorities. We do not have details centrally of the place of employment of consultants whose contracts are held by regions. My hon. Friend may wish to seek the information locally, directly from the health authorities concerned.

Scientists (Grading)

79. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he proposes to examine the present grading structure for physicists, biochemists, clinical psycholgists and other scientists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The management side of the scientific and professional staffs council has set up a working party to investigate the scale of reported problems of recruitment and retention of physicists, biochemists, clinical psychologists and other scientists. I understand that the management side has said that if these investigations reveal a problem for NHS management it would wish to consider if an appropriate way of solving it would be by examination of the present grading structure.

Stillborn Children

80. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any proposals to change the regulations for registration of the deaths of stillborn children.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend has made proposals to change the statutory provisions for the registration of stillbirths in ways which would align them more closely with death registration procedures, and these are contained in the Green Paper entitled "Registration: a modern service" Cm. 531 which was published on 1 December 1988. Comments on those proposals, and on others affecting the registration service more widely, have been invited by 31 March.

Food

84. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those individuals and bodies he has met in the last fortnight to discuss health and safety of food issues.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In the last two weeks I have discussed food safety issues with a number of ministerial colleagues, Members of Parliament and other individuals.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many cases of listeria poisoning have been notified in Derbyshire within the last 12 months;

(2) how many cases of salmonella poisoning have been notified in Derbyshire in 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987 and at the nearest available date in 1988.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The exact information requested is not available from the notifications of infectious diseases requirements under the Public Health Acts.

Legionnaire's Disease

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will give details of all epidemiological research undertaken by the public health laboratory service in respect of legionnaire's disease.

Mr. Freeman: Public health laboratory service epidemiological research on legionnaire's disease began in 1977, the year the legionnella pneumophila was first described in the USA. Early work by the PHLS included the development of an active national surveillance system, methods of diagnosis and the detection of legionellae in environmental samples. Much of the epidemiological research has been directed at studying sources of infection and routes of transmission during the investigation of outbreaks of legionnaire's disease detected by the surveillance system. This work has been accompanied by the development and evaluation of control methods.

I am placing in the Library two lists which give detailed references to published research on this subject carried out by the PHLS.

List 1 covers papers describing work mainly of an epidemiological nature. List 2 deals with closely related and overlapping work on serological method, typing of the organism for epidemiological purposes, experimental studies of transmission and studies of the ecology and control of legionellae in water systems.

NHS Operations

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many different types of operation are currently performed and on how many people, under the National Health Service; what were the comparable figures 10, 15 and 30 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Information on the number of different types of operation performed is not readily available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

The figures available centrally show an increase in the number of in-patient cases operated on from 1·33 million in 1961 to 2·39 million in 1986. In addition, 0·8 million day cases were operated on in 1986. Corresponding figures for 1987-88 are not available, but the number of in-patient cases treated in the surgical specialties increased from 2·43 million in 1986 to 2·52 million in 1987-88.

Consumer Research

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the results of the research on consumers' experience of and attitudes to the National Health Service undertaken for his Department by Research Services of Great Britain Ltd.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no knowledge of such research.

Meningitis

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by area health authority in both the Trent regional health authority and the Yorkshire regional health authority, the number of cases of meningitis for 1988 and to date; and what are the national averages for the same periods.

Mr. Freeman: Cases of infectious diseases are notified by the doctor in attendance to the proper officer for each local authority area. Notifications of meningitis are therefore not generally available at the district health authority level. However, the table shows the number of notifications of meningitis for the counties most closely approximating to the Yorkshire and Trent regional health authorities.

Notifications of meningitis by county 1988[1] 1989[1, 2]

	1988	1989
England and Wales	3,001	302
Yorkshire
West Yorkshire	171	10

"Social Trends"

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to include in future editions of Social Trends detailed analysis of regional, economic and occupational variations in respect of life expectancy, infant mortality rates and overall mortality rates.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for the contents of Social Trends lies with the Central Statistical Office. The contents of next year's edition of Social Trends has not yet been decided.

Tampons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the most recent figures for cases of toxic shock syndrome in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: Toxic shock syndrome is not separately identified in the statisical returns made by health authorities to the Department. However, 41 confirmed and probable cases of toxic shock syndrome were reported to the central public health laboratory in the two years 1985 and 1986 taken together. These figures do not include Northern Ireland.

Hip Replacements

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hip replacement operations were carried out in the four Thames health regions in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the corresponding figure in 1980.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Estimated number of hip replacement operations and other anthroplasty of hip (810-811)[1] performed on in-patients in NHS non-psychiatric hospitals

	1986	1980
North West Thames	2,400	1,770
North East Thames	3,300	2,690
South East Thames	3,600	3,100
South West Thames	3,300	2,370

[1] Classification of surgical operations (CSO)-3rd revision.
Because of NHS restructuring in 1982, the regional figures are not strictly comparable.

Salmonella

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply of 16 February to the hon. Member for Southend, East, when his Department first became aware of the health hazards related to the new strain of salmonella; and what steps were taken to advise the general public and categories at particular risk.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: First indications of a problem with salmonella enteritidis PT4 and eggs emerged towards the end of 1987, but sufficient epidemiological evidence to justify public health action did not become available until the summer of 1988. At that time evidence suggested that the problem arose from the consumption of raw eggs or from uncooked dishes containing raw eggs—such as mayonnaise. On 29 July 1988 my Department issued a letter to National Health Service caterers on raw eggs. On 26 August 1988 my Department issued a public press notice advising consumers to avoid raw eggs or home-made dishes containing uncooked eggs. This advice was circulated to chief environmental health officers of local authorities on 2 September 1988 and to catering and hotel organisations on 5 September 1988. Chief environmental health officers of the local authorities were asked to give publicity to this advice.

Subsequently it became apparent from further epidemiological evidence that there was also risk of infection from the consumption of lightly cooked eggs. On 21 November 1988 we issued further public advice. A press release by my Department gave some reassurance that, in the context of the consumption of some 30 million eggs a day in the United Kingdom, the risk to any individual was very small, but that a small number of outbreaks had been associated with the consumption of lightly cooked eggs.

The Chief Medical Officer published further advice on 5 December 1988. He repeated his earlier advice not to eat raw eggs. As far as lightly cooked eggs were concerned, he said the risk of harm to a healthy individual was small but it was advisable for vulnerable groups such as the elderly, the sick, babies and pregnant women to eat only eggs which had been cooked until the white and the yolk were solid. I answered a private notice question in the House on 5 December at columns 19-24 which also set out that advice to the public.

The Government also took steps through a series of newspaper advertisements from 16 to 18 December 1988 to reiterate the advice of the Chief Medical Officer and to ensure that the facts on eggs were known to everyone.

Emergency Services

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the performance of hospital accident and emergency services at recent rail and air disasters.

Mr. Freeman: I am delighted to have this opportunity to put on record my appreciation of all that was done by both the hospital accident and emergency services and the ambulance services during the recent rail and air disasters. They coped magnificently and performed to the highest standard. Many more lives might have been lost were it not for the way in which they responded to those emergencies.

Hospitals (Capital Assets)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the value of the capital assets of each of the major acute hospitals with more than 250 beds.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 February 1989]: This information is not at present available. Establishing the current value of NHS assets will be one of the first steps in introducing the capital charging arrangements outlined in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Breast Milk

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has knowledge of any research or evidence on passage of listeria from the bloodstream into breast milk.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 20 February 1989]: As with many other organisms or substances carried in the bloodstream, listeria has been shown to pass from the bloodstream into breast milk. My Department is not aware of any current research.

Cook-Chill Food

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals are being considered by the Leeds western health authority to introduce cook-chill catering into hospitals in that area; and what consultations have taken place concerning this proposal.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: At its meeting on 24 March 1988 the Yorkshire regional health authority resolved to adopt in principle the findings of the report received from its regional catering strategy steering group "Regional Catering Strategy for the 1990s". Paragraph 31(a) of that report recommended a regional catering strategy for catering based on the use of cook-chill technology.

Leeds western health authority, along with other district health authorities in the region, will be considering the implications of this policy at local level. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of Leeds western health authority to establish what proposals, if any, he has under consideration.

Hospital Waiting Lists (Gloucester)

64. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current waiting list for operations in the Gloucester health authority area.

Mr. Mellor: At 31 March 1988 there were 4,005 patients on the in-patient waiting list for surgical specialities in Gloucester district health authority.

Smokers

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide figures to show changes in the proportion of smokers and non-smokers and the average daily number of cigarette expenditure per person and per household as a proportion of income in the last 30 years.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The information available centrally is given in the table.

	Percentage of population who smoke cigarettes (16+ years)		Cigarettes smoked per day (16+ years)		Tobacco expenditure as a percentage of household expenditure
	Males	Females	Males	Females
1972	52	41	17·1	12·4	4·5
1974	51	41	17·9	13·4	4·3
1976	46	38	18·4	14·4	4·2
1978	45	37	18·1	14·4	3·9
1980	42	37	17·7	14·6	3·5
1982	38	33	17·3	14·0	3·6
1984	36	32	16·4	13·7	3·4
1986	35	31	16·4	13·9	3·2

Note:
The figures on smoking exclude cigar and pipe smoking. In 1986 9 per cent. of men smoked a pipe or cigars.

Farmed Food

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the questions asked by the hon. Member for Caerphilly on 18 January concerning the possible contamination of farmed food.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I replied to the hon. Member yesterday.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Minister of State during his recent visit to Baghdad raised with the Iraqi Foreign Minister the reported use of chemical weapons by Iraqi forces and the reported repression of the Kurdish population; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 20 February to the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson). I also discussed the position of the Kurdish population of Iraq and human rights in the country during my visit.

CSCE

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the forthcoming CSCE forum on information in London, including the membership of the British delegation.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Information Forum is part of the Helsinki process and will deal with flows of information between East and West. Lord Rees-Mogg will lead the British delegation. We are currently considering the composition of the remainder of the delegation.

Council of Ministers (Voting)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, by meeting, date, and policy issue those occasions where the European Community Council of Ministers has reached a decision binding on all by qualified majority vote; and if he will break down the votes cast for and against by member state on each occasion.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 19 October 1988.

German Reunification

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have ever discussed at an official level with the Federal Republic of Germany, the implications of their declaration on the application of the European Community treaties to Berlin, Cmnd. 455, for German reunification.

Mrs. Chalker: Discussions between the Three Allied Powers (the United Kingdom, the United States of America, and France) and the Federal Republic of Germany relating to the application of the European Community Treaties to Berlin take place from time to time in the context of Allied rights and responsibilities relating to Berlin and to Germany as a whole.

EC Treaties (Protocols)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions on which the United Kingdom has been responsible as principal originator for the addition of protocols to the treaties upon which the European Community is founded, with reasons given for the action.

Mrs. Chalker: There have been none.

Mr. Sillars To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have, at any time in the past 10 years, discussed at an official level with the Federal Republic of Germany alone, or together with other states, the issue of German reunification.

Mrs. Chalker: We have made clear, in contacts with the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany, our view that real and permanent stability in Europe will be difficult to achieve so long as the German nation is divided against its will.

German Reunification

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government policy towards the reunification of Germany.

Mrs. Chalker: As my right hon. and learned Friend told my hon. Friend, the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel), on 8 February, successive British Governments have taken it as axiomatic that real and permanent stability in Europe will be difficult to achieve so long as the German nation is divided against its will.

EC (Nationality Discrimination)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what rules on the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality have been adopted by the Council to give effect to article 7 of the treaty establishing the European Economic Community.

Mrs. Chalker: The Treaty provisions on non-discrimination have been embodied in many Community instruments since 1957. Detailed information is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

EC Economic and Social Committee

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the current names, age and categories of United Kingdom members of the European Community Economic and Social Committee.

Mrs. Chalker: Following is the information requested:

Group 1 (Employers):

Mr. Ian Campbell CVO (66),
Miss E. G. Dodd (63),
Mr. K. J. Gardner FRSC (65),
Mr. C. A. Hancock (53),
Mr. J. A. de Normann (66),
Mr. W. G. Poeton (62),
Mr. K. M. Tamlin (60),
Mr. F. G. Whitworth (63);

Group 2 (Employees):

Mr. J. R. Boddy MBE (66),
Mr. Campbell Christie (52),
Mr. E. A. B. Hammond OBE (59),
Mr. T. Jenkins (42),
Miss A. Maddocks (61),
Mr. A. R. Smith (59),
Mr. L. J. Smith OBE (65);

Group 3 (Various Interests):
Mr. W. Aspinall (46),
Professor W. Black (62),
Mrs S. Flather JP (55),
Mr. R. J. Moreland (47),
Dr. A. Robinson (52),
Mr. G. Spiers (59),
Dr. P Storie-Pugh CBE, MC, TD, DL (69),
Mr. M. P. Strauss (60),
Mrs A. Williams MBE (60).

EC (Enlargement)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the further enlargement of the European Community.

Mrs. Chalker: We share in the consensus amongst member states that at least until 1992 the priority for the Community must be consolidation—in particular the completion of the single market and the full absorption of Spain and Portugal—not enlargement.

EC (Membership)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many states have formaly indicated a wish to enter into dialogue with the European Community with a view to ultimately becoming members.

Mrs. Chalker: Only one country, Turkey, has a formal application to join the European Community on the table. Morocco applied to join the Community in 1987, but the Council of Ministers took the view that this application should not be pursued. Norway completed accession negotiations in 1972, but did not in the event join the Community.

EC Treaties

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who may submit new protocols to the treaties upon which the European Community has its legal foundation; and what is the procedure for their assessment and final acceptance.

Mrs. Chalker: The procedure for amendments to the Treaty of Rome is laid down in article 236 of that Treaty. Similar provisions appear in article 204 of the Treaty establishing the EAEC and in article 96 of the Treaty establishing the ECSC.

Kampuchea

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government, as a member of the United Nations Security Council, will press for an international peace settlement on Kampuchea.

Mr. Eggar: We are already working for a peaceful settlement in Cambodia. We welcome current developments towards that goal.

Bangladesh

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Bangladesh on human rights issues.

Mr. Eggar: We have made clear to the Bangladesh Government the concern felt in this country about human rights issues. They were discussed most recently during the visit of President Ershad. Some hon. Members had the opportunity to raise these issues with President Ershad on 15 February.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 20 February.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and I attended the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 20 February. Much of the day was taken up with discussion in the framework of political co-operation of relations with Iran in the light of the threats against Mr. Salman Rushdie. My right hon. and learned Friend has already reported to the House on this.

The Council again discussed the dispute with the United States over the EC directive banning imports of meat from animals treated with hormones. The Commission reported agreement with the United States Administration of the establishment of a high-level group to find ways of resolving the dispute within 75 days. To the extent that United States suppliers send hormone-free meat to the EC, United States retaliatory measures would meanwhile be reduced. In view of this progress the Council took no decision to implement counter-retaliation. The Council adopted a regulation requiring national controls on the export of eight key chemical weapons precursors. This followed agreement at the EPC ministerial meeting on 14 February on the case for such a regulation. Though we already have strict controls on these and other CW precursors, the Government welcome this action.

The Presidency reported on the outcome of the first substantive EC/ACP ministerial negotiating meeting on the renewal of the Lomé convention, which was held in Brazzaville on 16/17 February, and attended by my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development.

The Council adopted negotiating mandates for trade and co-operation agreements with Poland and Bulgaria, discussed the Community's relations with Eastern Europe; and agreed a Community position for the San Jose V meeting on 27/28 February with the Central American states in San Pedro Sula, Honduras.

The Council discussed proposals introduced by the Netherlands Foreign Minister for improving co-ordination between the Community and the Council of Europe. This will be further discussed at the March Foreign Affairs Council.

An EC/Tunisia Cooperation Council was held in the margins of the Council.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Meat and Bone Meal

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether there have been any recent changes in the amount of meat and bone meal exported from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: I have no evidence of any changes in such exports.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether there have been any recent changes in the amount of meat and bone meal imported into Northern Ireland from the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: I have no evidence of any changes in such imports.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show the amounts of meat and bone meal imported into and exported from Northern Ireland, with the countries of origin and destination, in each of the last 12 months or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Viggers: The information available from Customs and Excise records relates only to trade between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland and is as follows:

Imports and exports of meat and bone meal

1988	To Northern Ireland Tonnes	From Northern Ireland Tonnes
January	2,252	149
February	2,373	250
March	2,757	391

Industrial Development Board

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any persons convicted of fraud have been employed (1) directly or (2) as consultants by the Industrial Development Board.

Mr. Viggers: I am not aware of any consultant or person directly employed by IDB who was convicted of fraud.

School Meals

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the expenditure on school meals for each year between 1978-79 and the latest date available, in current and constant prices.

Dr. Mawhinney: Net expenditure on school meals and milk is as follows:

Financial year	Cash £000	At 1987-88 prices £000
1978-79	17,031	34,761
1979-80	19,670	34,537
1980-81	18,088	26,813
1981-82	17,381	23,455
1982-83	19,152	24,121
1983-84	21,572	25,986
1984-85	22,417	25,704
1985-86	24,739	26,913
1986-87	25,580	26,929
1987-88	23,950	23,950

Note: Expenditure figures for school meals and milk are not recorded separately.

Emergency Provisions

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects Lord Colville's report on the operation of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Acts of 1978 and 1987 to be available.

Mr. Tom King: I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses today.

WALES

Water Industry

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has had any indication of the European Commission's view of the Government's proposal to restrict any one shareholding in the privatised water industry in Wales to 15 per cent.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 20 February at column 456.

Trunk Road Schemes

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those trunk road schemes in Wales on which he anticipates public inquiries being held during the current year with, where known, the likely date of the inquiry.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

Schemes in respect of which an Inquiry date has been fixed:—

Scheme	Date
A5 Ty-Nant to Dinmael Improvement (Clwyd)	24-27 January
A55 Rhuallt Hill Improvement (Clwyd)	7-17 February
M4/A4042 Brynglas Tunnels/Malpas Road Relief Scheme (Gwent)	Commenced 14 February
A458/A453 Welshpool Relief Roads (Powys)	Commencing 4 April

Schemes in respect of which Inquiries are anticipated but no dates yet fixed:

Scheme
A465	Aberdulais to Glynneath Improvement (West Glamorgan)
A487	Caernarfon to South of Port Dinorwic Improvement (Gwynedd)
A4042	Penperlleni Bypass (Gwent)
A487	Pont Seiont to Bontnewydd Improvement (Gwynedd)
A494	Mold Bypass (Clwyd)
A4060	Pentrebach to Mountain Hare Improvement (Mid Glamorgan)
A470	Llanbynmair Improvement (Powys)

Gross Domestic Fixed Capital Formation

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the present levels of gross domestic fixed capital formation in Wales; and what is the percentage change over (a) 1988 and (b) the period 1978-79 in both cash and real terms, and expressed in real terms as a percentage of gross domestic product on equivalent industries.

Mr. Peter Walker: The latest figure for gross domestic fixed capital formation for selected industry groups[1] in Wales is £1,505 million in 1986. Comparable figures are not available for 1978-79.

Note:
[1]The selected industry groups making up the total are: Agriculture; Forestry and Fishing; Energy and Water Supply; Manufacturing; Transport and Communications and Dwellings.

Gross Domestic Product

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average gross domestic product per head in Wales in each year since 1979, in real terms.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

GDP/Head at 1987 Prices[1]

Year	£
1979	4,440
1980	4,234
1981	4,115
1982	4,305
1983	4,467
1984	4,325
1985	4,719
1986	4,893
[2]1987	4,991

Source: Central Statistical Office.
[1] These figures have been deflated to 1987 prices using United Kingdom deflators as these are not available on a regional basis.
[2] Provisional data.

Wages

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average weekly wage of (a) full-time and (b) part-time workers for Wales for (i) males and (ii) females.

Mr. Peter Walker: In April 1988 the average gross weekly earnings of full-time adult males and females on adult rates of pay in Wales were £217·80 and £150·30 respectively. The figure for part-time females was £58·70. Data for part-time males is not available.

Income Statistics

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of people in each income quintile in Wales; and how many (a) families with children, (b) single-parent families, (c) pensioners and (d) disabled people are in each income quintile.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information by income quintile is not available.

School Meals

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the expenditure on school meals for each year between 1978-79 and the latest date available, in current and constant prices.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Expenditure on school meals and milk for the period requested is given in the following table:

School meals and milk—net current expenditure

Year	Cash (£000)	1986-87 prices (£000)
1978-79	24,673	48,089
1979-80	26,066	43,472
1980-81	23,455	33,026
1981-82	24,303	31,152
1982-83	27,008	32,311
1983-84	27,772	31,778
1984-85	29,745	32,396
1985-86	28,535	29,487
1986-87	29,601	29,601
[1]1987-88	30,219	28,704

[1] Data is provisional.
Note.—Net current expenditure is defined as current expenditure net of non-grant income (eg sales, fees and charges).

Home Improvement Grant

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each Welsh district council for each of the past 10 years (a) the number of home improvement grant applications, (b) the number approved, (c) the total value of the grants applied for, (d) the total value of the grants approved, (e) the percentage that (d) represents of (c) and (f) the total allocation to each authority in each year; and if he will make a statement regarding the likely effect of the proposed charges in the Local Government and Housing Bill on home improvement grants.

Mr. Grist: I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what a typical ward sister would pay in each Welsh district (a) in rates, (b) in community charge and (c) in a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in the proportions of 80-20, respectively, if she lived in a typical house paying at present average rates for the district.

Mr. Grist: Illustrative community charge figures and average domestic rates for each Welsh district were published in the Official Report on 29 July 1988 at column 656-58. I have made no detailed estimates of the impact of a system of capital value rates and local income tax in Wales.

Cash Limits

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if there is to be any change to the cash limit for class XVII vote 2 for the current financial year.

Mr. Peter Walker: Yes. The cash limit on class XVII vote 2 is to be reduced from £76,700,000 to £76,525,000 by a reduction of £175,000 in the grant-in-aid provision for the Development Board for Rural Wales. This will enable me to make a corresponding sum available from spare housing subsidy provision in the demand-led class XVII vote 3 to pay a grant to the DBRW under section 11 of the Development of Rural Wales Act 1976 towards the cost of making an immediate start on a programme of housing maintenance at Newtown in Powys.

Examinations Expenditure

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the number of children sitting (a) CSE exams, (b) O-level exams and (c) A-level exams in each local education authority in Wales as a percentage of the total number in the relevant year groups in each authority for the latest available year in which these examinations were sat;

(2) if he will list by each local education authority in Wales the total number of children achieving (a) CSE grades 2-5, (b) O-level grades A-C and CSE grade 1, and (c) A-level grades A to E as a percentage of the total number of pupils in the relevant year group in each authority, for the latest available year in which these examinations were sat.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 13 February 1989]: The information is not available in the form requested. It is impossible to identify a relevant year group for each type of examination. Pupils take CSE and O-level examinations in years 4 to 5 and all years of the 6th form. In 1986-87 the number of pupils attempting such exams exceeded the number of pupils aged 15 at the start of the academic year (5th formers). Similarly pupils take A-levels in the first, second and third years of the 6th form. The following table is based on a survey of 1987 school leavers. It shows the number of pupils attempting and achieving success in examinations as a percentage of all those who left school. The results will be subject to some sampling errors.

School Leavers 1986-87—Maintained schools only

Percentages

	Total Leavers	Attempting[1] CSE	'O' Level	'A' Level	Achieving[2] Lower Grades[3]	Higher Grades[4]	'A' Level Pass
Clwyd	6,260	88	84	16	87	56	15
Dyfed	4,675	75	78	21	75	56	19
Gwent	6,660	81	72	15	76	48	12

West Glamorgan	5,200	81	82	13	78	55	12
Wales	42,770	80	77	17	76	52	15

[1] A candidate attempting more than one type of examination is counted under each type.
[2] Those leavers who gain results in more than one of the categories shown are counted more than once, under each qualification achieved.
[3] 'O' level grades D-E, CSE grades 2-5.
[4] 'O' level grades A-C, CSE grade 1.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Polar Platform Satellite

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the negotiations with the European Space Agency concerning United Kingdom industrial participation in the polar platform satellite.

Mr. Atkins: The European Space Agency and its member states are currently reviewing alternative concepts for the polar platform in the light of studies led by British Aerospace and Matra respectively. The United Kingdom will be seeking the most cost-effective solution consistent with our objective of securing the progressive commercialisation of earth observation. British industry can expect to play a leading role in the development of whichever platform is selected to meet this end.

Liquidations

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what regulations govern the time limits within which liquidations of companies and businesses must be completed.

Mr. Atkins: There are no statutory time limits within which a liquidation must be completed but the insolvency rules 1986 provide that when the liquidator in an insolvent liquidation has realised such of the company's assets as he can without needlessly protracting the liquidation he shall declare a dividend, if funds are available for that purpose.

Franchise Businesses

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster pursuant to his answer of 15 February to the hon. Member for Devon, North if he will make it his policy to collect statistical and other details on franchise businesses; if he will establish a franchise unit within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I am not persuaded that the Government need such data and I am not clear what would be the objectives of a franchise unit.

British Aerospace (Contract)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what efforts were made to ensure that the £10 million worth of contracts arising from the construction of the British Aerospace air combat manoeuvering platform went to British fabrication yards.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs during oral questions on 15 February 1989 Official Report column 299 and reiterate that it is not for Government to interfere in the commercial decisions of companies.

Takeover Bids

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in respect of which takeover bids his Department received three deputations of hon. Members in 1988.

Mr. Atkins: Ministers in this Department met approximately 10 deputations of hon. Members in 1988 about takeover bids which included Nestle's bid for Rowntree, Goodman Fielder Wattie's bid for Ranks Hovis McDougall, and Elders IXL's bid for Scottish & Newcastle Breweries.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, he will give further details of the consideration given to early-day motions on takeover bids;

(2) what weight he gives to the number of hon. Members who have signed an early-day motion on a takeover bid.

Mr. Atkins: Due consideration is of course given to all early-day motions. However, the weight attributed to that consideration may vary.

Furniture (Foam Insulation)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to inform furniture retailers of the new foam insulation regulations coming into force on 1 March.

Mr. Forth: A total of 1,500 copies of the draft regulations were sent out on 1 March 1988. I then relied upon the usual channels of communication. The final regulations were submitted to Parliament in July, and interested parties were informed. These included the media generally, the trade press, local authority trading standards departments and all relevant trade associations. I am advised that the foam suppliers in particular have been meticulous in advising their customers about how their products comply with the new legal requirements. Guidance notes for the trade, which take account of initial reactions to the regulations, are being prepared and will be widely distributed soon.

I have not written to every furniture retailer in the country. The Department does not have a list of all such retailers' names and addresses.

Disabled People

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what provisions (a) Royal Mail (Letters), (b) Royal Mail (Parcels) and (c) Post Office (Counters) make to accommodate safely registered disabled persons in workplaces; and if there are safe areas of work specifically reserved for their disabled employees;

(2) how many people who are profoundly deaf are currently employed by Royal Mail (Letters) within the grade of postman/postwoman;

(3) what is the number of people employed by the Royal Mail (Letters) on permanent sorting duties whose normal mobility is restricted by having to use a wheelchair;

(4) what is the number of people currently employed by the Post Office within (a) Royal Mail (Letters), (b) Royal Mail (Parcels) and (c) Post Office (Counters);

(5) what is the number of people currently employed by the Post office within (a) Royal Mail (Letters), (b) Royal Mail (Parcels) and (c) Post Office (Counters) who are registered as disabled within the terms of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Acts 1944 and 1958;

(6) what numbers of people employed by Royal Mail (Letters) within the grade of (a) postmen, postwomen, (b) postmen, postwomen higher grade, (c) postal assistant, (d) postal officer, (e) postal executive class D, (f) postal executive class C, (g) postal executive class B, (h) postal executive class A, (i) doorkeepers and (j) cleaners are registered as disabled within the terms of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Acts 1944 and 1958;

(7) what are the numbers of people employed by Royal Mail (Letters) in the grades of postal executive class C and above; and how many of the total are (a) women, (b) of ethnic minority origin and (c) registered as disabled;

(8) if he will list the number of persons who are currently entered in the register of disabled persons within the terms of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Acts 1944 and 1958 who have applied for employment with (a) Royal Mail (Letters), (b) Royal Mail (Parcels) and (c) Post Office (Counters) during (i) 1984, (ii) 1985, (iii) 1986, (iv) 1987 and (v) 1988; and how many of these applicants were subsequently employed.

Mr. Forth: Questions of employment in the letters, parcels and counters businesses of the Post Office, including employment of different categories of people and facilities provided for them, are a matter for the Post Office. I am asking the Post Office to contact the hon. Member about these questions.

Domestic Animals (Pelts and Skins)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to introduce the separate logging of the quantities of exported dog pelts and cat skins.

Mr. Forth: No. There is insufficient trade to justify separate monitoring of such goods.

Clothing Industry

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will raise in the European Council of Ministers the need for arrangements to be in place before 1992 to prevent knitwear imports from Third world countries entering the Federal Republic of Germany through the German Democratic Republic and purporting to be manufactured in COMECON countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 21 February 1989]: Under the terms of inner German trade, goods originating in the German Democratic Republic may enter the Federal Republic of Germany free of import duty. This arrangement does not apply to other member countries of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (COMECON). The Federal authorities monitor consignments of textiles to ensure compliance with the origin requirements, and United Kingdom officials will shortly review these and other procedures with the Economics Ministry in Bonn to minimise the risk of abuse of inner German trade in the run-up to 1992 and beyond. If my hon. Friend is aware of any specific cases arousing concern I should be grateful if he would bring them to my attention.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Estate Agents

110. Mr. Battle: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any proposals for the reform of the process of house purchase and the practice of estate agents.

The Attorney-General: So far as reform of the process of house purchase is concerned, improvements in practice are needed rather than legislation and I welcome the work of the professions and the conveyancing standing committee of the Law Commission in this area. The practice of estate agents is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. I understand that consultations are continuing with estate agents' representatives and other interested groups.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Government Stocks

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list Government stocks which have sinking funds and are likely to be redeemed ahead of the final date for repayment; and whether he is obliged to redeem such stocks as soon as the sinking fund is sufficient to repay them.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 20 February 1989]: There are two United Kingdom Government securities with sinking funds:

3½ per cent. conversion loan (denominated in sterling); and Fifteen year 8 7/8 per cent. Bonds due 1993 (denominated in $ US).

In addition, guaranteed 4½ per cent. Bonds and Irish Free State 4½ Land Bonds, have a Government guarantee and sinking funds.

Terms and conditions of these securities are set out in their prospectuses. It is not the Government's practice to comment on any discretion the prospectus may afford.

Child Benefit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the increased revenue in 1988-89 if (a) the personal income tax allowances, (b) mortgage interest, (c) superannuation and personal pension contributions and (d) self-employed retirement annuity premiums were restricted to basic rate tax; by how much child benefit could be increased if all the extra revenue were used for this purpose; what would be the redistributive effects, by family type and income decile; and how many working families with children would be lifted off entitlement to family credit.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 31 January 1989]: Almost two-thirds of those who would pay more tax as a result of restricting personal allowances and other tax reliefs to the basic rate currently pay tax at the basic rate only: those near the top of the basic rate band would be pushed into paying tax at the higher rate. About 3½ million single people and married couples would pay more income tax: of those, about 2¼ million currently pay tax at the basic rate only.

Revised estimates of the direct revenue yield in 1988-89 if the allowances and reliefs had been restricted to the basic rate are:

	£ million
a. Personal allowances	1,160
b. Mortgage interest relief	330
c. Employees' superannuation and personal pension contributions	200
d. Retirement annuity relief[1]	100

[1] Including relief for retirement annuity payments made by employees.

Note: These estimates are based on a projection of the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes. No account is taken of possible behavioural changes or the effect on receipts of capital gains tax.

The yield arising from making the changes (a) to (d) simultaneously is £2,100 million, somewhat more than the sum of the yields from the four changes separately, since even more basic rate taxpayers would become higher rate payers. If all this were used to increase child benefit, it could be raised by about £4·40 a week in a full year and at 1988-89 prices. This assumes that child allowances in income support would be unchanged, with child benefit, as now, fully deductible from income support payments; and that there would be compensating reduction in the child additions for family credit.

Estimates of the effect on family credit case-load are very uncertain. On the basis of the assumptions in "Impact of reformed structure of income-related benefits" (October 1987), the case-load might be reduced by about a third, (around 150,000 families).

The tables show the combined effect, analysed by type of tax unit and income decile, of the net revenue yield or costs from restricting the allowances and reliefs to the basic rate and increasing child benefit.

(a) Net effect by type of tax unit gain to tax unit (+), loss to tax unit (−)

£ million

	With children	Without children	Total
Single	+ 90	− 210	− 120
Married one earner	+ 280	− 230	+ 50
Married two earners	+ 770	− 700	+ 70
Total	+1,140	−1,140	0

(b) Net effect by decile of total income[1]

5	+ 40
6	+ 120
7	+ 290
8	+ 470
9	+ 500
Highest	−1,440

[1] Deciles of income have been defined in terms of total income, including non-taxable benefits, but before the additional £4·40 per week of child benefit. Income has not been adjusted to equivalence levels to take account of the need of different types of tax units.

[2] Under £5 million.

The gains in the lower deciles from the increase in child benefit are negligible since the families with children in them will generally be entitled to income support or family credit. The increase in child benefit would therefore, in most cases, be offset by a corresponding reduction in income-related benefits.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Lomé 4

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he is able to make to the World Development Movement's charter for Lomé 4, in particular its requirement that Lomé 4 should assist the poorest farmers, support environmentally suitable development, reduce child mortality and improve other key health indicators and assess the impact of all projects on women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I welcome the charter's emphasis on support for the poorest, on improvement in environmental monitoring and assessment, on assistance to the health sector and on ensuring that the interests of women are properly taken into account. These are issues to which we attach great importance.

Bangladesh

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring of British bilateral aid to Bangladesh is undertaken by representatives of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Eggar: Our aid is monitored through regular visits by Overseas Development Administration staff, from both London and our south east Asia development division in Bangkok. The aid section of the British High Commission in Dhaka is responsible for day-to-day oversight of the programme.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Support Grant

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce the education support grant guidelines for 1989-90.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend announced on 15 December 1988 the allocations to individual LEAs of expenditure to be supported through ESGs in 1989-90. My right hon. Friend yesterday met representatives of the local authority associations for preliminary discussions about the content and scale of the 1990-91 programme. He will be announcing shortly a list of proposed activities for support in 1990-91 in the light of yesterday's discussions.

School Leavers

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children leave school before they are aged 16 years.

Mr. Butcher: It is estimated that, in England, during the academic year 1986-87, some 107,000 pupils left school before their 16th birthday.

Zidovudine

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will receive copies of all reports given by the independent data and safety monitoring committee to the chairmen of the MRC/INSERM co-ordinating committee of the trial on the benefits of zidovudine for healthy people who are HIV positive; and if he will make a statement;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 7 February, Official Report, column 608, how many participants have been enrolled to date in the Medical Research Council trial on the benefits of zidovudine for healthy people who are HIV positive in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) France.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend does not expect to receive copies of such reports; the conduct of the trial is a matter for the Medical Research Council and INSERM. the number of participants enrolled on the trial up to 15 February 1989 was 218 in the United Kingdom and 84 in France.

University Lecturers

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 750, if he will express the figures contained in his answer as a percentage of total university lecturing staff for each of the years 1980 to 1987.

Mr. Jackson: The information on lecturers leaving universities in Great Britain to take up employment or study abroad as a percentage of lecturers in post in the previous year is as follows:

	Non-clinical	Clinical	All
1980	0·7	1·8	0·8
1981	0·6	1·4	0·6
1982	0·6	1·4	0·7
1983	0·4	2·1	0·5
1984	0·5	1·0	0·5
1985	0·4	1·1	0·5
1986	0·6	1·2	0·6
1987	0·5	1·0	0·6

GCSE

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about advice available to students on choosing subjects for the GCSE examination.

Mrs. Rumbold: Schools are best placed to advise their pupils on choosing appropriate subjects at GCSE. In addition to giving pupils individual advice, many schools issue guidance booklets on their GCSE choices. DES publicity recommends that parents should make sure that their children take English, maths and science at GCSE.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which university laboratories concerned with animal experimentation use animals not bred specifically for this purpose; and who supplies the animals concerned.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not collected centrally.

School Meals

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing the expenditure on school meals for each year between 1978-79 and the latest date available, in current and constant prices.

Mr. Butcher: The information is given in the table:

Net expenditure on school meals and milk[1]—England

	Cash Terms £ million	1986-87 Real Terms[2] £ million
1978-79	388	756
1979-80	422	704
1980-81	397	559
1981-82	397	509
1982-83	411	492
1983-84	427	489
1984-85	432	471
1985-86	435	450
1986-87	459	459

[1] Net expenditure includes the salaries and wages of staff engaged in the preparation and supervision of the meal, the cost of food and overheads less the income received from pupils and adults who pay for their meals. It does not include any capital or capital financing costs. The figures include the costs of the school milk service which have not been collected separately since 1981-82.

[2]The cash figures for the earlier years have been repriced to 1986-87 real terms using the gross domestic products (market prices) deflator.

Universities and Polytechnics

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the financial independence of universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Jackson: Under the Education Reform Act, polytechnics in England are being re-established as institutions independent of local education authorities, with funding from the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council. Following the Act, there is a wide-ranging debate on the funding of higher education which the Government want to see develop and mature further. However, we are actively considering the possibility of some shift in the flow of public funds from the grants to be disbursed by the higher education funding councils towards students' fees met under the mandatory awards arrangements.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information has been given by his Department or by those acting on its behalf, directly or indirectly, to journalists or others, which has specified in respect of complaints relating to the conduct of ballots for grant-maintained schools, the names of the local education authority concerned and the nature of the complaint; when; by whom; and to whom.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: When asked about concerns relating to the conduct of ballots my Department has referred to reports which have appeared in the media.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what decisions he has made on the applications which he has received for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today informed the governing bodies of Skegness grammar school, Lincolnshire and Audenshaw high school, Tameside that I have approved their proposals that their schools should become grant-maintained from September 1989.

Teachers (Shortages)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the measures which have been taken by Her Majesty's Government since 1985 in respect of teacher shortages; what was the total cost of each measure; and if he will make a statement on their effect.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The table shows the principal measures taken since the introduction of our action programme on teacher shortages in 1986, and their costs to date.

	Measures	Total cost £ million
(i)	Bursary scheme for trainee teachers in maths, physics, CDT	6·381
(ii)	Support for LEAs in-service training in shortage subjects in order to upgrade teachers' skills and conversion of teachers in other subjects to maths, physics and CDT	35·5
(iii)	Support for new initiatives in higher education institutions and the Open University for new types of initial and in-service training provision, including distance learning packs and more flexible training arrangements	6·4
(iv)	TASC (Teaching as a Career) Unit to promote teaching as a career and improve recruitment practices among local education authorities and initial teacher training institutions	0·725
(v)	TASC advertising and publicity campaigns	1·179
(vi)	Production of video teaching programmes by the BBC, Thames TV and Yorkshire TV for in-service training use	0·435
(vii)	Pump priming support for local initiatives to improve supply in shortage subjects	0·050
(viii)	Taster courses for mature people and others to encourage entry or return to teaching	0·040
(ix)	Regional conferences with the Scientific Technology Regional Organisation (SATRO) on how industry can help to alleviate shortages	0·010

It is too early to make a definitive assessment of the effectiveness of the action programme. We have commissioned an independent evaluation of all our teacher shortage initiatives from the University of Bath. The first report of the findings of that study was published last June and is available in the Library. A final reort is due this autumn. I am, however, satisfied that our action programme is effective.

The bursary has been successful in reversing the decline in recruitment to initial teacher training courses in shortage subjects. Recruitment to maths, physics and CDT has increased by 27·8 per cent., 24·9 per cent. and 38·2 per cent. since 1986. The fall in vacancy figures suggests that our measures generally are having an impact on shortages.

Residential Special Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has yet decided upon arrangements for the future administration of the Inner London Education Authority's residential special schools located outside Inner London.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received the report of the working party that he set up last year to consider the future of ILEA's residential special schools located outside Inner London. A copy has been placed in the Library.

With the agreement of the inner London boroughs, the report recommends an allocation of the schools to the inner London boroughs, which will become responsible for their maintenance. It also recommends that the boroughs should agree on co-ordinating arrangements for planning and policy issues relating to the schools.

My right hon. Friend accepts that the recommendations on the allocation of schools provide a secure basis for the future maintenance of these establishments, within the new framework of education in inner London. His final decisions on allocation will be taken in the light of boroughs development plans, which are to be published by the end of this month. He will moreover, wish to consider further the boroughs' proposals for co-ordinating arrangements for these schools. In view of the specalist nature of these schools he is concerned that there should be sound and workable arrangements for ensuring that the future planning and management of these schools will be on a rational and coherent basis. Before taking a final view on that matter the Secretary of State will wish to review the boroughs' proposed arrangements for voluntary co-ordination and is accordingly inviting the Inner London education advisory committee to inform him of the outcome of its discussions on this subject.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Race Relations

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken by his Department to eradicate the circulation of racist literature to black prisoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Prison department's race relations policy statement, and other guidance issued to governors, makes it abundantly clear that racist language and literature will not be tolerated. Any governor who becomes aware that racist literature is being circulated in his or her establishment would be expected, with the assistance of the establishment's race relations liaison officer, to ensure that the matter is fully investigated and that, wherever possible, those responsible for its circulation are identified and dealt with appropriately.

AIDS

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the Government's policy on the confidentiality of a person's HIV status in United Kingdom prisons; if he will outline who is told when a person is diagnosed HIV antibody positive or with AIDS and for what reasons; and what measures are taken regarding a HIV antibody positive prisoner and for what reasons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The importance of preserving medical confidentiality has been stressed in guidance on the management of prisoners with HIV infection which has been issued to governors, medical officers and prison service staff in England and Wales. However, the Department considers that it has a duty to ensure, on grounds of health and safety, that staff with an operational need to know are informed of the presence and identity of prisoners who are a potential risk to them and to other prisoners.

We have, therefore, established a system under which such members of staff are informed of prisoners who are subject to viral infectivity restrictions (VIR). Since such restrictions, which are at the discretion of the medical officer but will usually determine the prisoner's living accommodation and may limit access to certain regime activities, may be applied to prisoners with HIV or other infective conditions disclosure of VIR status does not entail disclosing a diagnosis.

Practice elsewhere in the United Kingdom is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Local Government

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money was paid to local authorities under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: The amount of grant paid under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 to local authorities in respect of each of the last 10 years for which information is available is given in the table. Grant is paid at the rate of 75 per cent. of an authority's eligible expenditure. Figures for 1987-88 are not yet available as a number of authorities have not yet submitted audited claims.

Year	Grant
1977-78	24,656,387
1978-79	28,273,873
1979-80	34,481,552
1980-81	45,767,083
1981-82	54,754,571
1982-83	65,305,918
1983-84	[1]74,017,662
1984-85	[1]72,819,943
1985-86	[1]80,808,402
1986-87	[1]87,177,400

[1] Provisional figure.

NACRO

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officials from his Department have acted as observers on the council of the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders and its network of advisory committees since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

Home Office observers

	NACRO council	NACRO advisory committees
1979-80	1	5
1980-81	1	7
1981-82	1	8
1982-83	1	7
1983-84	1	8
1984-85	1	11
1985-86	1	10
1986-87	1	11
1987-88	1	8

Parole System

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had on the Carlisle report on the parole system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have received a number of representations. We have asked interested individuals and organisations to send us their comments by 10 March. We shall then consider the recommendations carefully in the light of the responses we have received.

Probation Officers

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Office if he will provide the age and service profile of senior probation officers and their position on the salary scale; and what would be the cost of abolishing the first five salary incremental points.

Mr. John Patten: The 1,066 senior probation officers in post in April 1988 were distributed across the salary scale as follows:

Point on scale	Percentage of SPOS
10	47

If all officers on points one to five were moved to point six, the cost would be £380,000 in the first year—excluding any consequential increase for officers already at or above point six. Information on the age and service profile of senior probation officers is not available centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, if available at all.

Paddy Armstrong

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what medical attention has been offered to Paddy Armstrong, currently being held in Her Majesty's Prison, Gartree; and if he will make a statement on his medical condition.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Specific clinical information pertaining to individual prisoners is confidential and is not normally disclosed. I have no information which suggests that Mr. Armstrong's general medical condition is other than satisfactory.

Gerard Conlon

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what medical attention has been offered to Gerard Conlon, currently being held in Her Majesty's Prison, Long Lartin; and if he will make a statement concerning his medical condition.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Specific clinical information pertaining to individual prisoners is confidential and is not normally disclosed. I have no information which suggests that Mr. Conlon's general medical condition is other than satisfactory.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times Gerard Conlon, currently being held in Her Majesty's Prison, Long Lartin, has been moved since first being held in 1974.

Mr. Dougals Hogg: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Cat Theft

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action he intends to take following the evidence on cat thefts contained in the recent Petwatch special report, a copy of which he has been sent;

(2) which police forces record reported losses of cats.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is for the chief officers to decide how reports of stolen or missing property are recorded. We are not persuaded that the information contained in the National Petwatch report necessitates any new action on cat theft.

Refugees

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to extend the scope of section II of the Local Government Act 1966 to include within its remit non-commonwealth refugees.

Mr. John Patten: The possibility of legislative changes, which would be necessary if the scope of the grant under section II of the Local Government Act 1966 were to be extended to cover communities from outside the Commonwealth, was within the terms of reference of the scrutiny of the grant system which my right hon. Friend announced in reply to a question from my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson) on 26 May 1988 at column 279. My right hon. Friend is at present studying the report of the scrutiny.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate for each week in 1988 the number of passengers arriving at (a) Heathrow, (b) Gatwick and (c) Dover holding entry clearance and arriving from each of (i) India, (ii) Pakistan, (iii) Bangladesh, (iv) Ghana and (v) Nigeria.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 13 February 1989]: The available information is compiled only on a monthly basis and relates to total admissions of passengers excluding those exempt from requiring entry clearance. The data available for 1988 is given in the following table.

Total admissions of passengers excluding those exempt from requiring entry clearance[1] by certain nationalities and ports in 1988

PRIME MINISTER

Residents (Registration)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the minimum and maximum number of separate registers in which residents of the United Kingdom are given separate numbers; and if she can estimate the cost and number of people needed to maintain all such registers.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally.

General Hershad

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what meetings she has had with General Hershad, President of Bangladesh; and what subjects were discussed.

The Prime Minister: I had talks with, and gave dinner for, President Ershad on 16 February. The talks covered both bilateral and regional issues.

ENERGY

Wave Energy

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on 20 January, Official Report, column 343, he will place in the Library a copy of the minutes of the meeting of the Advisory Council on Research and Development at which the decision was made concerning the closure of the offshore wave energy programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A copy of a summary of the main conclusions and recommendations of the Advisory Council on Research and Development on the wave energy programme was placed in the Libraries of both Houses on 27 April 1982.

Wind Power

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made by his Department in the consideration of the potential of offshore wind power during the past seven years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The technical potential of offshore wind power has been estimated at around 140 Twh/year at an expected cost of electricity in the range 4·2– 7·4 p/kWh. These estimates are based on collaborative studies which were jointly funded by my Department and the CEGB, and have taken into account constraints imposed by other offshore activities. The extent to which any of this resource could be economically exploited will be the subject of further work.

The United Kingdom has also participated in an International Energy Agency (IEA) study of offshore wind energy conversion systems which considered the technical and economic problems of exploiting this resource.

Electricity Supply System (Merseyside and North-West)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated value of the electricity supply system covering (a) Merseyside and (b) the north-west.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the electricity supply industry. I shall ask the chairman of the Merseyside and North Wales and the North Western Electricity boards to write to the hon. Member.

Safe Integrated Reactor

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the proposed Anglo-American consortium plans for a safe integrated reactor.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has informed my Department of its interest in developing a 300MWe reactor as a member of the SIR consortium. The consortium's proposals are at an early stage and I shall be kept informed of developments.

Foreign Coal

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list by year, port and tonnage the amount of foreign coal imported into England and Wales for the last five years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested is as follows:

Port	Quantity (000 tonnes)
	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988

Nuclear Power Generation (Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has regarding the likely growth of nuclear power generation in the three counties of Yorkshire over the next 15 years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has received no application from the CEGB for consent to construct any nuclear power station in Yorkshire. It is for the CEGB to decide whether and when to apply for consent to construct any new power station.

Yorkshire Coalfields (Employment)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list his latest estimate of the level of employment in British Coal in the Yorkshire coalfields in 1990 and 1995.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals are being considered for customer rights following the privatisation of electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Electricity Bill currently before Parliament will create many new customer rights, including an improved right to an electricity supply, protection for consumers who get their electricity from a landlord, protection for the elderly and disabled, help for those having difficulty paying bills and a new system of guaranteed standards of performance with automatic compensation for failures to meet these standards. The director general of electricity supply will have a statutory duty to protect the interests of the consumer, and the new regional consumers' committees will provide him with lay advice on consumer issues.

Wood Crops

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps (a) he has taken and (b) he will take to promote the use of arable wood crops or wood chips as a fuelstock for conversion into electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Investigation of the economic prospects for the use of wood crops and wood chip as a fuelstock has formed part of my Department's research, development and demonstration programmes on biofuels for the past decade and just over £1·5 million has been spent in this area.

Projects so far have looked at the potential for harvesting, processing, storing and transporting of fuel wood as well as investigations of novel systems such as integrated or whole tree harvesting and also combustion trials. In addition, we have supported studies of short rotation energy forestry including the establishment and development of trial plots and coppice harvesting techniques as well as the possible environmental impact.

Our intention for the future programme is laid out in energy paper 55, copies of which are in the Libraries of both Houses.

Within my Department's plans for electricity privatisation, wood crops or wood chip will be eligible to contribute towards the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Energy Act 1983

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements he proposes to succeed the provisions of sections 5 and 7 of the Energy Act 1983 as they apply in England and Wales.

Mr. Parkinson: Our privatisation proposals are designed to increase competition in generation by bringing new entrants into the market. We have not, however, overlooked those independent generators who are currently supplying area boards.

We appreciate that there are existing projects where investments have been advanced against the backdrop of the 1983 Energy Act and the obligation under the Act on area boards to purchase independently-produced electricity. We wish to ensure that the changes brought about by privatisation do not disadvantage those who have invested in generating plant as a result of the Act and who are currently selling to area boards under its terms. I am therefore pleased to announce that area board chairmen in England and Wales have agreed to transitional arrangements which will safeguard those generators, and leave them no worse off in revenue income terms than at present. Similar arrangements have been agreed in Scotland.

I can therefore confirm that generators who have entered into arrangements with the area boards to supply electricity since the 1983 Act will, if they choose, be able to continue those arrangements for a five-year transitional period. The boards will maintain energy and capacity payments at comparable levels to those available under the Act. This is a significant commitment by the boards to independent generators and it will assist those whose decisions on plant investment have been influenced by the existence of the provisions of the Energy Act in planning for the future.

It would be inconsistent with the general thrust of privatising the industry to enshrine in legislation a permanent protection for Energy Act generators. It would also be wrong in principle to extend their transitional arrangements to those who invested in capacity and were supplying area boards before the passage of the 1983 Act.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons have (a) joined and (b) dropped out from the employment training programme each month since the scheme began, both in each region and nationally.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is given in the table. The number of employment training leavers includes early leavers and those who have completed their training. The figure is estimated and is only available nationally.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is (a) the number entering employment training each month, (b) the number of trainees entering practical experience placements each month, (c) the number leaving employment training each month and (d) the reasons given for leaving each month by trainees on (i) a national and (ii) an area office basis.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The following tables give the number entering employment training each month nationally and by area. Information on the number entering practical placements is not collected. The number leaving employment training is currently only available for Great Britain as a whole and is estimated. Regional and area breakdowns of this information will be available from April of this year. Data on the reasons given by trainees for leaving employment training is not currently available but it will be obtained from follow up surveys. The first results should be available by the end of the year.

Health and Safety

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many companies have been convicted of offences under section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act in each of the last five years for which records are available; how many and what percentage were convicted and acquitted, respectively; and what penalties were imposed on those convicted;

(2) how many individuals have been convicted of offences under section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act in each of the last five years for which records are available; how many and what percentage were convicted and acquitted, respectively; and what penalties were imposed on those convicted.

Mr. Nicholls: Centrally available statistics from the records of the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates and of local authorities which include almost all the relevant proceedings are given in the table. These do not distinguish between companies and individuals but the large majority of proceedings are against companies.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many individual employees were convicted under section 6 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act in each of the last five years for which records are available; how many and what percentage were convicted and acquitted, respectively; and what penalties were imposed on those convicted.

Mr. Nicholls: Two individual employees have been prosecuted under section 6 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act in the last five years—one in 1987 and one in 1985. Both were convicted. The sentences were a £200 fine and a conditional discharge.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to what percentage of the national average wage the national minimum wage is in (a) France, (b) Netherlands, (c) Spain, (d) Portugal and (e) Luxembourg.

Mr. Nicholls: The following is the latest available information:

France 58 per cent.; Netherlands (October 1987) 58 per cent.; Spain (December 1987) 40 per cent.; Portugal (March 1988) 63 per cent.; Luxembourg (December 1988) 30 per cent.

The percentages are based on different datum points and coverage: they are not, therefore, directly related and cannot be taken as a comparative measure between the different countries.

Benefit Claims (Merseyside)

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people had unemployment benefit claims disallowed by adjudication officers, in the adjudication area covering Merseyside, on the ground that claimants were not available for work, in each quarter since 1986; and what was the number of claims disallowed as a percentage of total claims.

Mr. Lee: The table shows, over the period for which figures are available, the number of persons whose entitlement to unemployment benefit was disallowed because they were considered not to be available for work for the area requested.

Information requested on the number of claims disallowed as a percentage of the total claims made is not available.

Training

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest information available on the number of people who transferred from the community programme to employment training; and what is this figure as a percentage of community programme participants.

Mr. Nicholls: To the end of December 1988, the latest date for which information is available, it is estimated that about 9,000 people had transferred from the community programme to employment training. This is about 5 per cent. of the number on the community programme at 31 August 1988. These figures exclude people who transferred to employment training after completing their work on the community programme.

Horseracing (Safety)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many serious accidents at work have occurred at (a) horseracing and (b) equestrian establishments; and how many workers have been permanently disabled in each case for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Nicholls: Information relating to accidents at horse racing and equestrian establishments is not separately recorded.

Information on workers permanently disabled as a result of such accidents is not recorded.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many visits have been made by Health and Safety Executive inspectors to (a) horseracing and (b) equestrian establishments in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not separately recorded and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

YTS

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been YTS trainees in (a) the agricultural industry and (b) the horse industry in each of the last five years; how many were involved in accidents in each year; and if he will give a breakdown of the accidents according to severity.

Mr. Cope: Figures of the number of individual trainees experiencing YTS in the agriculture and horse industries in each of the last five years are not available in this form.

Information on fatal, major and minor accidents in the agricultural and the horse industry before 1988 is not available.

Information for 1988 is as follows:

1988 Equestrian accidents[1]

	Fatal	Major injuries[2]	Minor injuries
Total number reported to the Training Agency	None	20	61
Number which would not have been reported to HSE	None	2	5

1988 Agricultural accidents[1]

	Fatal	Major injuries[2]	Minor injuries
Total number reported to the Training Agency	None	48	183
Number which would not have been reported to HSE	None	8	28

[1] Training Agency accident figures for YTS have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive for employed people. However, the Agency's figures include a number of accidents, in particular road traffic accidents during scheme time and accidents to trainees in educational establishments, which may not have been reportable to the Executive had the individuals been employed.
[2] From 1 April 1986 major injuries have been classified according to severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR).

Health and Safety (Agriculture)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the degree of involvement of trade union representatives in health and safety in the agricultural industry; and how many establishments have trade union safety representatives.

Mr. Nicholls: Trade union representatives take part in discussions on health and safety issues in the agricultural industry through the Health and Safety Commission's agriculture industry advisory committee and its working parties, and directly with agricultural employers. A survey carried out by the Health and Safety Executive in 1979 found that trade union-appointed safety representatives were present in only 1 per cent. of agricultural establishments. However, as only about 30 per cent. of such establishments have one or more regular employees, this figure covered about 15 per cent of agricultual employees. The Executive is currently updating its 1979 findings by means of a new survey.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will introduce legislation to enforce the appointment of appropriate trade union safety representatives in the agricultural industry.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The Safety Representatives and Safety Committees Regulations 1977 allow recognised trades unions to appoint safety representatives in agriculture and in other industries. Trades union are not obliged to appoint safety representatives, nor are employers obliged to recognise trades unions. This is a matter for negotiation between unions and the employers concerned.

Fraud Investigators

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) from what date it is intended to deploy any fraud investigators at the Borough unemployment benefit office;

(2) where are the fraud investigators, to be based at the Borough unemployment benefit office, currently based;

(3) whether fraud investigators to be based at the Borough unemployment benefit office will have access to case files in other local unemployment benefit offices; which other local offices will be visited by the fraud investigators; and for what periods;

(4) when fraud investigators are based at the Borough unemployment benefit office, how cases will be selected for investigation.

Mr. Lee: There is no intention to employ investigators at Borough unemployment benefit office in addition to those already operating there to deal with local fraud cases. As has always been the practice, cases are referred to investigators because evidence of suspected fraud has come to light including through such means as observation on signing days and investigations with employers.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many fraud investigators are employed in each regional office covering the Greater London area;

(2) what targets are set by regional offices for individual investigators or teams of investigators.

Mr. Lee: There are 109 investigators and no targets are set for these investigators by regional office.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many fraud investigators reporting to the south-east regional office are operating from or are expected to operate from the Borough unemployment benefit office at Keyworth house;

(2) why fraud investigators are employed at a regional level; and what is their relationship with fraud staff employed at an area level.

Mr. Lee: The new inner London fraud team has been set up to investigate the hidden economy in London. It will concentrate on investigating fraud at the place of employment to identify those people who are working and also claiming unemployment benefit. Investigation of individual cases of fraud will be dealt with by existing sector fraud teams who may refer particular cases to the inner London fraud team if, for example, an employer is found to be employing a number of benefit recipients. None of the inner London fraud team will operate from Keyworth house.

Tourism

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the effects of different per capita rates of public spending on tourism in the constituent parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 20 February 1989]: Government per capita support for tourism through the national tourist boards and the Highlands and Islands development board in 1987-88 was as follows:

	Funding £	Average expenditure per head of population £
England	23,335,000	0·5
Scotland	17,211,000	3·4
Wales	8,625,000	3·0
Northern Ireland	4,813,000	3·1

In addition, the Government provide a wide range of other forms of assistance in support of tourism-related industries. However, differences in the composition of public expenditure in different parts of the United Kingdom mean that information on the effect of this could not realistically be obtained.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time jobs (i) male and (ii) female there were in March 1979 and March 1989 in the (a) industrial (b) nursing (c) agriculture and fishing and (d) service sectors in the (i) United Kingdom and (ii) Scotland.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The available information is given in table A and table B for March 1979 and September 1988 (the latest date for which figures are available) and relates to employees in employment. There are no estimates of full-time and part-time employees in employment in Northern Ireland for these dates, and therefore no estimates for the United Kingdom. The only available information about full and part-time employment in Scotland in March 1979 and September 1988 is for female employees in employment.

Comparisons between March and September will be influenced by the effects of seasonal variation.

TRANSPORT

Railways (Electrification)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost of electrification of the Cambridge-King's Lynn railway line; what is his estimate of the average numbers of passengers travelling between Ely and King's Lynn in any day or week; and if he will publish the calculations which show the expected return on this investment over the route (a) Cambridge to Ely, (b) Ely to King's Lynn and (c) Cambridge to King's Lynn.

Mr. Portillo: The total cost of the project is estimated at £20·1 million, of which £11 million will be spent on the necessary infrastructure. The Department has no separate figures for passenger loadings between Ely and King's Lynn. This project was, as usual, appraised using a 7 per cent. discount rate, and was shown to be the most cost-effective way of continuing to operate this line.

Trunk Road Schemes

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those trunk road schemes in England on which he anticipates public inquiries being held during the current year with, where known, the likely date of the inquiry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We anticipate that the following public inquiries may be held in February-March 1989, and 1989-90. An inquiry may not be necessary if all objections can be resolved after publication of draft orders.

1. Schemes where a Public Inquiry has been announced

Scheme	Date

Schemes marked with an asterisk* are those where a public inquiry to establish the line has already been held, and supplementary orders, side roads orders and/or compulsory purchase orders are under consideration.

Scheme timings are based on the latest available planning information and may be subject to change.

A69 (Hexham)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the traffic flow on the A69 west of Hexham during the past 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: From information available traffic flows during the period are recorded as follows:

Location	Year	Annual average daily flow
Between Haydon Bridge and Bardon Mill	1979	5,804
	1985	7,300
	1987	7,705
	1988	8,726
Between Haydon Bridge and Hexham	1982	7,705
	1987	8,308

Cottingley Bar-Shipley Bypass (Tunnel)

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the proposal for a long tunnel between Cottingley Bar and the Shipley eastern bypass, submited as option B in the current public consultation exercise, has been subjected to COBA analysis; and if the will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The tunnel option, included in the recent information brochure issued by the Department, was subjected to COBA analysis.

Relative to the other options considered, the tunnel schemes would have high constructions costs. This effects the economic return. A single carriageway scheme would have a low positive net present value, and a dual carriageway scheme would be negative. The other effects of the tunnel options were summarised in the framework shown in the brochure.

London Traffic Model

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what have been the total costs incurred to his Department in the development and use up until discontinuance of the London area model at the Transport and Road Research Laboratory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 21 February 1989]: The total cost of the development and use of the London area model, up until the decision to withdraw it from further use, was some £138,000.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the total costs incurred to his Department by the use of the London transportation studies model; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 21 February 1989]: The Department assumed responsibility for the LTS model and databases on the abolition of the GLC. Contracts for the continuation of LTS services were placed first with the London residuary body and then from May 1987 with the MVA consultancy. We intend shortly to invite tenders for a new contract.

The total costs incurred for the period April 1986 to December 1988 were about £2·1 million. This figure covers development, maintenance and use of both the London transportation studies model and the databases associated with it.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any intentions to utilise a package of models to assist in the analysis of strategic policy options in relation to transport planning in London in view of inherent problems in any such model; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 21 February 1989]: The Department makes considerable use of mathematical transport models in its analytical work and, for London, the LTS is the principal model in use. The output from such models is only one consideration in deciding between policy options. Such models represent a much simplified view of the complex interaction between transport choices made by the individuals and the operational and financial consequences for the various transport modes. Great care has to be taken in interpreting their results.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Wages Board

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will extend the Agriculture Wages Board Order to cover private gardeners, estate workers, gamekeepers and equestrian workers;

(2) whether grooms who work at establishments which are both equestrian and farms are covered by the agricultural wages board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 10 February 1989 to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) at columns 830-31.

Salmonella and Eggs

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer of 13 February to the hon. Member for the Western Isles, Official Report, column 94, whether he placed a copy of the joint Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Department of Health and British Egg Industry Council working group report on salmonella and eggs in the Library at 10.45 am or 10.45 pm on Tuesday 7 February.

Mr. MacGregor: I placed a copy of the joint Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Department of Health and British Egg Council working group on salmonella and eggs in the Library of the House at about 10.45 am on Tuesday 7 February 1989.

Milk Quota

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has made of the amount of additional milk quota agreed at the Council meeting of 23 January which will accrue to United Kingdom producers; what proposals the European Economic community has for uses for the extra milk produced.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The additional amount of milk quota which will accrue to United Kingdom producers will depend on the number and size of eligible applications received. There are no proposals to divert the increased production to specific uses.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will identify the nature of the additional costs of £64 million which will result in the European Economic Community budget in consequence of the decision of 23 January to increase milk quotas by 600,000 tonnes; and if he will indicate the nature of the policy changes also adopted on 23 January which will offset £41 million of this cost.

Mr. Donald Thompson: EC Commission estimates assume that the additional 600,000 tonnes of milk quota will give rise to a corresponding increase in Community exports of milk products, which would increase expenditure on export refunds by 99 million ecus (£64 million). An additional cost, estimated at 21 million ecus (£14 million), results from a 0·5 per cent. reduction of the milk co-responsibility levy for producers delivering 60,000 kg of milk or less. The 2 per cent. reduction of the butter intervention price yields estimated savings of 85 million ecus (£55 million).

Food Policy

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what expenditure by the European Economic Community on food policy is permitted under the February 1988 agreement on legally binding spending controls; if possible additional spending on the consequences of exceptional circumstances as determined by the Council falls to be contained within the spending controls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The financial guideline for expenditure in the guarantee section of the CAP covers all expenditure on agricultural market support and 50 per cent. of expenditure on set-aside. The guideline for 1989 is 28,624 million ecu (£18,500 million), which is 1,863 million ecu (£1,200 million) above the corresponding provision in the 1989 Community budget.

There is no general provision which would permit expenditure to exceed the guideline in exceptional circumstances. However, there is a monetary reserve of 1,000 million ecu (£650 million) to cover additonal expenditure or savings arising from significant movements in the dollar against the ecu. If the dollar falls to such an extent that extra spending of more than 400 million ecu (£260 million) is generated, the excess amount is transferred from the reserve. Conversely savings of more than 400 million ecu resulting from a rise in the dollar are transferred from the agriculture budget into the reserve. If the dollar/ecu exchange rate maintains its current level payments into the reserve will take place in 1989.

Bovine Somatotropin

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received from the Veterinary Products Committee concerning the safety of Monsanto's bovine somatotropin for cows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 6 February at column 573.

Eggs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what production standards are required for eggs to be classified as free range.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The relevant production standards are laid down in Commission regulation EEC 95/69, as amended in particular by Commission regulation EEC 1943/85.

Feedstuffs

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which of the European Community states have a mandatory requirement for the sterilisation of animal feedstuffs, particularly poultry.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 20 February 1989]: In the United Kingdom animal protein intended for use in feedingstuffs is heated or otherwise treated in order to destroy salmonella organisms. We do not have precise information on requirements in other member states of the European Community. But the provisions of the EC directives on feedingstuffs require all member states to prescribe that animal feedingstuffs may be marketed only if they are wholesome, unadulterated and of merchantable quality.

Salmonella Enteritidis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to commission research into the epidemiology of salmonella enteritidis in free-range flocks of laying hens.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 February 1989]: Cultural and serological findings from the veterinary laboratory are providing epidemiological information on salmonella enteritidis in poultry. A specific research project at the central veterinary laboratory is being formulated and the results are likely to have application to all laying hens.

SCOTLAND

Craft Enterprises

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will commission an independent study of the financial and other needs of small craft enterprises working in rural areas in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Support for the crafts industry in Scotland is provided through the Scottish Development Agency and the Highland and Islands development board. Both bodies provide a range of financial and other support to the industry in line with its support for other types of small businesses. These bodies also fund Craftpoint, a limited company providing marketing services to the crafts industry throughout Scotland. The functions of Craftpoint are shortly to be reviewed and I have asked the agencies to prepare a consultation document on the long-term strategy for the crafts industry in Scotland incorporating the findings of this review.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider increased financial support for craft industries in rural areas in Scotland, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands development board both view support for the crafts industry as a priority function and there is no evidence that viable projects are being lost through lack of funding. Decisions on the level of financial support are for the agencies to make within their overall approved budget provisions.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report those powers that currently exist to provide capital or revenue grants or loans to small craft enterprises in rural areas.

Mr. Lang: Under the provisions of their Acts, both the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands development board have a wide range of powers which enable them to support the crafts industry through the provision of financial assistance, premises, advisory, marketing and other services.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the initiatives he has taken to promote the interests of small craft businesses in rural areas since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands development board, together with Craftpoint, are actively involved in the promotion of the crafts industry in Scotland. For example, Craftpoint sponsors an annual highland trade fair held each year in Aviemore and the Scottish Development Agency maintains a crafts collection which is used for promotional purposes.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a catalogue of established craft enterprises in Scotland financed by central funds, to be updated on a regular basis.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Development Agency publishes a quarterly news sheet entitled "Crafts News" which includes a list of all crafts enterprises assisted by the agency through grant funding during the previous quarter. Information on assistance provided to crafts enterprises by the Highlands and Islands development board is not available.

Taxi Licensing

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of taxi operators' licences available for issue by Glasgow district council; how many have been issued; and how many are available for re-issue.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally. A forthcoming consultation paper on the review of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 will address, inter alia, the licensing arrangements for taxis and private hire cars.

Rural Areas (Hospital Beds)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many beds there were available in hospitals in rural areas in Scotland at the latest date for which figures are available; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested is not available. There is no satisfactory definition of a rural area in relation to hospitals and their catchment population.

Rural Areas (General Practitioners)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioners there are in rural practices in Scotland at the latest date for which figures are available; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: For statistical purposes medical practices are classified by health boards as urban, semi-urban or rural. At 1 April 1988, the date of the latest information available, the number of medical practices classified as rural was 341; at 1 October 1979 the number similarly classified was 316.

Health Authorities (Priorities)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will order the publication of the "Scottish Health Authorities, Review of Priorities for the Eighties and Nineties".

Mr. Rifkind: The SHARPEN report was published on 9 November 1988. Copies are available in the Library.

School Meals

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the expenditure on school meals for each year between 1978-79 and the latest date available, in current and constant prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Year	Cash (Net expenditure) £000's	Adjusted to 1988-89 prices using the GDP deflator £000's
1978-79	34,057	74,244

Grant-aided Colleges

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will announce the allocations of grant-in-aid for recurrent expenditure to the grant-aided colleges in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am pleased to announce that the Secretary of State has made the following offers of recurrent grant to the 17 grant-aided colleges for the financial year 1989-90. The offers, which are conditional on parliamentary approval of the Supply Estimates, are as follows:

	Offer 1989-90 £million	Per cent. increase

Local Government (Electoral Arrangements)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects work to begin on the next review of local government electoral arrangements in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland has a statutory duty to review the electoral arrangements for each region, islands area and district in the period of 10 to 15 years after the commission submitted its report on the initial review of each area. The commission submitted its reports on the islands areas in the period October 1976 to June 1977, on the regions in the period June 1977 to December 1978 and on the districts in the period July 1978 to April 1985.

My right hon. and learned Friend has approved a proposal by the commission to commence as soon as practicable the next statutory review of local government electoral arrangemens in the same order as that in which the commission submitted its reports on the initial review, i.e. the islands areas, the regions and finally the districts. The review will be conducted in accordance with the rules set out in schedule 6 to the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973.

Energy Act 1983

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he proposes to succeed the provisions of sections 5 and 7 of the Energy Act 1983 as they apply to Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Government appreciate that there are existing projects in Scotland where investment has been advanced against the backdrop of the rules of the obligation to purchase contained in the Energy Act 1983. We are, therefore, keen to ensure that the changes brought about by electricity privatisation neither disadvantage those who have invested nor materially affect the working of contracts already agreed.

The two Scottish boards have confirmed that any generator in Scotland whose decision on plant investment has been influenced by the existence of the provisions of the Energy Act 1983 in planning for the future and who has arrangements with a board to purchase electricity generated by him under the provisions of the Act will, if he chooses, be able to continue those for a five-year transitional period following privatisation. In commercial terms this is a significant commitment by the Scottish boards.

It would be inconsistent with the general thrust of privatising the industry to enshrine in legislation a permanent protection for a specific category of generators. The guiding principle behind our proposals in this area is to ensure that all economic sources will have fair access. The commitment given by the Scottish boards complements our proposals by securing that appropriate transitional arrangements are set in place.

Education (Parents' Views)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list in the Official Report the full list of questions asked in the market research survey conducted by MVA consultants of parents' views on Scottish education;

(2) what was the total cost of the survey conducted by MVA consultants of parents' views on Scottish education;

(3) what random process was used in the selection of interviewees for the purposes of conducting the MVA survey of parents' attitudes towards Scottish education;

(4) what was the total number of people contacted (a) per region and (b) per age group in the course of the MVA survey of parents' attitudes towards Scottish education.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The main fieldwork on the recently commissioned survey of parents' views on Scottish education has not yet begun and would not be helped by releasing the list of questions before interviews take place. The consultants are an established market research organisation and are responsible for the methodology, including detailed arrangements for organising and conducting the fieldwork.

As regards the cost of the survey, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 13 February to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) at column 43.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the speed, height and purpose of the low level flight by three jet aircraft over Whittinghame, East Lothian, at 3.35 pm on Wednesday 8 February.

Mr. Neubert: Three Hawk aircraft from RAF Chivenor were authorised to carry out a simulated attack exercise in the area at heights down to 250 ft and under the normal speed restrictions for the aircraft and type of sortie.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the speed, height and purpose of the low level flight by two jet aircraft over Biel, Dunbar, East Lothian, at 12.48 pm on Thursday 2 February.

Mr. Neubert: Two F-111 aircraft from RAF Lakenheath were authorised to carry out a routine low-level training sortie over the area at heights down to 250 ft and under the normal speed restrictions for the aircraft and type of sortie.

YTS Training Centres

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many YTS training centres there are outside Great Britain; where these are located; who is eligible to attend them; and what is the cost per country to the Exchequer for which the most recent figures are available.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are two YTS centres overseas, one in Cyprus and one in Hong Kong. All dependants of armed forces and Civil Service personnel in both locations between the ages of 16 and 19½ years of age are eligible to attend. The current staff cost of running the centres is £32,500 per annum in Cyprus and £20,000 per annum for Hong Kong.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research contracts awarded to his Department's research establishments under the United States strategic defence initiative have been sub-contracted to United Kingdom universities and other such educational establishments; what is the total worth of these sub-contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

AWRE Burghfield

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now able to make a statement about the explosion at atomic weapons research establishment, Burghfield in December during the disposal of potentially explosive material.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 February 1989]: This event has been the subject of a thorough investigation and I shall write to the hon. Member in due course when I have the findings.

Procurement Expenditure

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table indicating the regional breakdown of defence procurement expenditure for each year from 1974, in percentage terms.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding reply 23 January 1989]: The estimates given taken from our computer records, which include for each contract let a single "location of work" code which represents the place at which we expect most of the work to be carried out by the main contractor. These figures do not take account of the different location of subcontractors or of supplies to the main contracts. The latest estimates of regional distribution of the Ministry's United Kingdom equipment expenditure from 1983-84 onwards are as follows:

Percentages

Standard Region	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
North	5	6	6	8
Yorkshire and Humberside	1	2	3	3
East Midlands	5	4	4½	3
East Anglia	3	3	1½	3
South East	49	50	47½	49
South West	14	11	14½	13
West Midlands	4	3	3½	4
North West	12	12	10	9
Scotland	5	6	6	5
Wales	1	2	2	2
Northern Ireland	1	1	1½	1

Notes:

1. Estimates of expenditure on equipment are available by region only from 1983-84.
2. The estimates for 1985-86 and later years are more reliable because of a change in methodology.
3. The figures for 1986-87 may be subject to minor revision for publication in "Statement on the Defence Estimates (Vol. 2), 1989".

HEALTH

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of expenditure on information technology he estimates will be necessary to implement the proposals in "Working for Patients"; and what provision has been made in public spending plans to meet this expenditure.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The NHS needs to invest in modern management. The precise level of the investment required in information technology will depend on the outcome of our discussions with those concerned about the detailed implementation of the White Paper's proposals, and, where appropriate, on the outcome of any trials of new systems. The cost will not be met at the expense of plans for patient provision.

Race Relations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will describe his Department's principal achievements in respect of race relations and equal opportunity since May 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department is fully committed to achieving equality of opportunity throughout all its activities.

In the employment field my Department has implemented many of the recommendations of the joint review of policies and procedures on race relations in the Civil Service (1983) and the programme of action for women (1984). The more significant initiatives on race equality which have been carried out include.

a. the participation in the phased programme of departmental ethnic surveys of staff which was completed last year with the then DHSS response rate averaging 75 per cent.

b. the introduction of ethnic monitoring of recruitment in 1987 when early surveys indicated a shortfall in ethnic minority recruits compared with the ethnic minority working population, and

c. following a pilot exercise, ethnic monitoring of promotion and job allocation will be carried out this year.

In addition my Department has undertaken to sponsor a Windsor Fellow in 1990.

With regard to sex equality my Department has seen an increasing number of women progressing to middle and senior management grades (14 per cent. of SEOs and above are women). Encouragement is given to part-time working and job sharing with over 3 per cent. of staff (about 200) working part-time. Improved special leave provisions have specifically targeted help for single parents and those caring for elderly or infirm relatives and a "Keeping in Touch" scheme was introduced in 1988 which allows preferential reinstatement for people who have to take a break from work for domestic reasons. A holiday play scheme for the children of staff working in headquarters will run during Easter 1989 and child care provision is one of the areas being examined in a review of opportunities available to women employees in the Department.

Turning to employment in the NHS, every opportunity has been taken to remind health authorities of their responsibilities under the Race Relations and Sex Discrimination Acts and they have been urged to take account to implement the codes of practice of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission.

My Department supports the work of the King's fund task force on racial equality and has also established the national steering group on equal opportunities for women in the NHS.

My Department's social services inspectorate (SSI) is engaged in a programme of work to promote race equality in the provision of social services by local authority social service departments (SSDs). In 1988, the SSI issued a document of guidance on good practice for use by SSDs. Since 1987 we have funded the race equality unit at the National Institute of Social Work. The unit provides independent advice to SSDs on implementing effective race relations policy and practice. Funding to the unit will rise from £95,000 in 1988-89 to £127,500 in 1989-90. The SSI is currently running a series of workshops focusing on the professional needs of senior women managers in SSDs.

In the area of health care services, in 1982 my Department appointed an adviser on ethnic minority health. She had already directed the "Stop Rickets" campaign, designed to explain the nature of the disease and the role of vitamin D in its prevention through material in the major languages of the Indian sub-continent, and through meetings with members of the community. From 1984 she directed the Asian mother and baby campaign, a key feature of which was the appointment of "link-workers" to overcome the barriers of language and culture which often exist between patients from ethnic minorities and health professionals.

My Department has provided funding for a number of voluntary organisations concerned with ethnic minority health. For example, grants to organisations working with people affected by sickle cell disease and thalassaemia and their relatives amounted in 1988-89 to £15,000 each to the Sickle Cell Society, the Organisation for Sickle Cell Anaemia Research and the Thalassaemia Society. Altogether, we have provided over £¾ million since 1984 for a variety of innovative projects to improve access to health care for ethnic minorities. A further £1 million is being provided over three years from 1988-89 to produce health promotional material in minority languages. In 1987 the Minister for Health chaired a seminar on ethnic minority health for chairmen of regional and district health authorities, and Ministers are monitoring the progress of health authorities and family practitioner committees in this area.

In 1986 we became the first Government specifically to identify women's health within the responsibilities of a Government Minister. In addition to implementing screening programmes for breast and cervical cancers we are providing funding of almost £½ million in 1988-89 for some 20 voluntary organisations concerned with women's health. The Health Education Authority is planning to give more prominence to women's health and the maternal death rate continues to fall.

Model guidance on equal opportunities proofing of policy proposals, recommended by the ministerial group on women's issues, covers race and sex discrimination and has been extended in my Department to include disability issues. This guidance will shortly be circulated within the Department and this will direct further attention to equal opportunities issues in all the Department's activities.

Soft Cheese

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice has been given by the Chief Medical Officer about the consumption of soft cheeses.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The chief medical officer at my Department issued general advice to the public about listeria in food on 10 February 1989. He also gave specific advice to pregnant women and to some patients, who are particularly vulnerable because of their illness or treatment, to avoid eating certain cheeses.

His advice said that public attention had recently been drawn to findings of the presence of listeria monocytogenes in a number of different food products. It must be remembered that listeria is widely distributed in the environment and some exposure to this organism is unavoidable. Indeed at any one time a number of us, perhaps as many as 1 in 20, carry this bacteria in our gut without any ill-effects.

The disease, listeriosis, caused by infection with this organism is fortunately still quite rare. Last year 287 cases were reported, although it is certain that there were some other unreported cases. When it occurs it can give rise to a mild 'flu-like illness, although more serious cases may develop meningitis and septicaemia. Of considerable concern is the fact that in pregnant women it may also infect the developing baby and lead to miscarriage, stillbirth or severe illness in the newborn baby.

Unlike most of the bacteria causing food-related illness that we have been used to dealing with in the past, listeria has the unusual property of being able to multiply at the sort of temperatures which may be found in refrigerators. Fortunately in most foods where it is present, it occurs at very low levels and is killed by adequate cooking.

However, for some soft cheeses, the situation is different because the method of preparation and the time they may be kept before eating allows listeria to multiply. High numbers of listeria have been found in several varieties of soft cheeses, and a number of cases of listeriosis —both in this country and abroad—have been associated with eating heavily contaminated soft cheese.

Because of this, having taken the best possible expert advice, the chief medical officer advises that pregnant women should avoid eating certain types of soft cheeses. It is not possible to specify precisely the cheeses in which listeria is likely to grow, but on the basis of current information these are likely to be soft ripened cheeses such as the brie, camembert, and blue vein types. On the other hand, hard cheeses such as the cheddar and cheshire types, processed cheeses, cottage cheeses and cheese spreads have not given cause for concern.

The levels of listeria that have been found in other foods such as cooked-chilled meals and ready-to-eat poultry have usually been very low. Given the particular risks to the developing foetus the chief medical officer feels that it would be prudent for pregnant women to re-heat these types of food until they are piping hot rather than to eat them cold. Otherwise all that is necessary is for pregnant women to follow the normal, general hygiene precautions summarised here and to take care that they maintain a well-balanced diet during pregnancy.

Other people who appear to be at special risk and should therefore follow this advice are those with underlying illness which results in impaired resistance to infection, such as patients who have had transplants, those on particular drugs which depress the immune system, and those with leukaemia or cancers of the lymphatic tissues.

The chief medical officer also said that although the wider public have become worried about reports of listeria contamination of a variety of foods, including salads and some cooked-chilled ready-to-eat foods on sale, the evidence so far is that the amount of listeria in these foods is generally very low. Provided that the good hygiene practices recommended are followed there is no need to change the type of food regularly eaten and enjoyed.

The general advice to the public is that listeria monocytogenes is widely distributed in the environment, for example, it has been found in vegetation, water, soil and the faeces of man and animals and therefore some exposure to this organism is unavoidable. For the average healthy member of the public the risk of becoming ill with listeriosis from eating food is very small indeed. Nevertheless there are a number of simple precautions which the public can take which will reduce their exposures to listeria and other pathogenic bacteria:

(i) Keep foods for as short a time as possible, follow the storage instructions carefully and observe the "best-by" and "eat-by" dates on the label;
(ii) do not eat under-cooked poultry or meat products. Make sure you re-heat cooked-chilled meals thoroughly and according to the instructions on the label. Wash salads, fruit and vegetables that will be eaten raw;
(iii) Make sure your refrigerator is working properly and is keeping the food in it really cold;
(iv) Store cooked foods in the refrigerator away from raw foods and cheeses;
(v) When re-heating food make sure it is heated until piping hot all the way through and do not re-heat more than once;
(vi) When using a microwave oven to cook or re-heat food observe the standing times recommended by the oven manufacturer to ensure that the food attains an even temperature before it is eaten;
(vii) Throw away left-over re-heated food. Cooked food which is not to be eaten straight away should be cooled as rapidly as possible and then stored in the refrigerator.

Meningitis

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the localities of any unexplained clusters of cases of meningitis in the three counties of Yorkshire for 1988 and to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available from the notifications of infectious diseases reported to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys under the Public Health (Control of Disease) Act 1984, as those notifications do not identify clusters.

Sex-change Operations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of sex-change operations performed by the National Health Service for (a) male to female and (b) female to male in each area health authority of the Trent regional health authority for each of the last 20 years; and what was the cost to the Exchequer in each case.

Mr. Freeman: Such information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may like to write to the chairman of the Trent regional health authority for such information as is held by the region.

Emergency Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reviews are taking place in the various health authorities in the Trent regional health authority of the conduct of accident and emergency services.

Mr. Freeman: Trent regional health authority is currently reviewing the accident and emergency services at Newark general hospital, in central Nottinghamshire and at the Montagu hospital, Mexborough, in Doncaster. Sheffield district health authority is reviewing its own accident and emergency services.

Renal Transplants

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are awaiting renal transplant; and what is the average waiting time for such a transplant.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom waiting list for renal transplants, as notified to the United Kingdom transplant service on 16 February 1989, was 3,521.

Waiting time information is not readily available in the form requested. Of those waiting, 35 per cent. had been on the list for less than one year, 19 per cent. for between one and two years, 12 per cent. for between two and three years, nine per cent. for between three and four years, and 16 per cent. for more than four years. The remaining nine per cent. were not classified. The length of time a patient waits for a transplant depends on a number of factors, the principal one being how difficult it is to find a suitably matched donor organ.

Renal Dialysis

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are provided with home dialysis treatment through the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 30 January at columns 42-44.

Tampons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department is aware of into the link between sanitary tampon use and vaginal ulceration.

Mr. Freeman: Some reports of research on this matter were published in the United States of America several years ago. Vaginal ulceration was associated with the use of tampons in a small number of women but the ulcers healed when tampons were no longer used. The reports suggested various mechanisms which might have caused the ulcers.

Cook-chill Food

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any maternity units use cook-chill food.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Health authorities are responsible for the delivery of catering services which meet the needs of all their patient groups.

We do not collect centrally information on the production of food for specific categories of patients.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals currently use cooked-chilled food; and how many hospitals are intending to use cooked-chilled food under present plans.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not hold centrally information on those hospitals which provide cook-chill catering.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has given to district health authorities to ensure the recognition of the problems of sufferers from myalgic encephalomyelitis and the co-ordination of their treatment.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has issued no guidance to district health authorities on myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's latest estimate of the number of persons diagnosed as suffering from myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that no information is held centrally on which to base an estimate of the number of people diagnosed as suffering from myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research programmes are supported by his Department into the problem of myalgic encephalomyelitis; and what is the the total of financial support in the current financial year.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is not funding research into myalgic encephalomyelitis. The Medical Research Council is the main agency through which the Government support clinical research; it receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science.

Rural Dispensing Arrangements

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, as part of his proposed reforms of the National Health Service, he envisages changing the present arrangements relating to rural dispensing by doctors or rural pharmacies contained in the Clothier regulations; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The proposed reforms of the NHS set out in the Government's White Paper 'Working for Patients' do not alter the principles underlying the regulations for determining the arrangements for NHS dispensing in rural areas. As a result of the changed composition and responsibilities of family practitioner comittees, however, some changes to the regulations will be necessary. We shall be putting forward detailed proposals later in the year.

Nurses

45. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how many the number of nurses in the National Health Service would have to be increased or cut to achieve the number in the service in 1979.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 21 February 1989]: The total number of nursing and midwifery staff (including agency staff) employed in the NHS in England at 30 September 1987—404,000 wholetime equivalents—would have to be reduced by 21,700 wholetime equivalents to achieve the September 1979 level adjusted to take account of the change in the working week from 40 to 37·5 hours introduced in 1980-81. Taking no account of such a reduction in the working week the reduction required would be 45,600 wholetime equivalents to reach the 358,400 employed in 1979.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of South Yorkshire were receiving (a) attendance allowance at (i) the higher rate and (ii) the lower rate, (b) invalid care allowance, (c) mobility allowance, (d) invalidity benefit, (e) severe disablement allowance, (f) industrial disablement pension, (g) war disablement pension, (h) retirement pension, (i) income support and (j) supplementary benefit at the latest dates for which figures are available; what are those dates; and if he will give comparable figures for five years and 10 years ago.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that information is not available in the precise form requested. Nor are details available of the numbers of people receiving (a) attendance allowance, (b) invalid care allowance, (c) mobility allowance, (f) industrial disablement pension, (g) war disablement pension or (h) retirement pension in the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of South Yorkshire.

The table gives the information available on the dates shown for the Department's local offices at Doncaster, East, Doncaster, West, Mexborough and Wath-on-Dearne which serve the Don Valley constituency, although their boundaries are not conterminous.

[2] Mexborough NIO does not deal with income support/supplementary benefit claims.
[3] Wath-on-Dearne local office deals only with income support/supplementary benefit claims.
Note: With the exception of supplementary benefit, comparable figures for five years and 10 years ago are no longer held.
Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action. The figures include a small number of cases not actually in receipt of benefit. The data for 1988 are provisional and subject to amendment.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the average and maximum amounts of time taken to process claims for attendance allowance; how many of such claims go to appeal; and what are the average and maximum amounts of time taken to process such appeals in addition to the initial processing of claims.

Mr. Scott: The average time taken to decide new claims is currently 7·5 weeks. In the 12 months to 31 December 1988, some 56,000 decisions on new claims were reviewed. The average time taken to process a review is currently 13.3 weeks. Information about the maximum times for deciding claims of processing reviews is not available.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many residents in Liverpool have received overpayments of housing benefit; how much money is involved; how many appeals have been lodged; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Private Retirement Homes

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total amount paid by his Department to support those in private homes for the elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. However, relevant information in respect of independent—that is private and voluntary—homes was provided in my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 21 December 1988 at columns 304-06.

Retirement Age (Statistics)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of people over retirement age in the United Kingdom for the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available estimate (July 1987) is that there are approximately 10·4[1] million people in the United Kingdom over state pension age.

Supplementary Benefit (Transitional Protection)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to monitor the effects of the social security changes of April 1988; and if he is inviting views from the public.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 27 January at columns 802-03. The views expressed by members of the public are carefully considered as part of the monitoring process.

Retail Prices Index (Error)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a list of those organisations who applied for grants under the retail prices error index fund, the outcome and amounts of any awards; and if he will make a statement about the operation of the fund.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 3 May 1988 at columns 422-24 and to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) on 9 February at column 277. A list of the latest organisations to receive payments has been placed in the Library.

Family Benefits

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown by benefit of the 25 per cent. real increase in family benefits since 1978-79.

Mr. Moore: A breakdown by benefit of the 25 per cent. real increase in family support since 1978-79 is provided in the table.

Since I quoted this figure to the House on 18 January 1989 at column 359 I understand that the Inland Revenue has advised DSS officials that its provisional estimate of the value of child tax allowances in 1978-79 has been revised down from £515 million to £460 million. The effect of this change is to reduce family support in real terms in 1978-89 to £6,741 million; this produces a real increase of 27·3 per cent. between 1978-79 and 1988-89.

Family support 1978-79 to 1988-89

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to enable offices of his Department to use the information provided under the income support scheme to identify which claimants are eligible for cold weather payments and to remove the necessity for claimants to make separate claims for such payments; and if he will give an estimate of the likely effect of such action on the level of take-up.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. It would not be possible to identify income support beneficiaries eligible for cold weather payments and thereby remove the need for separate claims to be made unless the same capital limit were to be applied for both purposes.

Disabled Child Premium

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many dependent children and young persons in households in receipt of income support are currently in receipt of the disabled child premium on the grounds of (i) receipt of attendance allowance, (ii) receipt of mobility allowance and (iii) who are or have recently been registered as blind with the local authority;

(2) what percentage of all families in receipt of income support with dependent children and young persons those families in receipt of the disabled child premium form;

(3) how many claimants of income support receive the disabled child premium; how many supplementary benefit claimants received additional requirements in respect of dependent children in 1987-88; and what was the average weekly amount of these additions.

Mr. Scott: The information requested for supplementary benefit is not available and that for income support will not be available until later this year.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how his Department is monitoring the withdrawal of additional requirements, previously paid under the supplementary benefits system, where these meet the special needs of children with acute and chronic health conditions in families on income support with a view to extending the qualifying conditions for the disabled child premium.

Mr. Scott: Additional requirements ceased from April 1988 when the supplementary benefit scheme was replaced by income support. The impact of the reformed system is being monitored on all groups using information provided by local offices, from the management information system, from expenditure outturn figures and other statistical sources such as the annual statistical inquiry, and the quarterly statistical inquiries. In addition the disabled child premium will be studied in the light of the OPCS reports which deal specifically with disabled children.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether transitional payments to claimants unable to qualify for income support because of the definition of remunerative work will be calculated and withdrawn in accordance with the transitional arrangement regulations 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since transitional payments made to people unable to qualify for income support because of the definition of remunerative work are discretionary, they are not subject to any regulations. Such payments are eroded by increases in income, such as earnings and other social security benefits.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) claimants who work more than 24 hours per week ceased to qualify for supplementary benefit on 6 April 1988, and (b) how many of those claimants have applied for and been awarded transitional protection under the new arrangements announced earlier this year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about the number of claimants who ceased to qualify for benefit because they worked 24 hours or more a week was not collected. A total of 293 people affected by the new rules applied for payments under the arrangements announced last April, of whom 123 were awarded payments. These figures include those claimants whose partners were working 24 hours or more.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action is being taken in his Department's offices to identify claimants who ceased to qualify for supplementary benefit in April 1988 because of the changed definition of remunerative work for the purposes of assessing eligibility for transitional protection.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Whilst local offices were not required to trawl for cases eligible for transitional protection they have been instructed to refer cases of any former supplementary benefit recipients, which come to their attention, to the transitional protection unit (TPU).

Two campaigns in the national press were initiated in May and July 1988 which publicised TP payments. In addition, stocks of an explanatory leaflet SB22, with attached application form, were issued to local offices, post offices and local authorities. Supplies of an information leaflet (Fig 8) were also issued to local authorities and advisory bodies which outlined the help available from the TPU.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) claimants in receipt of supplementary benefit for the year 1987-88 were (i) in receipt of housing costs for mortgage interest repayments, (ii) were working 24 hours per week or more or (iii) had a partner who was working 24 hours per week or more, and (b) if he will provide this information on the basis of weekly mortgage interest repayments of (1) less than £25, (2) £25 or more but less than £50, (3) £50 or more but less than £75, (4) £75 or more but less than £100 and (5) £100 or more.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested.

The latest available data on the amounts included in supplementary benefit assessments for mortgage interest are shown in the table. These are derived from table 7.11 of the May 1987 annual statistical enquiry, a copy of which is in the Library. No information is available on the numbers of supplementary benefit claimants or their partners who were working 24 hours or more a week.

Numbers of owner occupier supplementary benefit claimants with mortgage interest included in their assessments, May 1987

Weekly amount included in Supplementary Benefit assessment for mortgage interest	Numbers of claimants
Nil to £25·00	244,633
£25·01 to £50·00	72,520
£50·01 to £75·00	11,080
£75·01 to £100·00	3,773
£100·01 and over	1,801
Total	333,809

Income Support and Housing Benefit

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support and housing benefit will have no increase in benefit in April due to receipt of transitional protection as a result of the 1988 benefit changes; and how many will receive less than the full increase.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that precise information for income support and housing benefit is not available. For income support, it is estimated that around 570,000 recipients will have no increase in benefit income in April 1989 and some 530,000 may receive less than the full increase.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if there are any plans to extend entitlement to attendance allowance to children under the age of two years.

Mr. Scott: We shall look at this feature of the attendance allowance scheme when we consider the future of disability benefits in the light of the results of the OPCS disability surveys.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the current level of retirement pension for a single pensioner and a pensioner couple if uprated by prices or earnings, whichever was the higher, each year since 1980.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

Value of Retirement Pension if increased in line with prices or earnings

Uprating date	Single	Couple
November 1980	27·45	43·95
November 1981	30·75	49·25
November 1982	33·30	53·35
November 1983	35·80	57·35
November 1984	38·15	61·10
November 1985	41·50	66·45
July 1986	43·80	70·15
April 1987	45·75	73·25
April 1988	49·35	79·00

Social Fund

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional information he proposes to place in the Library concerning the social fund budget allocations to local offices for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have today placed in the Library details of the 1989-90 social fund allocations in terms of the allocations per head of income support live load in every local office on 30 November 1988, together with a note explaining the basis on which the 1989-90 allocations were made. Details of individual local office activity on the social fund during 1989-90 and a national summary will continue to be placed in the Library at monthly intervals.

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Development Areas

16. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the governmental expenditure which has taken place in urban development areas since 1981.

Mr. Ridley: By the end of March 1989, the Government will have provided over £8,000 million in grant-in-aid to the English UDCs.

Disabled People (Housing Adaptations)

17. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce a test of resources for improvement grants for house adaptations for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Proposals for a test of resources for all improvement grants, including those for adaptations for the disabled, were published in the consultation paper "Renovation Grants: Proposed Test of Resources", issued on 9 January.

No-Fines Houses

18. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on providing financial assistance to owner occupiers of former local authority properties on a no-fines type of construction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Owners of houses built before 1961, including those of no-fines construction, may be eligible for discretionary improvements grants from their local authorities. The Local Government and Housing Bill contains our proposals to reform that legislation.

Football Clubs Membership Scheme

19. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet representatives of firms producing computers to discuss the proposed football club identity card scheme.

34. Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet representatives of firms producing computers to discuss the proposed football club identity card scheme.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet representatives of firms producing computers to discuss the proposed football identity card scheme.

77. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet representatives of firms producing computers to discuss the proposed football club identity card scheme.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no further plans to meet computer companies. The football membership authority, in drawing up the scheme for submission to the Secretary of State, will include its preferred choice of technology.

35. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any response to the letter sent by the Minister for Sport, the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) to hon. Members on 21 December 1988 about the proposed football identity card scheme.

39. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any response to the letter sent by the Minister for Sport, the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) to hon. Members on 21 December 1988 about the proposed football identity card scheme.

42. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any responses to the letter sent by the Minister for Sport, the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) to hon. Members on 21 December 1988 about the proposed football identity card scheme.

78. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any response to the letter sent by the Minister for Sport, the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) to hon. Members on 21 December 1988 about the proposed football identity card scheme.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received letters from four hon. Members. Two hon. Members have tabled questions before today.

40. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on recent meetings held by the Minister for Sport, the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) with the chairmen of Football League clubs.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon).

58. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received expressing opposition to part 1 of the Football Spectators Bill.

70. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received expressing opposition to part 1 of the Football Spectators Bill.

79. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received expressing opposition to part 1 of the Football Spectators Bill.

91. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received expressing opposition to part 1 of the Football Spectators Bill.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received some 600 representations expressing opposition to the provisions of part 1 of the Football Spectators Bill.

71. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received to date about the Government's proposals to introduce a membership registration and identification scheme for football fans.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received over 2,500 representations relating to the idea of a scheme.

107. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss the implications of the Football Spectators Bill.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no plans at present to meet the Association of Chief Police Officers. My officials and colleagues in the Home Office are in regular contact with the Association.

Building Land (Prices)

21. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the percentage of the cost of a new house attributable to the price of the building land for each region of the country, for the years 1958, 1968, 1978 and 1988.

Mr. Trippier: I am pleased to say that according to the latest figures for 1987 land prices in the north-west contributed one of the lowest percentages of the costs of new houses, both in the private sector and those built by local authorities. I am arranging for a table of regional figures to be placed in the Library. Figures for earlier years, back to 1977, are available in the Library.

Reclamation Facilities

22. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government will take action to ensure that reclamation facilities, such as bottle banks, are established at new supermarket sites.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The waste watch organisation, which the Department supports, works with retailers to develop recycling opportunities.

Rural Housing

23. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on his policy with regard to the provision of low-cost housing in rural areas.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) on 8 February (Official Report, columns 726-27). The Government are committed to tackling rural housing need, by enabling housing associations to provide rented accommodation in rural areas and encouraging private landlords and developers to invest in low-cost dwellings.

62. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue new guidelines to local planning authorities on the provision of housing in rural areas.

Mr. Chope: New guidance is set out in the reply which my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on February 3 at columns 433-34. The local planning authorities have been notified.

67. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding the provision of low-cost housing in rural areas.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received representations from a variety of organisations. The Government's response to these representations is summarised in the answer that he gave my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) on 8 February at columns 726-27.

Water Privatisation

24. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has made any decision as to what proportion of water authority stock will be retained by the Government at the proposed flotation of the water industry.

Mr. Ridley: No.

65. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate by how much water prices will rise in the first year after privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan: It is too early to anticipate the values of the price cap ("K") which will govern water charges increases.

95. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has had any recent discussions with the chairpersons of the water authorities on disconnection policy before and after privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State regularly meets chairmen of the water authorities to discuss a number of issues. My hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning has welcomed the recent proposals announced by the water industry to revise their disconnections code of practice. These introduce important new customer safeguards and should assist in keeping disconnection to the absolute minimum of those customers who can pay but refuse to do so.

106. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent assessment he has made of the effect of his water privatisation plans on the cost of water to the consumer.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department will carry out an assessment of each water authority's and each water company's future financial requirements in the coming months and I will then be in a position to make proposals for the price cap which will be applicable to each appointed undertaking under the Water Bill.

Chlorofluorocarbons

25. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he can report on the reduction of use of chlorofluorocarbons; and if he will estimate the likely effect on the environment.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome to date of the proposals to deal with pollution from chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Ridley: All sectors of British industry are being encouraged to reduce their chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) and halons by at least 85 per cent. by the turn of the century by using alternatives, substitutes or adopting good housekeeping practices. The action of the aerosol industry alone to phase out non-essential uses of CFCs will halve total United Kingdom consumption by the end of the year. Action by the United Kingdom alone is not enough and a major objective of the "Saving the Ozone Layer" London conference, which I shall chair in March, is to persuade more countries to sign up to the Montreal protocol.

83. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department proposes to issue advice to owners of domestic appliances which contain chlorofluorocarbons who wish to ensure that chlorofluorocarbons are not released into the atmosphere.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As noted in the Government's reply to the first report from the Environment Committee, Session 1987-88, HC 270-1—Air Pollution—published in December 1988 (Cm. 552) officials of the Department of the Environment and the Department of Trade and Industry are discussing the question of recovery and recycling/destruction of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) in redundant appliances. The Government plan to develop advice in the light of these discussions.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the use of chlorofluorocarbon in the manufacture of plastic forms of building insulation; and whether he has any evidence that manufacturers have developed alternatives to these.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have recently received a Friends of the Earth report, "Safe as Houses", about the use of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) in the insulation of buildings.

The manufacturers of rigid polyurethane foams are developing materials which use less CFCs as blowing agents. They are also implementing measures to reduce wastage of CFCs, and evaluating ozone-friendly alternatives which should become available during the 1990s, subject to satisfactory toxicological testing. United Kingdom manufacturers of extruded polystyrene insulation board have agreed to introduce this year products which do not contain the CFCs controlled by the Montreal protocol, and to phase out products containing these substances by mid-1990.

UK Nirex

26. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet with representatives of UK Nirex Ltd; and what he expects to discuss.

75. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet representatives of UK Nirex Ltd; and what he expects to discuss.

92. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet with representatives of UK Nirex Ltd; and what he expects to discuss.

105. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet representatives of UK Nirex Ltd; and what he expects to discuss.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have no plans to meet representatives of Nirex until I have received its proposals for a radioactive waste disposal facility.

Urban Decay

27. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department has taken to deal with urban decay in Yorkshire.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has committed some £330 million in Yorkshire and Humberside this financial year, as part of the wider Government effort with the private sector and the public authorities to tackle problems of urban decay.

Housing (Leicester)

28. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the housing investment programme allocation awarded to Leicester city council for 1989-90.

Mr. Trippier: Leicester city council's housing investment programme allocation for 1989-90 will be £8,513 million. In addition, it was allocated £0·4 million to tackle run-down housing under the private sector area renewal initiative. Individual authorities have also been invited to apply for additional resources under the estate action programme and in respect of particularly heavy responsibilities under housing defects legislation.

Research

29. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the stimulation of research into environmental matters by (a) his Department, (b) the proposed National Rivers Authority and (c) the water plcs following privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan: I have today placed copies of a paper in the Libraries of both Houses setting out our proposals for environmental research following privatisation. The paper proposes that it will be for each utility company to decide on its own research needs. The need to fulfil their statutory duties and comply with regulations on water quality and pollution controls will provide the incentives for the water utilities to carry out research. The present statutory duty on the water authorities to make arrangements to carry out research will be replaced by clause 135 of the Water Bill, which places a similar duty on the National Rivers Authority. My Department will continue to manage a substantial programme of research into the water environment.

Air Pollution

30. Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his plans for the introduction of further legislation to control air pollution.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend proposes to lay regulations shortly which will give Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution control over air pollution from a limited number of additonal works, will provide for greater public access to information about the control of air pollution from works scheduled for inspectorate control, and will give statutory force to air quality standards for smoke and sulphur dioxide, lead and nitrogen dioxide.

We intend that the remainder of the proposals in the Government's December 1986 consultation paper on air pollution control should be implemented as soon as a legislative opportunity arises.

Urban Development Corporations

31. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further progress he can report on the setting up and activities of urban development corporations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Bristol development corporation, the tenth English urban development corporation, was set up on 19 January. The UDCs are responsible for regenerating more than 40,000 acres, much of which was derelict or underused when they were set up. Although they are at varying stages in their lives, they are all making considerable progress and stimulating major private sector investment interest in their areas.

73. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on changing the terms of reference of urban development corporations to provide a more precise definition of regeneration, as recommended by the third report of the Employment Committee.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend's policy is set out in the Government's response to the Employment Committee. I understand that the Committee will be publishing the response today.

Tree Preservation Orders

32. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions he has made to involve interested and experienced professional bodies in the proposed review of the procedures covering tree preservation orders.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: James Batho, who is carrying out the review, is having meetings with relevant organisations, including professional bodies, in order to establish their views.

Association of District Councils

33. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the officers of the Association of District Councils; and what was discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend met representatives of the Association of District Councils and the other authority associations on 29 November last year. The matters discussed were the associations' responses to the consultation papers "Capital Expenditure and Finance" and "Local Authorities' Interests in Companies".

Business Rate

36. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect on businesses in Manchester of the introduction of the unified business rate.

Mr. Gummer: The report of a preliminary survey carried out by the Inland Revenue of the effects of the uniform business rate and the 1990 revaluation of business property, which is available in the Library, suggests that rate bills for businesses in the north west region could fall by some £310 million a year once the transition to the new system is complete. Proposals for the transition were announced by my right hon. Friend on 15 February. Separate figures for Manchester are not available. However, if the uniform business rate were introduced today, the effect would be to reduce the rate poundage paid by businesses in Manchester by 27 per cent.

43. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the effect on business costs in Newcastle upon Tyne of the introduction of the unified business rate.

Mr. Gummer: The report of a preliminary survey carried out by the Inland Revenue of the effects of the uniform business rate and the 1990 revaluation of business property, which is available in the Library, suggests that rate bills for businesses in the northern region could fall by some £50 million a year once the transition to the new system is complete. Proposals for the transition were announced by my right hon. Friend on 15 February. Separate figures for Newcastle upon Tyne are not available. However, if the uniform business rate were introduced today, the effect would be to reduce the rate poundage paid by businesses in Newcastle upon Tyne by 21 per cent.

53. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the effect on business costs in Derbyshire of the introduction of the unified business rate.

Mr. Gummer: The report of a preliminary survey carried out by the Inland Revenue of the effects of the uniform business rate and the 1990 revaluation of business property, which is available in the Library, suggests that rate bills for businesses in the east midlands region could fall by some £130 million a year once the transition to the new system is complete. Proposals for the transition were announced by my right hon. Friend on 15 February. Separate figures for Derbyshire are not available. However, if the uniform business rate were introduced today, the effect would be to reduce the rate poundage paid by businesses in Derbyshire by between 25 and 31 per cent. depending on the district council area concerned.

Empty Properties

37. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many dwellings are vacant in the public and private sector in Liverpool; and what is the annual estimated rent and rates lost.

Mr. Trippier: The latest available information on vacant dwellings in both the public and private sectors was provided by Liverpool city council in its 1988 housing investment programme return (HIP 1), a copy of which is in the Library.

The provisional figure for rent loss on vacant local authority dwellings in Liverpool in 1987-88 as reported on the authority's housing subsidy claim form was £7·4 million. Figures for rate loss on all empty dwellings in Liverpool are available in "Rent Collection Statistics 1987-88 Actuals" published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, a copy of which is in the Library.

Eastbourne Waterworks Company

38. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what communications he has had with the managing director of the Eastbourne Waterworks Company about the increase in its charges which came into effect on 1 January and the further increase in prospect with effect from 1 April; and if he will make a statement about charges for water made by the statutory water companies.

Mr. Howard: I have received a letter from Mr. C. B. G. Turner, chairman of the Eastbourne Waterworks Company indicating that he is unable to reconsider the charges implemented from 1 January. I understand that these charges run for three months. I have therefore asked him to come and see me before his board fixes charges for the twelve months from 1 April 1989.

Sports Council

41. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Sports Council; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: I meet the chairman of the Sports Council on a regular basis to discuss matters relating to the council. I expect to see him again shortly.

Rate Support Grant (Brent)

44. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the level of rate support grant for the London borough of Brent.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Brent will receive about £86·8 million block grant in 1989-90, £19·5 million (29 per cent.) more than in the current financial year after taking into account the changed arrangements for financing advanced further education.

Planning Law

45. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to alter the law on planning.

Mr. Chope: Proposals to amend planning law are contained in the White Paper on the future of development plans which was published last month. We always keep the need for legislation under review.

Council House Sales

46. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants in England since May 1979.

Mr. Trippier: From April 1979 to December 1988 an estimated 1 million tenants bought their homes from English local authorities and new towns.

50. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the disbursal of the money from the sale of council houses.

Mr. Trippier: Under the provisions of part IV of the Local Government and Housing Bill a local authority which sells council houses would be required to set aside part of the receipts to reduce its indebtedness. The balance would be available to the authority without restriction for new capital investment.

Nature Conservancy Council

47. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to ensure that the role of the Nature Conservancy Council is adequately sustained in those activities which have been or are to be transferred from the public to the private sector.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The NCC has statutory responsibilities for nature conservation which, for the most part, are set out in the Nature Conservancy Act 1973, and the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The Government are ready to take such steps as may be necessary to ensure that the NCC is able to fulfil its responsibilities in relation to the activities of others, in both the private and public sectors.

Housing Action Trusts

48. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate when tenants in housing action trust areas will be asked to vote on the establishment of housing action trusts.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 30 January to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) at column 307.

66. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which further housing action trusts he proposes to establish.

Mr. Trippier: No housing action trusts have yet been established. When we have considered the consultants' reports on the six areas currently proposed, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce his conclusions.

Environmental Health Officers

49. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to increase the number of environmental health officers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under section 112 of the Local Government Act 1972, it is for each local authority with responsibilities in this field to decide how many staff it is necessary for them to appoint.

County Rates

51. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which is the highest and lowest precept county rate in England; and what the change has been in the precept of each of these two councils since 1981.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The highest county precept in 1988-89 is 297·5p in Derbyshire and the lowest is 185p in Hereford and Worcester. The change in precept since 1981 is 168 per cent. for Derbyshire and 64 per cent. for Hereford and Worcester.

Football Supporters' Clubs

52. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives of football supporters' clubs; and what matters will be discussed.

56. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet representatives of football supporters' clubs; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Members to the answer given on 17 February to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollock (Mr. Dunnachie) at column 147.

Simplified-Planning Zones

54. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many simplified-planning zones are now in operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Last year, simplified planning zones were adopted and brought into operation by Derby and Corby. Five other schemes are in preparation, as noted in the reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) at column 304.

Tyne and Wear UDC

55. Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will report on the progress made by the Tyne and Wear urban development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: I am pleased to report that the Tyne and Wear development corporation is making excellent progress. It has embarked on a number of major projects and has already had considerable success in encouraging the private sector to invest in Tyne and Wear.

Grant assistance from the corporation has already helped to attract inward investment from overseas companies such as Mitsumi, Goldstar and Liebherr, securing some £13 million private sector funding and the initial creation of over 600 jobs with the potential for considerable expansion. Work is also now underway at a number of major flagship sites such as Newcastle business park, St. Peters yard, Byker and The Close, Newcastle Quayside. At the business park a 59 acre site is being developed for over 500,000 ft of high quality industrial/commercial floorspace with the creation of 3,000 permanent jobs. Barratt Newcastle Ltd. is undertaking the development of an imaginative marina village on a 12·5 acre site at St. Peters yard and a prime site at The Close on Newcastle Quayside is being developed for a four-star hotel and offices with the creation of 400-600 permanent jobs. These three projects alone are expected to secure private sector investment of some £78 million..

Total expenditure by Tyne and Wear development corporation since it was established in May 1987 to the end of the current financial year is forecast at £28 million with some £42·5 million private funding having been secured, 1,200 jobs created and over 200,000 sq ft of floorspace provided/refurbished.

These results are very encouraging for the first two years of the corporation's life and when viewed alongside projects now underway there is no doubt that TWDC is playing a major role in bringing about an increase in business confidence and developer interest through its activities and positive promotion of the area.

Further information is available in the annual reports of the corporation.

Heating and Ventilating Contractors Association

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives from the Heating and Ventilating Contractors' Association; and what was discussed.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has not met representatives of the Heating and Ventilating Contractors' Association.

Urban Grants

59. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether independent valuation advice is taken when evaluating schemes for urban development grant, urban regeneration grant and city grant.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has a team of professional appraisers including secondees from private sector firms. Where appropriate they seek the advice of the district valuer.

Housing Revenue Accounts (London)

60. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will identify which London boroughs have a deficit on their housing revenue accounts.

Mr. Trippier: Under the Housing Act 1985, local authorities are required to meet any deficit on their housing revenue accounts by a rate fund contribution (RFC) equal to the deficit. The London boroughs estimating they will make RFCs in 1988-89 are as follows:

City of London
Camden
Greenwich
Hackney
Hammersmith and Fulham
Islington
Kensington and Chelsea
Lambeth
Lewisham
Southwark
Tower Hamlets
Westminster
Barnet
Brent
Ealing
Haringey
Harrow
Newham
Waltham Forest

No data for 1988-89 have yet been received from Hounslow (which made an RFC in 1987-88) or from Merton (which did not make one).

Football League

61. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with the Football League.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 20 January.

69. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Football League grounds he expects to visit in an official capacity in the near future.

93. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Football League grounds he expects to visit in an official capacity in the near future.

99. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Football League grounds he expects to visit in an official capacity in the near future.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Members to the answer given on 17 February to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) at column 424.

Recycling

63. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning his Department's plans for future investment in recycling facilities.

80. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage further investment in recycling facilities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All Government Departments with an interest in recycling, are encouraging local authorities and industry to invest in economic recycling facilities.

Drinking Water

64. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the cost of full implementation of the European Economic Community directive on drinking water standards; and when he expects this directive to be fully complied with.

Mr. Moynihan: Water authorities are preparing investment programmes for improving water supplies in relation to water quality, pressure and reliability of supply. The full cost and phasing of the required work will be set out in prospectuses when the privatised companies are offered for sale.

We are committed to achieving compliance with the EC drinking water directive as soon as possible. Good progress has been made and will continue to be made towards this end.

104. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the European Commission directives on drinking water standards.

Mr. Moynihan: The EC drinking water directive (80/778/EEC) sets standards for 44 parameters. These are to be incorporated into regulations to be made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State under powers contained in the Water Bill 1988. Publication of the proposed contents of the regulations and draft guidance on maintaining the quality of public water supplies was announced on 10 February. Copies of both documents have been placed in the Library of the House.

Housing (Warrington and Runcorn)

68. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of housing development within the area covered by the Warrington and Runcorn new town development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: One of the Government's objectives for Warrington and Runcorn development corporation is to promote and cater for the growth of home ownership by releasing serviced sites for housing development. The areas in which I would expect further housing development to occur include Westbrook, Bridgwater and Sandymoor. The release of housing sites for development will be continued by the Commission for the New Towns and for some time beyond the dissolution of the development corporation this September.

Bristol UDC

82. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new economic activity has resulted from the work of the urban development corporation in Bristol.

Mr. Trippier: The setting up of Bristol development corporation was held back by a petition against it. It came into legal existence on 19 January 1989 and became the development control authority for its area on 20 February 1989. The corporation has stimulated considerable interest in its area and the inquiries it is receiving promise well for the future.

Competitive Tendering

74. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the effect on the cost of providing local government services since 1981 by means of competitive tendering.

Mr. Gummer: No precise figures are available but I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) on 15 February at column 278.

Compulsory Competition

76. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Audit Commission's findings as detailed in its report entitled "Preparing for Compulsory Competition."

Mr. Gummer: The Audit Commission's report "Preparing for Compulsory Competition" offers much sound guidance to local authorities on how to meet the challenges of competition introduced by the Local Government Act 1988 and achieve the savings of 20 per cent. or more that are available. We commend the report to the House and are making arrangements for a copy to be sent to all hon. Members.

Local Government Finance

81. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to exemplify the figures for a system of local government finance based on capital value rates plus local income tax, in the proportions of 80:20, respectively, as they might apply in Merton.

85. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to examine alternative forms on local government finance based on capital value rates plus local income tax, in the borough of Wyre.

96. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to exemplify the figures for a system of local government finance based on capital value rates plus local income tax, in the proportions of 80:20, respectively, as they might apply in Macclesfield borough and Vale Royal borough.

102. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to examine alternative forms of local government finance based on capital value rates plus local income tax in the London borough of Harrow.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave on 21 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice).

Boxing

82. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met members of the British Boxing Board of Control and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: I have not attended any formal meetings with the British Boxing Board of Control. However, I frequently meet board members informally and at boxing events.

Building (Outer London)

84. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider new measures to assist local planning authorities to curb excessive building in the outer London boroughs.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend issued new guidance to local planning authorities on 30 November 1988. Planning policy guidance (PPG) note 12 on local plans advises authorities of the importance of preparing and adopting local plans and that where "the pressure for development and redevelopment is such as to threaten seriously the character of an established residential area which ought to be protected"

local authorities

"may include density and other policies in their local plans for the areas concerned, while avoiding undue rigidity. The scale and character of new development inrelation to existing development are material considerations which should be taken into account in deciding planning applications, and the decisions of local planning authorities will be the more secure where the adopted local plan includes policies designed to protect the environmental character of particular localities."

Where local plans are up-to-date and consistent with national and regional policies, their provisions will carry considerable weight and the Secretary of State and his inspectors will be guided by them in dealing with planning appeals.

Water Cooling Systems

86. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to give environmental research officers increased resources to apply stricter monitoring of water cooling systems.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Decisions on the resources to be devoted to the work on environmental health departments are a matter for local environmental health authorities.

Black Country UDC

87. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action has been taken in addressing problems or urban decay by the urban development corporation in the Black Country.

Mr. Trippier: The Black Country development corporation has continued to provide opportunities for new investment and development in its area. In particular, it has given priority to:

1. The assembly and reclamation of land to provide sites for development;
2. The procedures necessary as a preliminary to the construction of the Black Country spine road;
3. Jointly with Sandwell MBC, marketing and securing a developer for the four million square feet retail and leisure proposal on the former Patent Shaft steelworks site in Wednesbury. It has also assisted by grant aid of £2·5 million, including City Grant, 35 businesses who in turn have invested £12·2 million in the area.

For further information, I would refer my hon. Friend to the Corporation's annual report.

Local Authorities (Conduct of Business)

88. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the conduct of local authority business as set out in the White Paper Cm. 433.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The House has now given a second reading to the Local Government and Housing Bill which will implement most of the proposals in the White Paper that require legislation. I refer the hon. Member to my answer to my hon. Friend, the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on Thursday 2 February at column 357, which sets out the points on which we have revised our proposals.

Urban Grants

89. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many firms who have received urban development grants and urban regeneration grants have (i) ceased trading subsequently, and (ii) required further financial assistance.

Mr. Trippier: A total of 350 projects have received or are receiving urban development grant, urban regeneration grant or city grant. None of the developers involved has ceased trading while the grant-aided project was underway. A total of 190 projects have been completed and many of these have been sold or let. It is not therefore possible to say how many firms ceased trading subsequently. However, I am aware of two cases of business projects which received urban development grant and later ceased trading.

Urban development grant, urban regeneration grant and city grant are one-off injections of assistance given at the start of a project. The developer then proceeds at his own risk and cannot get second instalments of grant if the project performs below expectations.

London Docklands Development Corporation

90. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further progress has been made, in addressing problems of urban decay, by the urban development corporation in docklands.

Mr. Trippier: Impressive progress. LDDC continues to breathe new life into docklands. More than £4 billion of private investment commitments have been secured since 1981. Over 1,200 new companies have been attracted to the area. There are new employment opportunities, with over 20,000 jobs created or attracted. Some 15,000 homes have been provided, along with increased housing choice and opportunity. A variety of projects have been funded to provide community support, refurbish public housing, improve education and training and assist the local voluntary sector. Over 30 miles of roads have been built, and more are under construction. The momentum of regeneration achieved by LDDC will continue, with the Government's firm support.

Manchester UDC

94. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what ways Manchester has benefited from the establishment of an urban development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: The Central Manchester development corporation has been in existence for just over six months. This earlier period has been marked by an enormous boost in developer and investor interest, and general confidence, in central Manchester.

Proposed grants by the corporation of about £6½ million have let to major development projects, planned or underway, involving a total private sector investment of £34 million and giving a gearing ratio of more than 1:4. These schemes are principally residential and commercial developments which will breathe new life into the Whitworth street and Piccadilly areas, and continue the good work done over recent years at Castlefield.

All these developments and many other proposals already in the pipeline, will revitalise the urban development area and bring investment and jobs to the city centre, to the benefit of the people of Manchester, and indeed, the north-west as a whole.

Covent Garden Action Area

97. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress by Westminster council in implementing the Covent Garden action area plan.

Mr. Chope: This is a matter for Westminster which has received a report from its consultants who were asked to undertake a review of changes since the adoption of the Covent Garden action area plan in 1978. I am told that Westminster has published draft interim policies for consultation. The public may take this opportunity to make their views known as the policies may have some weight in development control.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those departures to the Covent Garden action area plan made by Westminster city council which have come to him on appeal since 31 March 1986.

Mr. Chope: No departures from the Covent Garden action area plan have been referred to the Secretary of State since 31 March 1986.

Land Markets

98. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has undertaken into the workings of land markets in the United Kingdom and European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Chope: The Department is participating in an international study of urban land markets under the direction of the OECD. The Department's main contribution is a United Kingdom national report that was submitted in 1987 and published by HMSO last September under the title "Urban Land Markets in the United Kingdom". Other EC countries have produced national reports and a final project report with comparative analyses will be available from the OECD later this year.

Conservation Projects

100. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to make good the financial loss to conservation projects as a result of the withdrawal of Manpower Services Commission support for such conservation projects.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are monitoring the position closely and will consider whether further action would be appropriate. The Training Agency has set up a working party with the Countryside Commission and representatives of voluntary bodies to consider whether more might be done to ensure that ET is used to the fullest extent possible in the countryside.

Toxic Waste

101. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received with regard to Government consultation on toxic waste disposal.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Three consultation papers on waste disposal law have been issued. Two, issued in September 1986 and November 1988, concerned changes to the duties of producers and carriers of waste and the licensing powers of waste disposal authorities. The third, issued last month, concerned the reform of waste disposal authorities themselves. A wide range of interests responded to the first two papers. Consultation on the third is in progress.

Homelessness

103. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage local authorities to implement the recommendations of the Audit Commission Report on "Housing the Homeless"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking following the publication of the Audit Commission report on homelessness.

Mr. Trippier: The report makes a number of constructive recommendations on ways in which local authorities could improve the efficiency and effectiveness of their services to the homeless. We are considering its findings in our current review of the homelessness legislation.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to make any additional moneys available to allow local authorities to implement better practices outlined in the Audit Commission's report on homelessness.

Mr. Trippier: Nearly £50 million additional resources have already been made available in 1988-89 to hard-pressed authorities, specifically for schemes to help the homeless. The implications of the recommendations of the Audit Commission's report are being considered as part of the current review of the homelessness legislation.

Local Authorities (Capital Spending)

108. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the present methods of controlling local authority capital spending.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Part IV of the Local Government and Housing Bill provides for a new local authority capital finance system. This would replace the present system of direct controls on capital expenditure by a framework based on control of the use of credit to finance such expenditure.

Ombudsman's Report (Coventry Council)

109. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make further representations to Coventry city council on the case of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Quin and Mrs. Hands, née Quin, regarding the city council's refusal to implement the recommendations contained in the ombudsman's report about compensation.

Mr. Gummer: Following the practice agreed with the local authority associations, my Department has written to Coventry city council to ask for its reasons for not following the recommendation of the Commissioner for Local Adminstration in a case where he has found injustice caused by their maladministration. I am studying its reply.

Hedgerows

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by the three counties of Yorkshire how many miles of hedgerow have been destroyed in the last 20 years; whether surveys are carried out by air, ground or questionnaire to farmers and landowners; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The sample surveys of landscape change so far completed, which used various methods, have not provided information at the level of individual counties.

South West Water

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sums South West Water received from charges for abstractions in each of the last four years.

Mr. Moynihan: The income of South West Water in respect of abstraction charges in the last four years is as follows:

South West Water Authority abstraction charges income

Financial year	£ thousand
1987-88	242
1986-87	230
1985-86	249
1984-85	247

These figures exclude internal accounting within the water authority in respect of the water authority's own abstractions for water supply.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from South West Water on its liability to pay abstraction charges to the NRA when using river water to supply water treatment works; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: None.

Sanitary Towels (Disposal)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that the manufacturers of sanitary towels and tampons bear some of the cost currently incurred by the water authorities in the disposal of their products.

Mr. Howard: No. It is consumers who dispose of these products, and any costs incurred by the water authorities should be met through charges.

Peak Park Planning Board

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans to review the way in which the Peak Park planning board is operating; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has as to how many people have been appointed by Derbyshire county council to serve on the Peak Park planning board; and how many of them live in the board's area;

(3) how much money has been paid by his Department to the Peak Park planning board over the last six years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am writing to the local authority associations urging them to draw the attention of the authorities concerned to the importance of taking proper account of local interests when making their appointments.

Water (EC Directives)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters under article 169 of the Rome treaty the British Government have received regarding the implementation of the European Economic Community directives relating to water in the last six months.

Mr. Moynihan: One.

Grants

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown of UDG, URG and city grants approvals in the 57 urban programme areas and elsewhere in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The total number of UDG, URG and city grant approvals made in England to date is 345. The breakdown between authorities is shown in the table.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list schemes which have attracted UDG, URG and city grant which have been used for private industry and office developments since 1982; what percentage of approvals these represent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: There have been 161 projects approved under the UDG, URG and city grant schemes where the end use has been industrial or office development. These projects represent 47 per cent. of the total approvals to date, and are listed by authority. A copy of the list has been placed in the Library of the House today.

Land

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the land holding by hectares which was owned by water authorities and electricity boards in each UDC area at designation; what the total value of this land was; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My Department does not have this information.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much land has been sold by water authorities and electricity boards in each UDC area since designation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My Department does not have this information.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all past or present appointees to Urban Development Corporation boards who have business interests in the metropolitan area in which the Urban Development Corporation is located, or in other Urban Development Corporation areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State considers it desirable to appoint to Urban Development Corporation boards those with relevant experience. This means that members are likely to have connections, whether business or otherwise, in and around the area in which their Urban Development Corporation is located.

The Department advises Urban Development Corporations how to handle potential conflicts of interest. Chairmen are required to sign undertakings which reflect their particular circumstances. If they are involved with companies that might otherwise operate in the urban development area they will normally be required to confirm that the companies will not so operate during the term of their appointment.

Other board members must declare to the board their private interests which might give rise to a conflict. If a particular case gives rise to a possible conflict of interest, the member is required to write in advance to the chairman and it is for the other board members to decide what action to take. Unless the interest is trivial, the member would normally withdraw from the discussion and not vote on it.

If a board member of one Urban Development Corporation has business interests in or near the area of another, no question of conflict of interest arises.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the response to his request that Urban Development Corporation's pass on examples of good practice to each other; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Department's guidance to Urban Development Corporations asks them to pass on experience which may be useful to other Urban Development Corporations. They are developing their own informal networks. In addition, my Department organises regular seminars for Urban Development Corporation chief executives which provide a forum for exchanging relevant experience and information.

Landlords

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many landlords have sought approved status from the Housing Corporation since 15 January.

Mr. Trippier: I have asked the Housing Corporation to reply to the hon. Member.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount was spent by English local authorities on (a) mandatory home improvement grants and (b) discretionary home improvement grants in the financial years 1978-79 to 1988-89.

Mr. Trippier: The information is as follows:

Local authority capital expenditure on home improvement grants

	England mandatory	£ million discretionary	Total
1978-79	[1]..	[1]..	90
1979-80	[1]..	[1]..	120

Housing Repair Schemes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list, on an authority by authority basis, the total expenditure on capitalised housing repair schemes in England in the current financial year; and what percentage of all local authority housing repairs expenditure is accounted for by these schemes in (a) inner London, (b) outer London, (c) London as a whole, (d) the south-east and (e) England.

Mr. Trippier: Authority by authority information from the 1988 HIP2 return will be placed in the House of Commons Library in the next few days.

Capitalised housing repairs account for the following estimated proportions of all local authority housing repairs expenditure both current and capital in 1988-89.

	Per cent.
(a) Inner London	30·6
(b) Outer London	31·5
(c) All London	30·9
(d) South East	27·7
(e) England	23·1

Fly-tipping

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to deal with fly-tipping.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Plans to legislate for the registration of waste carriers were announced in June last year. Further proposals for legislation to make the registered keepers of vehicles used in fly-tipping liable to prosecution in certain circumstances are being considered following public consultation.

Water Pollution

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the levels of arsenic detected by the South-West water authority in the river Tamar on a regular sampling basis in the vicinity of Gunnislake, Devon, over the last 10 years.

Mr. Ridley: The South West water authority has taken frequent samples from the river Tamar at Gunnislake bridge since mid-1984. All 113 samples meeet the "imperative" values for arsenic in the EC directives on the quality of surface water abstracted for drinking water (75/440/EEC). Indeed, all but one were below the limit of detection.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what preparations are being made for the introduction of the scheme, as provided for in the Water Bill, which will enable the new National Rivers Authority to make charges in respect of discharges into rivers.

Mr. Howard: I have today issued a consultation paper which sets out the basis for a new charging scheme for consents for discharges into rivers, estuaries and other controlled waters. Our proposals for the scheme have been widely accepted as marking an important extension of the principle that polluters should pay for the costs of their activities.

In future, costs incurred by the proposed National Rivers Authority in granting discharge consents and in monitoring effluent quality and its impact on receiving waters will be met by the dischargers themselves, rather than by water consumers or taxpayers. The dischargers are for the most part water and sewerage undertakings and industrial dischargers of waste water.

The scheme will come into effect following the establishment of the proposed National Rivers Authority later in the year under the Water Bill currently being considered in Parliament. Details will be finalised by the Department, in conjunction with the National Rivers Authority Advisory Committee, and in the light of the views expressed by interested bodies in response to this consultation paper.

The Government envisage that a substantial proportion of the NRA's total costs for water quality regulation and pollution control will be recovered through the charging scheme, with charges likely to be set according to the size and type of the discharge.

Separate provisions already exist to ensure that the cost of cleaning up pollution incidents are recovered from those responsible for them. Similarly, discharges of trade effluents into sewers will continue to be subject to charges by water undertakings under separate provisions.

A copy of the consultation paper has been placed in the Library.

Ozone Layer

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations that have been invited to the saving the ozone layer conference on 5 to 7 March 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 20 February to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), Official Report, column 493.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 1010, on the identification of the hole in the ozone layer by the British Antarctic scientific expedition, he will report on progress in ending the use of chlorofluorocarbons in aerosols.

Mr. Ridley: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and I will be hosting an international conference on 5-7 March in London in order to persuade the world to phase out the use of CFCs for all purposes as soon as practicable, taking account of the availability of safe substitutes.

Lead-free Fuel

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice is given by his Department to garages to ensure that the correct advice is given to motorists concerning the use of lead-free fuel in different types and makes of vehicles.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This Department has produced, and is currently updating, the "E" list of cars that can use unleaded petrol without adjustment. This is freely available in booklet and wall chart form.

The Department of Transport also provides advisory information on the use of unleaded petrol in the "New Car Fuel Consumption" guide.

We have asked SMMT and MAA to take steps to ensure that their members readily provide necessary information.

In addition, we also welcome information provided by motoring organisations, oil companies and motor manufacturers.

Defective Housing

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to give additional assistance to owners and tenants in defective precast reinforced concrete housing.

Mr. Trippier: Eligible owners of designated defective properties are entitled to assistance from their local authority under the housing defects legislation. Owners or tenants could also benefit from our proposed reform of the home improvement grant system, as provided in the Local Government and Housing Bill.

Radon

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to allow local authorities to give home improvement grants to owners of houses for the installation of remedial measures where radon levels are high.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has today written to 21 local housing authorities in Cornwall, Devon, Derbyshire and Somerset advising them in what circumstances the Secretary of State is prepared to contribute towards the expense incurred by them in making an improvement grant for radon remedial measures. I am sending a copy of the letter to my hon. Friend.

Retired People

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider creating a standing committee of representatives of the pensioners' movement together with the Minister and senior civil servants dealing with the areas mainly affecting the retired in housing and environmental matters.

Mr. Ridley: [holding answer 21 February 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on Friday 17 February 1989, Official Report, column 404.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Macdonald-Wheeler Fund Management

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Attorney-General for how long investigations into Macdonald-Wheeler Fund Management Ltd. have been proceeding.

The Attorney-General: An inquiry under section 447 of the Companies Act 1985 was commenced by the Department of Trade and Industry on 28 July 1986 and concluded on 6 August 1986 when upon the Secretary of State's petition to the court the Official Receiver was appointed provisional liquidator. Police inquiries into the management of Macdonald-Wheeler Fund Management Ltd. commenced in August 1986, one month after the company ceased trading. In April 1988 the newly formed serious fraud office adopted the inquiry and continued the investigation in conjunction with the police. Criminal proceedings were commenced against one person in June 1988.

PRIME MINISTER

Merchant Shipping

Q23. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have any proposals to amend the Merchant Shipping Act 1988.

The Prime Minister: No.

Kenilworth

Q27. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Kenilworth.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Wales

Q36. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to visit Wales.

The Prime Minister: I make official visits to Wales from time to time.

"Death on the Rock"

Q63. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has had about the tone of Her Majesty's Government's response to the Windlesham report on the "Death on the Rock" programme.

The Prime Minister: None, as far as I am aware.

Mr. Yitzhak Shamir

Q155. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she is now in a position to announce a date for the forthcoming visit to Britain by Mr. Yitzhak Shamir, Prime Minister of the state of Israel.

The Prime Minister: Professor Arens told me on 15 February that Mr. Shamir hopes to visit soon. No dates have yet been fixed.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 February.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 February.

Mr. Holt: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 February.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 February.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 February.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 February.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 February.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Abortion

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to establish a Royal Commission on the operation of the Abortion Law Reform Act 1967.

The Prime Minister: We have no plans to do so.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Set-Aside

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing in each of the three counties of Yorkshire, how many applications and registrations he has received under the set-aside scheme (a) within and (b) outside less favoured areas; and within each category how many applications he has received for (i) permanent fallow, (ii) rotational fallow, (iii) farm woodland and (iv) non-agricultural use.

Mr. Ryder: The available information is as follows:

	Applications: less favoured areas	Applications: other areas	Registrations: all areas[1]
North Yorkshire
Permanent Fallow	7	42
Rotational Fallow	3	20
Woodland	1	8
Non-agricultural Use	1	12

Non-agricultural Use	Nil	1
Totals[2]	Nil	12	178

Notes:
[1] Breakdown between less favoured and other areas not available.
[2] Some applications are for more than one land use.

Food Surveillance

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 13 February, Official Report, column 94, what factors were taken into consideration by the Government in taking the decision not to publish details of individual brands sampled under the food surveillance programme.

Mr. Ryder: The purpose of the sampling undertaken under the programme of the steering group of food surveillance is to carry out scientific surveys of particular issues; it is not an enforcement programme. Sampling programmes are necessarily selective and do not cover every item on the market. It would therefore be inequitable to report data on those brands included when others of equal quality are excluded.

Woodland

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 357, under which grant scheme the regeneration of older woodland is taking place; and if he will provide figures to illustrate the extent to which this has happened over the past five years.

Mr. Macgregor: Regeneration of older woodland is taking place under all the Forestry Commission grant schemes, including the woodland grant scheme.

The area of woodland regenerated in England over the last five years, both by the Forestry Commission and the private sector, is given in the table.

Year ended 31 March	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Area restocked (hectares)
with conifers	3,375	2,966	3,060	3,532	3,259
with broadleaves	1,127	972	1,442	1,896	2,068
Area of broadleaves as percentage of total area	25%	25%	32%	35%	39%

Wool

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is able to announce the guaranteed price for wool for the 1989 clip; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Together with the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, I have reviewed the state of the wool market and prospects for the 1989 clip.

The British Wool Marketing board has achieved good prices for United Kingdom wool in 1988. Average market prices for the 1988 clip rose above the prevailing guarantee, enabling the board to make further repayments to the stabilisation fund. Stocks are low and demand continues to be good; the wool board is confident of market prospects for 1989.

We have given careful consideration to an appropriate guarantee level for 1989 in the light of these market circumstances. We have also noted the deficit on the stabilisation fund, currently around £14·5 million and my announcement in October last year of our plans to abolish the wool guarantee. We have decided in the light of these considerations to set the price guarantee for the 1989 clip at an unchanged level, 129p/kg.

Following the sale of the 1989 clip any remaining deficit falls to be written off under the terms of the financial agreement with the board, During the following period leading up to the termination of the guarantees for wool we would not expect to raise the price guarantee above its present level.

Milk

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will issue the consultation paper dealing with the proposed ban on the sale of untreated milk.

Mr. MacGregor: The consultation paper is being issued today and seeks views on the proposal to prohibit the sale of untreated milk for liquid consumption in England and Wales. It also seeks views on untreated cream (which poses risks similar to those arising from untreated milk) and on cheese made from unpasteurised milk. There is no proposal to introduce any prohibition on the use of unpasteurised milk in the manufacture of cheese. I am placing a copy in the Library of the House. Copies will also be made available in the Vote Office.

White Mineral Oil

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the reported effects on animals of white mineral oil in the report to his Department by Shell.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 22 February 1989]: The major effect in rats at all dose levels was a moderate to severe granulomatous inflammation associated with oil droplets in the mesenteric lymph nodes in both sexes and in the livers of females only.

Listeria

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what notifications have been issued to the National Farmers Union over the past 12 months concerning the possible incidence of listeria infection in United Kingdom cheese production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Action over individual instances of listeria in cheese has been taken with the individual producers concerned. The NFU has been made aware of the general problem through the series of meetings of all the organisations concerned that led to the production of the code of practice for cheese producers that was issued in August 1988.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the Food and Drink Federation concerning possible listeria infection in United Kingdom produced cheese; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have received no such representations from the Food and Drink Federation.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what research his Department is currently funding into the causes and incidence of listeria contamination in dairy products other than liquid milk;

(2) what research his Department is currently funding into the causes and incidence of listeria contamination in fresh milk.

Mr. MacGregor: A considerable programme of research into the micrological safety of food is being undertaken and funded by my Department. This programme includes work on factors which cause the listeria organisms to multiply and methods of inhibiting such growth.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has that milk infected with listeria became infected (a) from listeria endemic or internal to the cow or (b) through contamination from listeria in the environment.

Mr. Ryder: Listeria infections in cattle udders are unusual. If contamination of milk occurs, it is more likely to be due to environmental contamination. The presence of listeria in milk is minimised by ensuring that milk is produced and processed under hygienic conditions—and the Milk and Dairies Regulations aim to achieve this.

Cheese

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the current number of United Kingdom producers of soft cheese who use unpasteurised milk.

Mr. Ryder: Precise figures are not available but it is estimated that there are about 50 United Kingdom producers of soft cheese who use unpasteurised milk.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the volume of United Kingdom production for each of the last three years of soft cheese using unpasteurised milk.

Mr. Ryder: The latest information available to me indicates that soft cheese production during the last three years was as follows:

Year	Tonnes[1]
1985	900
1986	600
1987	700

[1]To the nearest 100 tonnes.

I have no information as to the volume of this cheese that was produced from unpasteurised milk.

Food Quality

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those measures he has enacted in each of the last three years to improve the quality and wholesomeness of (a) home produced and (b) imported food.

Mr. Ryder: One of the major objectives of my Department is to maintain the quality and wholesomeness of the food supply and this is taken into account in all measures which we enact most of which apply to imported as well as home-produced food. In 1986, 20 measures were enacted including The Milk and Dairies (Heat Treatment of Cream) (Amendment) Regulations 1986, The Milk-Based Drinks (Hygiene and Heat Treatment) (Amendment) Regulations 1986 and The Horticultural Produce Act. In 1987, 15 measues were enacted including The Coffee and Coffee Products (Amendment) Regulations 1987, The Colouring Matter in Food (Amendment) Regulations 1987, The Materials and Articles in Contact with Food Regulations 1987. In 1988, 14 measures were enacted including The Animals and Fresh Meat (Examination for Residues) Regulations 1988, The Animals and Fresh Meat (Hormonal Substances) Regulations 1988, The Pesticides (Maximum Residue Levels in Food) Regulations, The Importation of Milk Regulations 1988, The Sweeteners in Food (Amendment) Regulations 1988, The Milk (Special Designation) Regulations 1988, The Milk and Dairies (Semi-skimmed and Skimmed Milk) (Heat Treatment and Labelling) Regulations 1988.

Proposals have been issued for consultation on the following draft regulations:—

Tetrachloroethylene in Olive Oil Regulations
Caseins and Caseinates (Amendment) Regulations
Preserved Milk (Amendment) Regulations
Soft Drinks Regulations
Fish Product Regulations
Fat Spread Products Regulations
Amendments to Food Labelling Regulations to introduce alcoholic strength marking and restrictions on the use of the term "low alcohol"
Regulations to ban the use of mineral hydrocarbons in food and food processing
Preservatives in Food Regulations

In addition I am considering proposals to limit the quantities of colouring matter in food; a number of important reviews, affecting the quality and wholesomeness of our food, are currently being undertaken by the Food Advisory Committee and, as part of the single market programme, nine Community directives were adopted, or a common position agreed, last year and these will all be implemented into United Kingdom legislation. They cover jams, fruit juices, quick-frozen food, additives, labelling, materials and articles in contact with food, foods for particular nutritional uses, batch marking and the official inspection of foodstuffs.

ENERGY

Conservation Systems

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps his Department has taken to promote British-produced energy conservation systems outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Morrison: We continue to promote energy efficiency both at home and abroad.

Research and Development Investment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a table of comparable annual research and development investment in renewables by Organisation of Economic, Co-operation and Development countries and a table showing the number of renewable energy research projects undertaken annually in each EEC member state since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The table gives the expenditure on renewable energy research projects by OECD countries in 1987.

Country	£ million
Canada	6·94
United States	77·33
Australia	0·49
Japan	57·33
New Zealand	0·22
Austria	2·11
Belgium	2·56
Denmark	2·44
Germany	38·89
Greece	4·22
Ireland	0·27
Italy	18·06
Netherlands	11·33
Norway	1·39
Portugal	0·89
Spain	7·80
Sweden	8·39
Switzerland	6·33
Turkey	0·27
United Kingdom	15·05

Notes:
1. This information was derived from the IEA 1987 Review, Energy Policies and Programmes of IEA Countries, published in 1988.
2. For the United Kingdom the table includes expenditure on renewable energy R and D by Department of Energy, Department of Trade and Industry, Natural Environmental Research Council and the Science and Engineering Research Council.

No information is available on the number of renewable energy research projects undertaken annually in each EEC member state since 1979. This information has not been collected in the past by the Commission but it is currently considering setting up a database of information on member states R and D programmes. In the case of the Department's programme, over 250 projects are currently underway with 70 to 80 new projects being initiated each year.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all occasions over the past year when he has discussed with Government representatives or industrialists from abroad the prospects of their purchasing United Kingdom-designed nuclear power plants or nuclear fuel services.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government fully support the efforts of British industry in pursuing suitable export opportunities which would comply with our international non-proliferation obligations.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department is taking to promote British tourism abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My Department promotes British tourism abroad through its sponsorship of the British Tourist Authority which undertakes a wide range of promotional and marketing activities to encourage visits to Britain from abroad.

Prosecutions (Social Security)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many companies have been (a) prosecuted and (b) successfully prosecuted for offences under section 55 of the Social Security Act 1986 and its predecessors, region by region, each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: This information is not collated centrally and is not available for any years between 1979 and 1987. Since 1988, two companies, in Wales and Kent, have been prosecuted, both successfully, for offences under section 55 of the Social Security Act 1986.

Labour Force Survey

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to publish the next labour force survey.

Mr. Lee: The preliminary results of the 1988 labour force survey, together with revised employment estimates incorporating those results, will be published in the next month.

A copy of the information being published will be placed in the Library.

Employment Training

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of people who have so far registered for an ET course; what are the number and proportion which have ceased attending; and what are the main reasons for withdrawal.

Mr. Nicholls: By 10 February 1989, 174,500 people had started on employment training. By the end of December, the latest date for which information is available, it is estimated that about 20,000 of these people had left the programme. People leave the programme for a number of reasons such as completing their training or getting a job. Information on the numbers leaving for particular reasons is not yet available.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the cost of each ET placement; if this sum has changed since (a) the announcement and (b) commencement of the scheme; and if he will give his reasons for any change.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government expect to spend about £2,300 on average on each trainee on employment training. There has been no change in the grants and allowances for ET since the announcement and start of the programme.

Horseracing (Safety)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many horseracing and equestrian establishments have been prosecuted for breaches of health and safety regulations in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 22 February 1989]: During the period 1 April 1978 to 31 March 1988 two prosecutions under the Health and Safety at Work etc Act were brought against horseracing and equestrian establishments—one in 1986 and one in 1987.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trading Standards Officers

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the number of trading standards officers in post in each year from 1978.

Mr. Forth: Trading standards officers (TSOs) are employed by local weights and measures authorities. Records indicate that some 1,323 TSOs were in post in 1978. Information from 1979 is held in the House of Commons Library and contained in "Trading Standards Statistics' published jointly by the Societies of County Trading Standards Officers and County Treasurers until 1987 and subsequently by CIPFA.

Import Penetration

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table showing (a) the current degree of import penetration and (b) that in December 1978 for (1) radios, (2) black and white televisions, (3) video recorders, (4) colour televisions, (5) telephone receivers, (6) refrigerators, (7) passenger motor vehicles, (8) microwave ovens, (9) calculators, (10) desk top computers, (11) computer printers, (12) word processors, (13) microchips, (14) irons, (15) commercial vehicles, (16) x-ray machines, (17) dental instruments and appliances, (18) shoes, (19) sewing machines, (20) excavators, (21) lawn mowers, (22) public transport type passenger motor vehicles, (23) burglar alarms, (24) built-in ovens, (25) hovercraft, (26) lasers, (27) vending machines, (28) dishwashers, (29) medical instruments and appliances, (30) paper, (31) wallpaper, (32) printed matter and (33) furniture, respectively.

Mr. Forth: The information available is shown in the table.

Import penetration by product

Product	Import penetration[1] per cent.
	1978	January to September 1988
Black and white televisions	[2]48	104
Video recorders	n/a	81

[1] Unless otherwise stated, import penetration is defined as imports divided by home demand where home demand is estimated as United Kingdom manufacturers' sales plus imports minus exports. The figures are evaluated in value terms and may exceed 100 per cent. in products subject to a substantial degree of entrepot trading.
[2] Fourth quarter only.
[3] Based on vehicle registration data. Import penetration is defined as numbers of imported vehicles registered divided by total registrations.
[4] 1988 data.
[5] 1987 data.
[6] Subscribers' telephone apparatus.

Chemicals (Manufacture)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will publish in the Official Report, the site locations in the United Kingdom where trichloroethylene is produced;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the site location of the five plants in the United Kingdom producing ethylene dichloride;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report the site locations in the United Kingdom where perchloroethylene is produced.

Mr. Maude: Within the United Kingdom, both trichloroethylene and perchloroethylene are produced at one site in Runcorn. I am aware of only four United Kingdom plants for the production of ethylene dichloride; these are at Runcorn, Wilton (Teeside), Fleetwood and Ellesmere port.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will make a statement on the implications for his Department's investigation of the Barlow Clowes affair of the refusal of Singer and Friedlander to hand over the proceeds of the sale of shares in Buckleys to Harp to the liquidators of Barlow Clowes.

Mr. Maude: It has no implications for my Department's investigation. It is a matter for the liquidator.

Ozone Layer

Mr. David Young: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will indicate what action his Department is taking to encourage British industry to stop emissions that affect the ozone layer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 21 February 1989]: Officials from my Department are in regular contact with producers and users of ozone-depleting chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) to consider what measures industry can take to meet the targets for CFC reductions set by the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer. Before emissions can be stopped completely, practicable and safe alternative substances, products and processes need to be developed. It is open to companies to make full use of the assistance available under schemes operated by my Department, against the relevant criteria.

WALES

Empty Properties

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the number of empty properties owned by each Welsh district council and the average time they have been empty.

Mr. Grist: The number of local authority dwellings vacant on 1 April 1988 is given in the following table. Data are not held centrally on the average length of time that properties have been empty but the number of these local authority dwellings that had been vacant for more than six months is given.

Pembrokeshire National Park Committee

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names and main place of residence of each member of the Pembrokeshire national park committee together with the nominating authority for each member.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

Name	Place of residence	Appointing authority
Asby, Mrs. J. (Chairman)	Narbeth, Dyfed	Dyfed County Council
Douglas W. R. (Vice-Chairman)	Tenby, Dyfed	South Pembrokeshire District Council

School Buildings

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by Welsh county the total capital allocation for improvements to and the construction of school buildings in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not available. Prior to 1981-82 formal capital allocations were not issued, and since 1985-86 capital allocations have not been hypothecated to particular services. In the intervening years capital allocations for education did not differentiate between expenditure on schools and on other educational provision.

Hospitals

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospitals in each district health authority.

Mr. Grist: The position at 30 September 1988 is given in the following table:

Clwyd District Health Authority
- Abergele
- Broughton
- Catherine Gladstone
- Coed Du
- Colwyn Bay Community
- Denbighshire Infirmary
- Dobshill
- Flint
- Gwynfa

CADW

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out in table form (a) the total expenditure on CADW maintained sites, (b) the total income from sales and admissions at CADW maintained sites, (c) the total expenditure on non-CADW maintained sites by CADW, (d) other income to CADW and (e) other expenditure by CADW in each of the past four years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 16 February 1989]: The total direct expenditure by CADW on each of the categories identified by my hon. Friend is shown in the following table:

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
A. Total expenditure on CADW maintained sites	2,187	1,940	1,893	2,575
B. Total income from sales and admissions at CADW maintained sites	[1]937	1,158	1,182	1,415
C. Total expenditure on non-CADW sites	1,517	2,215	2,084	2,202
D. Other income	[1]n/a	107	35	382
E. Other expenditure	1,003	1,669	1,614	2,018

[1] No breakdown of income sources B and D is available for 1984-85.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Field Workers (Exchange)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to create an exchange of technical field workers employed in the health field between the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth.

Mr. Chris Patten: Under the overseas aid programme we actively encourage and support the exchange of information and experience between health workers in this country and in developing countries and between developing country workers. The exchanges take many forms. In 1987, 907 person years of training were funded in health and health-related subjects in Britain. Staff are exchanged under link arrangements which many United Kingdom institutions have with counterpart organisations in the developing world. Study tours are also arranged to enable individuals and groups from developing countries to visit this country and third countries.

Calorie Supply

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, for each of those countries that are actual or potential recipients of British overseas aid, the latest estimate available to his Department of (a) daily per capita calorie supply and (b) the percentage it represents of daily calorie requirements.

Mr. Chris Patten: Information on food supply (calories per capita per day) is included in the FAO production yearbook 1987. Information on daily per capita calorie supply as a percentage of the requirement needed to maintain health is based on figures from FAO and World Bank sources. The estimates for all developing countries taken from those sources are given in the following table.

TRANSPORT

Lockerbie Air Disaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he yet has any knowledge of the type and country of origin of the explosive that brought down the Boeing 747 aircraft, flight 103 over Lockerbie; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At the moment nothing can be added to what my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in his statement to the House on 10 January at column 696.

Surface Transport (Europe)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the post, ranks and responsibilities of the United Kingdom representatives due to attend the meeting of the Northern Europe Sub-Committee of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's Planning Board for European Inland Surface Transport at the Civil Defence College in the spring.

Mr. Portillo: One officer at grade 7 level from the Department of Transport and a major from the Ministry of Defence. Further details are confidential.

London Airports

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has considered the Civil Aviation Authority consultative paper (CAP548); and if he will respond by initiating plans for the construction of an extra runway in the London area as soon as possible.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: CAP 548 canvasses views on what advice the CAA should offer my right hon. Friend in July on United Kingdom airport capacity and traffic distribution policy for airports serving the London area. It would be inappropriate for him to respond before the authority makes formal recommendations, in the summer.

Talking Pelican Crossings

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many talking pelican crossings for the blind have been installed in Britain; if he will name the local authorities where they exist; and how many more are planned.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has not approved the installation of any crossings of this type, nor has he plans to approve any, in England.

We understand that one such crossing has been installed by Oxfordshire county council without approval.

Information about crossings in Wales and Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland, respectively.

Blind People (Fares)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many local authorities in Britain provide concessionary fares for blind people; and if he will name them.

Mr. Portillo: Voluntary surveys carried out in 1986 by the Department of Transport, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office showed that in November that year there were concessionary fares schemes for the blind in 326 English and Welsh districts, some run by the districts themselves and some by the county council or passenger transport authority; and that schemes were also operated by nine regional councils and two island councils in Scotland. Further details of the schemes are given in Transport and Road Research Laboratory research report 165 on "Concessionary Fares Schemes in Great Britain 1986", a copy of which has been deposited in the library of the House. The London boroughs also operate a joint scheme for the blind covering the London area.

Settle-Carlisle Railway

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a statement on the application by British Rail to withdraw services from the Settle-Carlisle section of British Railways.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend will make a statement when he has fully considered all the evidence before him.

Second Severn Crossing

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the envisaged timetable for (a) completion of planning and (b) length of construction of a second Severn crossing.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope to be in a position to select the successful tenderer by the end of the year. The shortlist of tenderers for the second Severn crossing project will be announced very soon. The length of construction will depend in part on the bids received. We expect that construction might take between three and four years.

We remain on course to provide the crossing by the mid-1990s, if traffic levels show it was needed by then.

River Thames

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to encourage public transport on the River Thames in London.

Mr. Portillo: The Government believe that riverbus services in London can contribute to the relief of road congestion and encourage the development of riverside areas in need of regeneration, particularly docklands. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has accordingly joined with me in offering to make a grant of up to £500,000 as part of a £2·5 million public/private sector initiative to promote and improve the service provided by Thamesline. The grant will be paid under section 17 of the Ministry of Transport Act 1919.

Concrete Bridges

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the report of the study carried out by G. Maunsell and Partners to determine the state of the concrete bridges for which his Department is responsible.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. The report will be published by HMSO in March. The report provides valuable information on the performance of concrete bridges in service and how greater durability and better performance in the future may be achieved. The report has not revealed new problems. It has indicated that the known problems are more widespread than anticipated.

Some provision for extra spending on the maintenance of concrete bridges has already been allowed for in the 15-year bridge rehabilitation programme announced in November 1987. This programme will be modified to take account of the extra work revealed by the study. The report confirms that our trunk road bridges are safe, despite the signs of deterioration.

The Department's structures are regularly inspected and priority given to repairs where structural integrity or the safety of the public is in question. An increased effort is needed over the next 15 years to ensure that our bridges will continue to give useful service for their intended lives.

ENVIRONMENT

Green Belt

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to release land from the green belt around Doncaster; and what was the last application to do so.

Mr Chope: My right hon. Friend has no such proposals before him at present. A proposal to site a mobile home in the green belt at Bentley was rejected by my right hon. Friend, on appeal, in August 1988.

Toxic Discharges

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take steps to control or modify such processes in the paper industry that create toxic discharge, in the light of scientific evidence about environmental damage.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Major processes in the paper making industry would be subject to integrated pollution control. Proposals were made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 28 July 1988.

Cambridge

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered the implications for planning policy of the study made by the department of land economy of Cambridge university of dispersal opportunities arising from the recent growth of the Cambridge sub-region; and if it is his policy to seek to relieve the pressures on the City of Cambridge by dispersing Government offices away from Cambridge to Newmarket.

Mr. Chope: The Department is aware of the study in question but it is too soon for the Secretary of State to consider any implications for planning policy. The study is only at draft stage and its preliminary findings have still to be accepted by the local authorities concerned. It will then be for the standing conference of East Anglian local authorities (SCEALA) to consider incorporating the report recommendations in its draft regional strategy document before submitting it to the Secretary of State for his consideration.

There is no present policy to relocate Government offices from Cambridge to Newmarket.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many litres equivalent of (a) intermediate and (b) low-level nuclear waste is currently awaiting permanent disposal in the United Kingdom.

Mrs.Virginia Bottomley: The latest estimates of waste accumulations in terms of volumes to be disposed are:

	Litres
Intermediate-level waste	59,400,000
Low-level waste	2,340,000

Chloroflurocarbons

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has on the level of the release of chloroflurocarbons from landfill sites in landfill gas.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Trace quantities of chloroflurocarbons have been detected in landfill gas. They are one of many substances to be found in low concentrations in landfill gas.

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information his Department has on the level of the release of methane from landfill sites; and what assessment he has made of the impact of this release as a greenhouse gas;

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the overall level of release of greenhouse gases from landfill sites in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department is currently developing an assessment of the release from landfill sites of methane and of carbon dioxide, the other major greenhouse gas from this source. Although the figures will not be available in time for this year's digest of environmental and water statistics, due to be published later this week, we hope to include them in next year's issue.

Insulation Materials

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the procedure for approving the thermal conductivity of insulation materials as satisfying the requirements of the building regulations, and the respective roles of CIBSE, the BBA and the BSI in such a procedure.

Mr. Trippier: Part L of the Building Regulations 1984 (in its current form) requires the calculated rate of heat loss from various parts of the exposed fabric of a new building to be within certain prescribed limits. The enforcement of these requirements is a matter for the building control authority. Practical guidance is provided in approved document L "Conservation of Fuel and Power", but the advice given in this document is not mandatory.

The approved document advises that information about the thermal conductivity of a product should be obtained from the supplier or manufacturer, or that a value should be obtained from table A3.22 of the Chartered Institution of Building Services Engineers guide. In the case of certain products, the approved document also advises that a test certificate should be obtained. The use of materials which comply with an appropriate British Standard or which are certified by the British Board of Agrement is another way of demonstrating that the requirements of the regulations have been met.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes to improve the monitoring and usage of landfill sites receiving clinical waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Waste disposal authorities are responsible for licensing and monitoring disposal facilities.

Guidance on best practice for the treatment and disposal of clinical waste is contained in waste management paper No. 25 published in 1983.

A review of current practice is planned for 1989-90 and waste management paper No. 25 will be revised if necessary.

Bats

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will analyse the study by the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology on the effect of Lindane and PCP on bats.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of the Environment is represented on a working group on bats organised by the advisory committee on pesticides which is a group of independent experts who advise Government on pesticides. The working group will consider the report of the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology on lindane and bats amongst other evidence and report its findings to the advisory committee.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will introduce regulations that prevent personal data contained within the community charge registers being used or disclosed for purposes not connected with the community charge by the community charge registration officer or charging authority; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will introduce regulations that prevent personal data being disclosed from community charge registers by the community charge registration officer or charging authority (a) to any Departments of State under the conditions specified in section 34(5)(a) of the Data Protection Act, if the disclosure is not for purposes connected with the community charge, (b) to the police, immigration and tax officials for the purposes specified in section 28 of the Data Protection Act, and (c) to the security services for the purposes specified in section 27 of the Data Protection Act, 1984; and whether he will make a statement;

(3) whether he will introduce regulations that prevent personal data being disclosed from community charge registers by the community charge registration officer or charging authority to public utilities; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No. There is no need for such regulations. Community charges registration officers and charging authorities have no power to disclose data contained in registers to any third party other than those specified in the Local Government Finance Act 1988 and regulations to be made under it.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has made any estimate of the average change in the disposable income of equestrian and agricultural workers which will result from the implementation of the poll tax in England and Wales.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 22 February 1989]: There are no plans for the introduction of a poll tax. In respect of the community charge, no such estimates can usefully be made because of the widely differing circumstances of individuals.

Mr. Simon Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates have been made to calculate how much it will cost Chelmsford borough council to introduce the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have made no estimates of the cost of introducing the community charge in Chelmsford borough council area. We commissioned Price Waterhouse to undertake an independent study of the total costs of preparation and collection for England and Wales and have allocated resources to authorities on the basis of those national forecasts.

Common Land

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to introduce legislation on common land, on the lines recommended by the Common land forum; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We intend to introduce legislation based broadly on the report of the Common land forum at a suitable opportunity when parliamentary time permits.

Nitrogenous Fertilisers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with representatives of the farming industry concerning the use of nitrogenous fertilisers and their effect on water supplies.

Mr. Moynihan: Officials from my Department met representatives of the National Farmers Union, the Fertiliser Manufacturers Association and the Country Landowners Association on 15 December 1988 prior to the publication on 16 December of the report "The Nitrate Issue". Officials from MAFF and DTI were also present.

Rates

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average unrebated domestic rates bill in England in each year since 1985-86

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The figures for average unrebated domestic rates bills in England are:

1985-86	351
1986-87	400
1987-88	429
1988-89	468

Water Charges

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the chairmen of the private water companies whom he has called in to see him as a result of them announcing increases in water charges of more than 10 per cent. for the year 1989-90; what response they gave to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I asked the chairmen of any company which was proposing an increase of more than 10 per cent. to come and see me. As of today I have seen 18 chairmen. One company has so far indicated to me that it proposes an increase of under 10 per cent. Discussions with a number of other companies are continuing.

Sports Council

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take regarding the financial management and control of the Sports Council following the publication of the report of the National Audit Office.

Mr. Moynihan: The Public Accounts Committee is to take evidence on the National Audit Office's report on the Sports Council (HC 196) on 1 March. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the report before then.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any staff from his Department were seconded to the Sports Council during the period covered by the National Audit Office report into the Sports Council.

Mr. Moynihan: A grade 5 and his personal secretary from this Department were on secondment to the Sports Council between January 1987 to February 1988.

Cowes National Sailing Centre

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied that full consultation took place before the Cowes national sailing centre was sold.

Mr. Moynihan: The National Audit Office has reported on the sale of the national sailing centre at Cowes in its recent publication, HC 196. The Public Accounts Committee will be taking evidence on this report on 1 March. It would not be appropriate for me to comment in advance of the hearing.

Hospital Waste

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of hospital waste is incinerated; what controls exist to ensure its proper disposal, together with the disposal of non high-risk waste matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no centrally collected figures for hospital waste. Disposal outside hospital premises including mixture with other wastes must be to sites suitably licensed under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Incineration is subject to appropriate controls over emissions from combustion processes. For disposal within hospital premises the Government expect health authorities to seek to confirm with the same controls despite the existence of Crown immunity.

Engagements

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all his official engagements for 4 January.

Mr. Ridley: I had no official engagements that day.

Derbyshire and Staffordshire County Councils

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed in total, both full-time and part-time (a) by Derbyshire county council and (b) by Staffordshire county council in 1981.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Derbyshire county council employed 38,408 people and Staffordshire county council employed 42,023 people in all services in June 1981.

This compares with 47,650 for Derbyshire and 43,337 for Staffordshire in June 1988.

Rent Levels

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the growth of private sector rent levels in the London boroughs over the last 18 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 22 February 1989]: Information on rents in London boroughs regulated under the Rent Act 1977, as amended by the 1980 Housing Act, is published in Housing and Construction Statistics 1977-1987, table 11.6, and in notes supplied to rent officers; both of these are available in the Library.

Local Authority Services

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give in tabular form (a)

Carrick, (b) Adur, (c) Alnwick, (d) Berwick-upon-Tweed and (e) Cheltenham district councils (i) which councils have declared themselves nuclear-free zones (ii) what is the estimated number of homeless people in the district for the most recent month for which figures are available, (iii) what is the number of empty council homes at the end of the most recent month for which figures are available and (iv) whether they have a declared policy of providing the funding for law centres;

(2) if he will give in tabular form for (a) Southend-on-Sea, (b) Three Rivers, (c) West Lindsey, (d) Wyre Forest, (e) South Somerset and (f) Chelmsford district councils (i) which councils have declared themselves nuclear-free zones, (ii) what is the estimated number of homeless people in the district for the most recent month for which figures are available, (iii) what is the number of empty council homes at the end of the most recent month for which figures are available and (iv) whether they have a declared policy of providing the funding for law centres;

(3) if he will give in tabular form for (a) Eastleigh, (b) Hastings, (c) Hereford, (d) Kerrier, (e) Maidstone, (f) Mendip, (g) Milton Keynes, (h) Pendle, and (i) Peterborough district councils (i) which councils have declared themselves nuclear-free zones, (ii) what is the estimated number of homeless people in the district for the most recent month for which figures are available, (iii) what is the number of empty council homes at the end of the most recent month for which figures are available and (iv) whether they have a declared policy of providing the funding for law centres.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 22 February 1989]: The information is as follows:

The information available on homelessness relates to the number of households for which authorities have accepted responsibility to secure accommodation under the homelessness provision of the 1985 Housing Act. This information is as follows:

	Number of households accepted	In quarter ending
Carrick	21	September 1988

Information is not held centrally on authorities which have declared themselves to be nuclear free zones or which have a declared policy of providing funding for law centres.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Douglas French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give in tabular form for (a) Carrick, (b) Adur, (c) Alnwick, (d) Berwick-upon-Tweed and (e) Cheltenham district councils (i) which political party or groups of parties control the councils, (ii) what has been the percentage change in spending by the councils in each financial year since 1986-87, (iii) what has been the change in staffing levels, in whole-time equivalents, for each year since 1985, and (iv) what has been the change in the rate poundage expressed as a percentage for each financial year since 1986 and 1987;

(2) if he will give in tabular form for (a) Southend-on-Sea, (b) Three Rivers, (c) West Lindsey, (d) Wyre Forest, (e) South Somerset and (f) Chelmsford district councils (i) which political party or groups of parties control the councils, (ii) what has been the percentage change in spending by the council in each financial year since 1986 and 1987, (iii) what has been the change in staffing levels, in whole-time equivalent, for each year since 1985 and (iv) what has been the change in the rate poundage expressed as a percentage for each financial year since 1986 and 1987;

(3) if he will give in tabular form for (a) Eastleigh, (b) Hastings, (c) Hereford, (d) Kerrier, (e) Maidstone, (f) Mendip, (g) Milton Keynes, (h) Pendle and (i) Peterborough district councils (i) which political party or groups of parties control the councils, (ii) what has been the percentage change in spending by the council in each financial year since 1986-87 (iii) what has been the change in staffing levels, in whole-time equivalents, for each year since 1985, and (iv) what has been the change in the rate poundage expressed as a percentage for each financial year since 1986 and 1988.

[1] Figures are for general services (i.e. excluding law and order services).
[2] Full-time equivalent figures are not available at individual authority level.
[3] Data not available.

Seven authorities of those listed, namely adur, Carrick, Chelmsford, Eastleigh, Hereford, South Somerset and Three Rivers, are currently controlled by a single party. In each case SLD has overall control.

Local Authorities (Expenditure Assessments)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list those local authorities which in the financial years 1987-88, and 1988-89, have used their financial reserves to support spending levels above their grant-related expenditure assessments.

Mr. Gummer: [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The authorities which have used their financial reserves (1) to support spending levels (2) above their grant related expenditure assessments in 1987-88 are given in list A and in 1988-89 are given in list B.

Note:

(1) Defined as use of balances and/or unallocated contributions from special and capital funds.

(2) Defined as the latest available "total expenditure" returned by authorities.

Local Councils (Statistics)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give in tabular form for (a) the London borough of Tower Hamlets, (b) the London borough of Richmond-upon-Thames, (c) the London borough of Sutton, (d) Calderdale Metropolitan district council and (e) Stockport Metropolitan district council (i) which councils are nuclear-free zones, (ii) which councils, acting as a local education authority, employ staff to teach peace studies as part of the curriculum, (iii) what is the estimated number of homeless people in the district for the most recent month for which figures are available, (iv) what is the number of empty council homes at the end of the most recent month for which figures are available and (vi) whether they have a declared policy of providing the funding for law centres.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 13 February 1989]: The information available on homelessness relates to the number of households for which authorities have accepted responsibility to secure accommodation under the homelessness provision of the 1985 Housing Act. This information is as follows:

	Number of households accepted	in quarter ending
Tower Hamlets	332	March 1988
Richmond	89	September 1988
Sutton	105	September 1988
Calderdale	56	September 1988
Stockport	120	September 1988

The numbers of empty council dwellings at the first of April 1988 are as follows:

	Number of dwellings
Tower Hamlets	2,526
Richmond	154
Sutton	110
Calderdale	448
Stockport	452

Information is not held centrally on authorities which have declared themselves to be nuclear free zones, or which employ staff to teach peace studies as part of the curriculum, or which have a declared policy of providing funding for law centres.

Homeless Families

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the comparative public sector revenue costs of housing homeless families in (a) Greater London and (b) in English non-metropolitan areas by (i) providing them with newly built council dwellings, (ii) providing them with council dwellings newly acquired from the private sector and improved for letting, and (iii) providing them with bed and breakfast accommodation; and if he will publish these figures on a comparable basis with those published in his replies to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 16 January, Official Report, columns 331-32 and on 4 March 1987, Official Report, column 639.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 16 February 1989]: Estimates for 1987-88 are as follows:

	Greater London	English metropolitan areas
New build	8,200	5,000
Acquisition and renovation	8,200	5,500
Bed and breakfast	40	15

Notes:

1. The estimates for new build and for acquisition and renovation show the total first year costs to local authorities of the accommodation shown;
2. Estimates of average new build and renovation costs were derived from information provided by local authorities in housing subsidy and can show significant variation from authority to authority and year to year reflecting differences in the mix of work undertaken;
3. The bed and breakfast figures are gross costs per household day and are based on returns to CIPFA from those local authorities providing information on both gross expenditure on bed and breakfast and the number of household days of bed and breakfast provided.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Surplus Places)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what he estimates to be the number of surplus places in Oxfordshire for (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools; and the cost of such places.

Mr. Butcher: Information about the number of surplus places in individual local education authorities is not held centrally.

Parental Rights

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement detailing existing parental rights with regard to out of catchment area exceptional admissions to primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Butcher: Under section 6 of the Education Act 1980, parents have the right to express a preference as to the school at which they want their child to be educated, and that preference has to be met if the child is eligible and there is a place available at the school of the parents' choice. These rights exist irrespective of whether the parents live in a defined area, although pupils living near the school are sometimes given priority if there are more applicants than available places.

Special Boarding Schools

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has received from the working party considering the future of Inner London education authority special boarding schools; and what steps he proposes to take to consult the parents concerned before reaching a final decision.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 22 February 1989 to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey).

GCSE

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what appeal procedure exists for teachers whose school-based examination syllabus is rejected by the GCSE board; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is entirely a matter for individual Examining Groups to determine which syllabuses they offer. All GCSE syllabuses must conform to national criteria. Syllabuses in subjects for which there are specific criteria must also be approved by the School Examinations and Assessment Council. SEAC will always indicate necessary modifications in cases where it withholds approval.

ILEA Dwellings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the total number of dwellings in Greater London owned by the Inner London education authority which are unlawfully occupied.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on this subject is not held by my Department.

SCOTLAND

Rural Areas (Jobs)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public sector jobs there were in rural areas in Scotland at the latest date for which figures are available; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested is not available.

Job Creation

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been created in Scotland since 1983, how many of them are self-employed, how many are part-time; and how many he estimates are in rural areas.

Mr. Rifkind: It is estimated that between September 1983 and September 1988 the civilian work force in employment in Scotland increased by 41,000. In this period the number of self-employed increased by 22,000 and the number of female part-time employees in employment increased by 52,000. These estimates may be revised when the results of the 1987 census of employment and the 1988 labour force survey become available. Comparable figures are not available for the self-employed working part-time and for male part-time employees in employment. It is not possible to provide comparable information for rural areas in Scotland.

Constituency Registers

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of people in each parliamentary constituency in Scotland listed on (a) the electoral registers for 1988-89, (b) the electoral registers for 1989-90 and (c) the poll tax registers for 1989-90

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following table compares the numbers on the electoral registers published in February 1988 and February 1989. Information about the numbers on the community charges register in each constituency is not held centrally.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will introduce regulations to restrict the sale, copying or inspection of the electoral register when the electoral registrar obtains information from the poll tax registers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. The considerations governing the sale, copying and inspection of the electoral register have not altered since the present policy was reviewed in 1985-86. The Representation of the People (Scotland) Regulations 1986 already forbid the supply of data which is not required to be published in the register itself.

Local Government and Housing Bill

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any information on the number of people who will be affected by the provisions of the Local Government and Housing Bill relating to political officers who are currently serving councillors.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

New Towns

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 317, to the hon. Member for East Kilbride, he will give the updated list of bodies and organisations which have responded to the consultation document "The Scottish New Towns—Maintaining the Momentum."

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to note that over 100 bodies and organisations have responded to the consultation document. The comprehensive list requested by the hon. Member for East Kilbride is as follows:

Abronhill Community Council (Cumbernauld)
Ardrossan, Saltcoats, Stevenston Enterprise Trust
Ayrshire and Arran Health Board
Ayrshire Chamber of Industries
Barclay and Cameron Way Residents Association (Livingston)

Rates

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of domestic rates relief in each year since 1985-86.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table.

	Total domestic element £ million
1985-86	102·9
1986-87	91·3
1987-88	90·8
1988-89	91·9

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average unrebated domestic rates bill in each year since 1985-86.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table.

	Scotland average unrebated domestic rate bill £
1985-86	392
1986-87	417
1987-88	474
1988-89	495

Rating Valuation and Practice

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in the talks between the rating assessors in Scotland and the Inland Revenue with regard to harmonisation of rating valuation and practice north and south of the border; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The talks between the Scottish Assessors' Association and the Inland Revenue valuation office have made significant progress. The major areas of cross-border difference have been identified and the underlying causes analysed. The discussions have concentrated on identifying areas where progress could be made in the 1990 revaluation, broadly within the present statutory and case law framework, and on identifying where subsequent changes in the law will be necessary. Powers to allow the Secretary of State to prescribe methods of valuation for particular subjects were taken in the Local Government Finance Act 1988 specifically to promote harmonisation.

In the case of the majority of subjects valued on the basis of rental evidence, the outcome of the harmonisation discussions will be to ensure that the handling and interpretation of the evidence north and south of the border is in line.

The discussions have identified certain classes of subjects where there have been more fundamental differences of practice north and south of the border. There will now be moves towards a more common approach, within the constraints of statute and case law, and the result of this is expected to be the closing of many of the major gaps which have existed between valuations under the two systems. We are giving serious consideration along with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to the use of powers taken in the 1988 Act to allow prescription of common decapitalisation rates north and south of the border for properties valued on the contractor's basis. One area of difficulty relates to the valuation of plant and machinery, which is carried out in accordance with different statutory rules in Scotland and in England and Wales. Analysis of the differences in terms of the effect on valuation is complex. The harmonisation discussions have concluded that it would be impracticable to seek to make changes before the 1990 revaluation but, as we have already announced, we are to set up a committee to advise on this matter with a view to achieving harmonisation as soon as possible thereafter.

Mr. Manouchehr Tehrani

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received regarding the dismissal of Mr. Manouchehr Tehrani from his employment as a consultant surgeon at the Inverclyde royal hospital, by the Argyll and Clyde Health Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations. Solicitors acting for Mr. Tehrani have lodged notices of appeal to the Secretary of State against his summary dismissal by the Argyll and Clyde health board in accordance with NHS terms and conditions of service. On Mr. Tehrani's application the health board's decision to dismiss him summarily is subject to proceedings for judicial review, and my right hon. and learned Friend has deferred consideration of the applications for appeal meantime.

Hospitals

Mr. Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the hospitals in each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is included in the annual publication "Scottish Health Service Costs", copies of which are available in the Library.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has decided the amount of fee remission grant to allocate to schools participating in the assisted places scheme in respect of session 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The allocations of fee remission grant for 1988-89 are shown in the table. I have decided to admit two additional schools to the scheme, Hamilton college, and Oxenfoord Castle school, Midlothian, which are included in the table and I am also currently looking at an extension of the scheme to cover pupils in the later stages of preparatory schools in the 1989-90 session. Overall, these allocations and the extension of the scheme to the preparatory sector should result in a significant increase in the number of pupils being assisted from the current level of about 2,670 to about 2,830 and there will be further expansion to bring the total benefiting to about 3,000 by the 1991-92 academic session. The scheme will continue to concentrate assistance on less well-off families, increasing their opportunities to exercise real choice in the education of their children.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the statistics for the assisted places scheme in Scotland in the 1988-89 school session and the income scale which will apply to the scheme in school session 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At the beginning of the current school session there were 2,543 pupils receiving assistance under the assisted places scheme. Additional pupils will be admitted to assisted places throughout the 1988-89 school session and I expect that the final total will be broadly in line with that for the 1987-88 session, when 2,670 pupils benefited.

The scheme continues to concentrate assistance on lower income families. In 1988-89 1,108 pupils (44 per cent. of those in the scheme) will be receiving full fee remission because they have a family income of £7,258 per annum or less. A further 121 pupils (4 per cent.) have family incomes between £7,259 and £8,000 per annum and 86 (3 per cent.) between £8,001 and £8,500.

For school session 1989-90 I propose to lay regulations before the House in due course providing for progressive parental contributions for one assisted pupil in relation to family income as follows:

Part of relevant income to which the specified percentage applies	Parental contribution (percentage)
That part (if any) which exceeds £7,418 but does not exceed £8,066	9
That part (if any) which exceeds £8,066 but does not exceed £8,725	12
That part (if any) which exceeds £8,725 but does not exceed £10,032	15
That part (if any) which exceeds £10,032 but does not exceed £12,043	21
That part (if any) which exceeds £12,043 but does not exceed £14,668	24
That part (if any) which exceeds £14,668	33

The relevant income scale is open ended, but the remission can of course be given only where the parental contribution is less than the school tuition fee.

Forestry

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for forestry grants in Scotland were made in the year to March 1988; how many were referred to regional advisory committees; how many were completely rejected; and how many were accepted in modified form.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission received 1,530 applications for grant in Scotland in the year to 31 March 1988. Of these, 34 were referred to regional advisory committees, of which six were refused and 20 were approved after modifications.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Palestinian Uprising

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's consul general in Jerusalem has conveyed to local Palestinian leaders the views of Her Majesty's Government on call number 34, issued by the unified national leadership of the uprising, describing 23 and 25 February as days of Palestinian Molotovs.

Mr. Waldegrave: We share the hon. Member's concern over the use of violence in the occupied territories. The membership of the "unified national leadership of the uprising" is anonymous, but Her Majesty's consul general in Jerusalem has repeated our concern in his contacts with leading Palestinians.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has communicated to the Palestine Liberation Organisation its views on the proposal contained in call number 34 that 23 and 25 February should be days of Palestinian Molotovs.

Mr. Waldegrave: We share the hon. Member's concern over the use of violence in the occupied territories, and have made our views clear to representatives of the PLO.

Mr. Charles Bester

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the criteria on which his decisions to make representations to the South African Government on behalf of the Sharpeville Six and Nelson Mandela, but not in the case of Mr. Charles Bester, were based.

Mrs. Chalker: Each case is considered on its individual merits.

Prisoners of Conscience

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will make a statement of the criteria he applies when deciding whether or not to intervene with national governments on behalf of prisoners of conscience.

Mrs. Chalker: Each case is considered on its individual merits.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries to which he has made representations on behalf of prisoners of conscience during the past 10 years.

Mrs. Chalker: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

South Africa (Prisoners)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names of those in custody in the Republic of South Africa on whose behalf representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of South Africa, together with the offence under which the prisoners were charged, and the number of occasions on which representations have been made since 1979 to the present.

Mrs. Chalker: This information is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Vietnamese Refugees

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if in the light of the agreement by the United States of America, Canada and Australia to admit more Vietnamese refugees, he will now confirm the agreement to increase the United Kingdom quota announced on 22 December 1988; what the arrangements will be for the increased numbers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Pursuant to the answer my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 21 February at column 539, we announced on 22 December 1988 that we were prepared in principle to contribute to a major international effort to tackle the problem of Vietnamese boat people in Hong Kong by taking a further 1,000 Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong over two to three years, provided that others were prepared to contribute commensurately. We have conducted a vigorous diplomatic campaign to urge other resettlement countries to match what we intend to do by accepting substantial additional numbers of Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong. The response to our call has been very good and amounts to a significantly increased international effort.

Accordingly, we have decided to proceed with our new resettlement plans. The refugees will be resettled in ways which minimise the pressure on housing resources in certain urban areas of the country.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Executive

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes the Housing Executive has constructed in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housng Executive, who has advised that the information requested is as follows:

	Number
1978-79	5,134
1979-80	2,962
1980-81	2,710
1981-82	2,342
1982-83	3,628
1983-84	3,872
1984-85	3,386
1985-86	3,158
1986-87	2,216
1987-88	1,810

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes have been sold by the Housing Executive in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised that the information requested is as follows:

	Number
1978-79	485
1979-80	517
1980-81	2,039
1981-82	7,042
1982-83	5,583
1983-84	5,471
1984-85	5,469
1985-86	4,213
1986-87	3,261
1987-88	2,915

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes have been owned by the Housing Executive in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, who has advised that the information requested is as follows:

	Number
31 March 1978	186,388
31 March 1979	192,000
31 March 1980	196,787
31 March 1981	196,435
31 March 1982	189,640
31 March 1983	189,257
31 March 1984	183,761
31 March 1985	183,439
31 March 1986	181,717
31 March 1987	179,910
31 March 1988	176,832

RUC and Army Raids

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how much has been paid out in compensation, and in how many cases, in respect of damage resulting from raids on homes by the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Army during the last 12 months;

(2) how many claims for compensation have been received from people claiming damage in respect of Royal Ulster Constabulary and Army raids on their homes during the last 12 months.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Gerard Hanratty

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on Gerard Hanratty, currently in custody in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Tom King: I understand that a police investigation with a view to possible charges in respect of Hanratty in the Federal Republic of Germany is continuing.

Her Majesty's Government have submitted a request for the return of Hanratty to face charges for firearms offences arising from an incident in Northern Ireland in 1984 once German proceedings have been completed.

Income Support

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applicants for income support have not had a final decision made because of delays caused by waiting lists for sight examinations.

Mr. Needham: Decisions on claims for income support are made on the basis of the circumstances at the date the claim is received. Information is not available about the number of claimants awaiting sight examinations.

Water Pollution

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of recorded water pollution incidents in the Omagh district between September and November 1988.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 February 1989]: Water pollution incidents in the Omagh district for the period in question were as follows:

	Number
September	32
October	23
November	19
Total	74

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to ensure that the sums allocated for the social fund budget, both grants and loans, will be fully spent in 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 20 February at column 474.

Claimants (Waiting Time)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average waiting time for claimants calling personally at social security offices at Crown Dale, Stockwell road and Camberwell New road in Lambeth.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The average waiting times for callers to two of the offices in question are set out as follows:

	Income support (Minutes)	Contributory benefits (Minutes)
Camberwell New road (Oval office)	55	5
Crown Dale (Crystal Palace office)	39·5	11·5

This information was obtained as a result of sampling at the end of 1988.

The information for Stockwell road (Brixton office) will not be available until the beginning of April.

Old Age Pension

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what level the basic old age pension would now stand if it had been uprated in line with earnings since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Based on annual upratings in line with earnings since 1979, the current weekly value of basic retirement pension would be £49·10 for a single pensioner, and £78·65 for a pensioner couple.

DEFENCE

Low-level Flights (East Linton)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the speed, height and purpose of the low-level flight by a jet aircraft over East Linton, East Lothian, at 1 pm on Monday 23 January.

Mr. Neubert: Two Tornado aircraft from RAF Cottesmore flying out of RAF Leuchars were authorised to carry out a terrain following low-level training sortie in the area at a height of 700 ft. and under the normal speed restrictions for the aircraft and type of sortie.

United States Forces

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Menwith hill was first made available for use by United States forces.

Mr. Neubert: The Menwith hill site was first made available to United States forces in June 1955.

Research Agreements

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts or agreements for research and development have currently been placed with United Kingdom universities and other institutions of higher education by the atomic weapons research establishment; what is their total value; and with which United Kingdom and other institutions of higher education they were placed.

Mr. Sainsbury: The atomic weapons establishment has currently 39 contracts or agreements placed with United Kingdom universities or institutions of higher education; their total value is £2·2 million. It is not our policy to give further details of these arrangements.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research contracts or agreements the scientific research and development branch has currently placed with United Kingdom universities and other institutions of higher education; what is their total value; and if he will list them.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence has currently 757 research agreements and 96 contracts with United Kingdom universities and other institutions of higher education; the total value is £55 million. It is not our policy to give details of these arrangements; it is for the universities themselves to confirm their involvement.

Pension Scheme

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the opportunities available to members of the armed forces for making additional voluntary contributions in order to enhance the benefits payable under the armed forces pension scheme.

Mr. Neubert: The armed forces pension scheme (AFPS) provides an excellent range of benefits which are already mainly at the limits allowed by the Inland Revenue for occupational pension schemes. Nevertheless where scope does exist for additional voluntary contributions (AVCs), in-scheme facilities have been introduced so that service men can, so far as is possible, bring their benefits up to Inland Revenue limits. Under these arrangements all service men can enhance the widow's/widower's pension and the death in service lump sum; service men with military salaries in excess of those upon which pension rates are based can enhance all their AFPS benefits; and late entrants to the services can buy added years. MOD is prepared to issue certificates where appropriate to those wishing to make free standing AVCs (FSAVCs) for the same range of benefits.

I am pleased to say that it is now also possible for some service men to make FSAVCs in respect of additional pay which they might be receiving.

Additional pay in the armed forces does not readily lend itself to AVC purposes because most of it is unpredictable in incidence and discontinuous or short term. There are also wide variations in the amount of money involved. Provided certain criteria are fulfilled, however, some service men could benefit and in these circumstances MOD is now prepared to certify applications for FSAVCs.

I believe that these facilities provide opportunities for members of the AFPS which are as far as possible in line with those envisaged for other occupational pension schemes in keeping with the spirit of this Government's recent legislation.

Service Personnel (Shootings)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when was the last time that service personnel fired shots on the British mainland in the course of their duty when they were not involved in training exercises.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As the hon. Gentleman will be aware, a sentry on duty at Clive barracks, Tern hill, fired three shots at terrorist intruders shortly after 3 am on Monday, 20 February.

Police

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to reduce the complement of the Ministry of Defence police.

Mr. Sainsbury: Like all other forms of MOD manpower, the requirements for MOD police are reviewed regularly, in the light of current policing and security requirements. It is not MOD policy to reveal details of future manning levels in the force.

Security Firms

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to increase the use of private security firms in guarding establishments of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: The use of private security firms in guarding establishments is an option open to MOD in those cases where their use can satisfy certain security criteria. Any change in the present scale of such arrangements will result from the assessment of the level of security protection required at specific establishments and an appraisal of the performance of those private security firms currently employed.

Defence Police Federation

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations have been held with the Defence Police Federation regarding the complementing criteria exercise.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Defence Police Federation has been regularly consulted, both orally and in writing, about each stage of the complementing criteria since its inception in 1986.

Security Arrangements

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the annual expenditure on fencing and other physical security arrangements for establishments of his Department in 1988.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It would require disproportionate cost and effort to establish a comprehensive figure for all MOD and service establishments.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes to security arrangements for his Department's establishments on the British mainland have been initiated in the light of evidence of terrorist access to Semtex and similar explosives.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our security arrangements are constantly reviewed in the light of our assessment of the terrorist threat.

Low Flying

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to let the right hon. Member for Swansea, West have a full reply about the low-flying incidents which he reported to his Department a month ago; and why the reply has taken so long to prepare.

Mr. Neubert: As I explained in my letter of 1 February to the right hon. Member, investigations by the RAF police into low-flying incidents are always very thorough and may take some months to complete. I shall, however, write to the right hon. Member with a full response as soon as possible.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will extend the very low-flying prohibition zone further from the built-up areas of the city of Swansea; if he will include upper Trillay within that area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: As the right hon. Member is aware, pilots are already instructed to avoid overflying the centres of major conurbations and built-up areas such as Swansea at low level, although we cannot guarantee to avoid overflying the outskirts of major towns and smaller communities. Pilots will however make every effort to avoid populated areas wherever possible.

Tern Hill Barracks

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the explosives used in the attack on Tern hill barracks on Monday 20 February were planted; and when the challenge was issued by security personnel to two suspected intruders.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The soldiers challenged the terrorists on seeing them inside the barrack area at just after 0300 hrs. When the explosives were planted is a matter for the police investigation to establish.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the exact period of time between the issuing of a challenge to the intruders at the Tern hill barracks on Monday 20 February and the detonation of explosives inside the barracks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The first explosion occurred some 20 minutes after the soldiers first challenged the terrorists on seeing them inside the barrack area. There were two subsequent explosions. The precise timing and sequence of events is a matter for the police investigation.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when were security personnel at Tern hill barracks informed about the theft of the car suspected of being used in connection with the attack.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the Austin Montego car hijacked from the Simpsons. Information was received at Clive barracks that the terrorists had made off in a hijacked car at about 0415 hrs on Monday, 20 February.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints have been received from local residents near the Tern hill barracks about unauthorised access to the site of the barracks in each of the last three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no record of any complaints having been received from local residents about unauthorised access to Clive barracks, Tern hill during the last three years.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when was the last time security at the Tern hill barracks was (a) tested and (b) evaluated.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Within the United Kingdom land forces command, all units are required to carry out regular security exercises. A co-ordinated test and evaluation of security at Tern hill barracks was last carried out on 18 December 1988.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the expenditure on perimeter fencing at the Tern hill barracks in each of the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Tern hill barracks was rebuilt in 1981 as an open-plan barracks. During the past year, a number of improvements to the fencing at the barracks have been carried out. However, the cost of these improvements is not readily identifiable.

Royal Ordnance, Bishopton

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will provide details of expenditure incurred by his Department in the procurement of raw materials for use by Royal Ordnance, Bishopton for the financial year 1986-87 expended in (a) Scotland and (b) Strathclyde region;

(2) if he will provide details of expenditure incurred by his Department in the procurement of general administrative goods and services for use by Royal Ordnance, Bishopton for the financial year 1986-87 expended in (a) Scotland and (b) Strathclyde region;

(3) if he will provide details of expenditure incurred by his Department in the procurement of the services of contractors and sub-contractors for use by Royal Ordnance, Bishopton for the financial year 1986-87 expended in (a) Scotland and (b) Strathclyde region;

(4) if he will provide details of expenditure incurred by his Department in the procurement of plant for use by Royal Ordnance, Bishopton for the financial year 1986-87 expended in (a) Scotland and (b) Strathclyde region;

(5) if he will provide details of expenditure incurred by his Department in the procurement of goods and services for the purpose of maintenance and general upkeep of plant and premises at Royal Ordnance, Bishopton for the financial year 1986-87 expended in (a) Scotland and (b) Strathclyde region;

(6) if he will provide details of expenditure incurred by his Department in the procurement of non-product raw materials for use by Royal Ordnance, Bishopton for the financial year 1986-87 expended in (a) Scotland and (b) Strathclyde region.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. Royal Ordnance was an incorporated company in 1986-87, which was the financial year immediately preceding privatisation. The Department made no purchases on behalf of Royal Ordnance, Bishopton, and the purchasing of raw materials and plant, and the cost of sub-contractors, maintenance, administration and services in order to carry out its operations, were all matters for the company.

A90

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the contractual problems with the A90 complex at AWE Aldermaston have been overcome; and what assessment has been made of whether the ventilation and ducting system will fully meet the health and saftey requirements of the contract.

Mr. Sainsbury: The contract in question is the responsibility of the Property Services Agency which, I understand is currently investigating the claims made in the programme. Assessments of the installation of certain elements of the A90 ducting system against contractual requirements and in relation to safety are being conducted.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the A90 complex at AWE Aldermaston is on schedule to meet the heads of the Trident programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the report on Trident produced for the Select Committee on Defence, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House on 17 January. The Trident project remains on programme to enter service as planned in the mid-1990s.

Ordnance Depot, Donnington

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the findings of the board of inquiry into the fire at Central Ordnance depot, Donnington, on 25 April 1988 and the action which he is taking on them.

Mr. Neubert: I have now considered the findings of the Army board of inquiry which was set up to investigate the major fire at the central ordanance depot, Donnington on 25 April 1988 and to make recommendations on the action to be taken to prevent a recurrence. I have placed in the Library of the House a summary of the board of inquiry's report, with its findings and recommendations set out in full.

The board of inquiry concluded that the fire must have been caused deliberately, but was unable to establish who was responsible. The fire destroyed two-thirds of one large storage building (B1) and its contents. Those stocks were due to be transferred in September 1988 to a new fully fire-protected building at Donnington which it was decided to build following the fire at the depot in 1983. The board found that the recommendations of the board of inquiry into that fire had, with minor exceptions, been implemented. It observed, however, that stocks in the B1 building lacked effective fire-protection during the period when the new building to which they were to be transferred was being built.

The board found no evidence of a significant pollution hazard during or after the fire, although the contents and fabric of the B1 building represented a potential hazard. It took the view that insufficient information was given to the public to allay concern about possible health hazards. It also found some weaknesses in emergency procedures and occupational health arrangements for those employed at the depot and considered that, while the arrangements for ensuring its security were generally satisfactory, they did not cater sufficiently for the high risk of building B1.

Subject to two qualifications, the Ministry of Defence accepts the board's findings. The Ministry considers that the board's observation on the lack of protection for the stocks in building B1, pending their transfer to the new building, does not take sufficient account of the steps which were taken after the 1983 fire to reduce the level of stocks in the building and to improve the fire protection arrangements. The Ministry also considers that the board's view that insufficient information was given to allay public concern about possible health hazards disregards both the assurances given in public statements at the time of the fire and its aftermath and the steps taken to keep the local authorities informed.

The board of inquiry made 25 recommendations to deal with these aspects. They cover changes in policy and practice for the control of hazardous stores, handling of emergencies, public information, health and safety responsibilities, security and training. Its main recommendation is that funds should be made available as a matter of urgency to provide storage buildings with the proper level of fire-protection appropriate to the risk and that there should be an examination of the most practical way of protecting stocks while this work is being carried out.

In general the Ministry of Defence accepts the board's recommendations and is taking the necessary follow-up action. Some of the recommendations have already been or are being put into effect. Others require further consideration before final conclusions can be reached about how they should be implemented and this is proceeding as quickly as possible. As regards the board's main recommendation, all storage buildings need to be surveyed in order to assess what fire-protection measures are needed and to determine priorities. In view of the large number of buildings and the scale of work involved, the whole programme will need to be phased over several years, but the aim will be to complete it as soon as practical. Ways of providing protection against fire during this period are being considered.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Forensic Science Service

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many research contracts or agreements the forensic science service has currently placed with United Kingdom universities and other institutions of higher education; what is their total worth; and if he will list them.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The forensic science service has nine research contracts outstanding with United Kingdom universities and institutions of higher education, as follows:

Research Organisation	Nature of Research	Contract (£)
Loughborough University	High performance liquid chromatography	23,300
Hull University	High sensitivity detection of drugs by chemiluminescence	10,710
Manchester University	ABO grouping of bloodstains by an automated process	19,785
Aston University	Expert systems to assess forensic evidence	14,025
Swansea University	Flake powders for fingerprint applications	74,650
Scottish College of Textiles	Colour coding of individual textile fibres	20,122
Keele University	Motor vehicle paint sample collections	13,986
Queen's University Belfast	Improved reagents for detecting fingerprints	45,522
St. George's Hospital Medical School	Tablet and capsule identification system	12,000

Research Organisation	Nature of Research	Contract (£)
		234,100

Naturalisation Applications

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the approximate date of application of the naturalisation applications which are currently being processed;

(2) how long it will take to process the naturalisation applications which have been outstanding for more than one year.

Mr. Renton: Applications for naturalisation currently being processed span a wide spread of dates but the average time taken to complete such applications in January 1989 was 21 months. It is not possible to give a reliable forecast of how long naturalisation applications which have been outstanding for more than one year will take to complete.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of his staff are engaged on processing naturalisation applications.

Mr. Renton: On 31 January 1989 171 staff in the nationality division were engaged on processing naturalisation applications.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will introduce regulations to restrict the sale, copying or inspection of the electoral register when the electoral registrar obtains information from the poll tax registers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The considerations governing the sale, copying and inspection of the electoral register have not changed since the present policy was comprehensively reviewed in 1985-86. The Representation of the People Regulations 1986 already forbid the supply of data which is not required to be published in the register itself.

Police Cells

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new measures he is taking to reduce the number of prisoners held in police cells.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The measures initiated last year, which are continuing to deliver more prison accommodation, are being supplemented by a programme of vigorous management action to obtain the maximum capacity from the accommodation currently available.

Pornography (Imports)

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that following 1992 there will remain sufficient safeguards to prevent the import of pornographic material into the United Kingdom from Europe.

Mr. Renton: We intend to maintain tough controls on such material. The scope for exercising control at the point of importation is among the matters we shall be discussing with our European Community partners in the general context of 1992.

Airport Security

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much is spent by his Department on private security firms performing services at immigration detention centres at Heathrow, Gatwick, Birmingham and Manchester airports, for each year since 1985; and how many firms are involved.

Mr. Renton: Group 4 Total Security Ltd. holds the sole contract for the provision of orderly and escort services for persons detained under the Immigration Act 1971 in the immigration detention centres at Heathrow, Gatwick and Manchester. There is no longer a detention centre at Birmingham airport.

The contract was let to Group 4 Total Security Ltd. with effect from 31 December 1988 following competitive tenders. Between 1 July 1970 and 30 December 1988 the contract was held by Securicor Ltd. The cost of the services is a matter of commercial and contractual confidentiality which it would not be right to disclose.

Carriers Liability

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the receipts to date under the Carriers Liability Act; and what are the arrears.

Mr. Renton: Payments totalling £3·888 million had been received up to 31 January 1989, and £4·349 million was outstanding.

Special Constables

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special constables there are at present in England and Wales; and what plans he has to encourage further recruitment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The strength of the special constabulary in England and Wales at the end of 1987 (the latest available figure) was 16,209.

Recruitment is a matter for individual chief constables. My right hon. Friend convened a conference in December 1987 in order to enable chief officers to discuss all aspects of the special constabulary, particularly how to increase its strength and improve its deployment. A report has been circulated to all forces.

The Government are also reviewing the allowances paid to special constables, in consultation with the Police Advisory Board for England and Wales.

Confiscation Orders

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to seek to extend the power of courts to issue confiscation orders.

Mr. John Patten: We have no present plans to extend the powers of courts to make confiscation orders, but the Prevention of Terrorism Bill would give courts additional powers to order forfeiture of funds destined for use in connection with terrorism.

"Broadcasting in the '90s"

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further representations he has received from the British Broadcasting Corporation on the implications for its existing levels of service of the proposals in his White Paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The British Broadcasting Corporation's response to the White Paper was published on Monday 6 February. We keep in close touch with the BBC about broadcasting policy issues.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many responses he has received to his White Paper on broadcasting.

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has now received on the broadcasting White Paper.

Mr. Renton: Just over 1,200 written responses so far. We would welcome any further representations before the consultation period ends on 28 February.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he defines night hours in his White Paper on broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: The White Paper refers to the definition given by the Peacock committee, namely the period between 1 am and 6 am (paragraph 3.12). It will be for the ITC to determine the boundaries between the different licence periods on Channels 3 and 5.

Penal System (Privatisation)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received from private companies about privatisation within the penal system; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list those companies which have tendered for private remand prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No such tenders have been either invited or received. A number of private companies have submitted comments in response to the Green Paper "Private Sector Involvement in the Remand System" (Cm. 434, July 1988), and expressed interest in becoming involved in the areas of work which the Green Paper considers. My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement shortly on the results of the Green Paper consultation and of the associated management consultancy study into the practicality of the options described in the Green Paper.

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special category A Irish prisoners have been transferred from a jail in England and Wales to a jail in Northern Ireland during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None, but one is awaiting transfer.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests for transfers to jails in Northern Ireland are currently outstanding from prisoners who are serving their sentences in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Nineteen requests for permanent transfer and nine for temporary transfer to Northern Ireland are awaiting a final decision.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time taken to process a request for transfer to a jail in Northern Ireland from a prisoner who is currently serving his or her sentence in England or Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Approximately 13 weeks.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether a decision has yet been made about the application for transfer to a jail in Northern Ireland from prisoner 463799 (McCartney); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. A decision will be reached as soon as possible.

Broadcasting

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has on the number of broadcasting transmitter faults reported and repaired in 1988;

(2) what information he has on the cost in each of the last five years of maintenance on the broadcasting transmitter networks.

Mr. Renton: We do not have the information requested. Broadcasting transmission is the responsibility of the IBA and the BBC.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of broadcast hours on (a) BBC-1, (b) BBC-2, (c) independent television and (d) Channel 4 made by United Kingdom independent producers in 1988; and at what cost.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not currently available. I will write to the hon. Gentleman when it is.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish a table showing the cost of transmission for each independent television company and for Channel 4 (a) in cash terms and (b) per capita in catchment areas.

Mr. Renton: No. Broadcasting transmission costs are the responsibility of the BBC and the IBA.

Broadcasting Companies (Training)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of training presently conducted by (a) the British Broadcasting Corporation, (b) the Independent Broadcasting Authority, (c) the Independent Television companies and (d) Channel 4, independent producers will be required to undertake.

Mr. Renton: The White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s" does not propose any requirement for independent producers to undertake training.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Independent Television Commission will be required to undertake the training for transmission presently conducted by the Independent Broadcasting Authority.

Mr. Renton: We shall not make detailed decisions on the responsibilities of the ITC in relation to transmission until we have received and considered the study which we have commissioned from Price Waterhouse. In a fully privatised transmission system the presumption is that any training necessary would be carried out by the private transmission operators.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has on the investment by (a) the Independent Broadcasting Authority, (b) each independent television company and (c) Channel 4 in training in each of the past five years;

(2) what information he has on the investment by the BBC in training in each of the last five years.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to questions from him on 14 February 1989 at column 115.

Broadcasting Companies (Disabled Employees)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will publish a table showing what proportion of the total work force (a) the British Broadcasting Corporation, (b) each Independent Television company and (c) Channel 4 were registered disabled in each of the past five years;

(2) whether he will publish a table showing how many registered disabled persons were employed by (a) the BBC, (b) ITV companies and (c) Channel 4 in each of the past five years.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not held centrally.

Police Expenditure

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any guidelines are issued to police forces regarding the cost of pursuing prosecutions so as to place a limit on expenditure in relation to petty offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The decision whether to initiate a prosecution in a particular case is an operational matter for the chief officer of the police force concerned.

Police Searches

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he issues on the conduct of inquiries carried out by a police force on behalf of another force as to whether officers may be authorised to carry out searches without being accompanied by officers from the originating force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Hogg: None. Police constables in England and Wales have full constabulary powers throughout England and Wales. It is not therefore necessary for a police officer carrying out a search to be accompanied by an officer from the force that initiated the inquiry. Guidance to the police on the conduct of searching persons and premises generally is contained in the codes of practice issued in accordance with the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Rape

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to ensure a specific minimum sentence for those convicted of rape; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Our criminal justice system does not provide for minimum sentences, except for the offence of murder. It is for the courts to consider the circumstances of each case and decide on a sentence which reflects the gravity of the individual offence, within the maximum penalties determined by Parliament. Following guidance given by the Court of Appeal, the proportion of convicted rapists receiving sentences of five years' imprisonment or longer increased from 42 per cent. in 1985 to 79 per cent. in 1987.

Police Cars

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the use of unmarked police cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The use of unmarked police vehicles is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police.

Mr. Charles Pitts

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the letters to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State from the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey dated 12 December, 1988, 28 December 1988 and 6 January, on a matter relating to his constituent, Mr. Charles Pitts, who is a prisoner at Her Majesty's Prison Wandsworth will be answered; and if he will give the reasons why the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey has not received replies to these letters before now.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have written to the hon. Member. The correspondence raised a number of issues on which detailed inquiries needed to be made.

Metropolitan Police (Properties)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many properties owned by the Metropolitan police are unlawfully occupied.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that none of these properties is unlawfully occupied.

Police (Assaults)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement outlining any plans which he has to introduce legislation to increase penalties available for assaults upon police officers.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 21 February 1989]: We have no plans to increase the present maximum penalties (six months' imprisonment or a fine of £2,000 or both), which are the maxima for offences tried in magistrates courts. More serious assaults would normally be dealt with as offences against the person, with higher maximum penalties, including life imprisonment for wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm and attempted murder.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inflation

5. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for inflation for 1989-90.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor will be giving a forecast in his Budget statement next month.

35. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many members of the European Community have inflation rates lower than that in Britain.

Mr. Lilley: Nine.

66. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest target for inflation.

Mr. Lilley: The ultimate objective of this Government is price stability.

Interest (Taxation)

17. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to change the arrangements for taxing interest on building society and bank deposits.

Mr. Brooke: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Scotch Whisky

19. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue obtained from excise duty and value-added tax from the sales of Scotch whisky in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke: Figures are not directly available for Scotch whisky. The revenue yield for excise duty and value added tax on Scotch whisky was about 95 per cent. of that from those taxes on all whiskies.

Employee Shareholders

20. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the number of employee shareholders in the United Kingdom.

48. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the number of employee shareholders in the United Kingdom.

64. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the number of employee shareholders in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About 1¼ million employees have received shares, or options over shares, through the approved share schemes, open to all employees.

Indirect Taxation

21. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of total tax revenue arose from indirect taxes in 1988; and what figures he has for the United States of American, Japan and West Germany.

Mr. Major: The latest directly comparable OECD figures are for 1986. They show that the share of indirect taxes in the total was 43 per cent. for the United Kingdom, 29 per cent. for the United States of America, 27 per cent. for Japan and 30 per cent. for West Germany.

Self-employment

22. Mr. Norris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total growth in self-employment since 1979.

61. Mr. Lord: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total growth in self-employment since 1979.

80. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total growth in self-employment since 1979.

102. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total growth in self-employment since 1979.

Mr. Major: Between June 1979 and September 1988 the number of self-employed people in Great Britain rose by 60 per cent. to nearly 3 million.

Bank of England (Governor)

23. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England; and what was discussed.

58. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will next be meeting the Governor of the Bank of England; and what matters will be raised.

62. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England; and what was discussed.

88. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent meetings he has had with the Governor of the Bank of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend meets the governor from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

Public Sector Price Increases

24. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the effect of public sector price increases on the inflation rate.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A change of 1 per cent. in the nationalised industries component of the retail prices index will at present lead to a change of approximately 0·054 per cent. in the RPI. The Autumn Statement (table 2·7) forecast an increase of 6¼ per cent. in the nationalised industries component of the RPI in the year to the fourth quarter of 1989.

New Businesses

25. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest official figures on the number of business start-ups over the latest year for which figures are available.

45. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of business start-ups over the latest year for which figures are available.

63. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest official figures on the number of business start-ups over the latest year for which figures are available.

76. Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest official figures on the number of business start-ups over the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: In 1987, the latest year for which figures have been published by the Department of Employment, the net increase in the number of businesses registered for VAT was 45,000, comprising 205,000 registrations and 160,000 deregistrations. Department of Employment figures for 1988 will be available in the summer.

Economic Growth

26. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of economic growth in the most recent one-year period for which figures are available.

57. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of economic growth in the most recent one-year period for which figures are available.

82. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current rate of economic growth.

Mr. Major: The output measure of gross domestic product grew by 4½ per cent. in real terms in 1988. This has been the fourth consecutive year of growth in excess of 3 per cent., a performance unmatched since the war.

Group of Seven

27. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his last meeting with his counterparts in the Group of Seven.

36. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his last meeting with his counterparts in the Group of Seven.

65. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his last meeting with his counterparts in the Group of Seven.

103. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his last meeting with his counterparts in the Group of Seven.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) on 15 February 1989 at column 204.

Retail Sales and Credit

28. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement regarding the December and January figures for retail sales and consumer credit.

Mr. Lilley: Between December and January the volume of retail sales fell 1½ per cent. in real terms.

The amount of consumer credit outstanding to finance houses and other specialist credit grantors, building societies, retailers and on bank credit cards increased by about £0·3 billion in December. The amount outstanding on all consumer credit agreements (published quarterly) increased by £1·3 billion in the fourth quarter of 1988, the lowest rise since the fourth quarter of 1987. Figures for January are not published yet.

These figures provide further evidence that growth of consumer spending and borrowing has slowed significantly since last summer, and that tighter monetary policy is proving effective.

Manufactured Goods

29. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the value of exports of manufactured goods for the United Kingdom for each of the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: United Kingdom exports of manufactured goods rose in value from £60,656 million in 1987 to £65,454 million in 1988. This is another indicator reflecting the strong performance of our manufacturing sector.

Investment and Consumption

30. Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of (a) total investment and (b) total consumption in 1988.

41. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of (a) total investment and (b) total consumption in 1988.

60. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of (a) total investment and (b) total consumption in 1988.

75. Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of (a) total investment and (b) total consumption in 1988.

Mr. Major: Figures for total investment and total consumption for the whole of 1988 are not yet available. In the first three quarters of 1988 total investment and total consumtion were 9·1 per cent. and 5 per cent. higher respectively than in the same period a year earlier.

Balance of Payments

31. Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the balance of payments in 1989 and 1990.

104. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the balance of payments deficit in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Major: The Autumn Statement provided forecasts of the current account for calendar years 1988 and 1989 only. A new forecast will be published on Budget day.

Tax Cuts

32. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the different impact of his tax cuts in the last Budget on the median earner in (a) the south-east and (b) other regions.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the differential impact of his tax cuts in the last Budget on the median earner in (a) the south-east and (b) other regions.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) earlier today.

Employment

33. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of total employment since 1983.

67. Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of total employment since 1983.

99. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of total employment since 1983.

100. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of total employment since 1983.

Mr. Major: The work force in employment has increased by over 2¼ million since March 1983 to over 25¼ million, its highest ever level.

Companies (Rate of Return)

34. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give an estimate of the net real rate of return on non-North sea industrial and commercial companies in 1987.

49. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give an estimate of the net real rate of return on non-North sea industrial and commercial companies in 1987.

89. Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give an estimate of the net real rate of return of non-North sea industrial and commercial companies in 1987.

Mr. Major: The net rate of return for non-North sea industrial and commercial companies rose for the sixth successive year to reach 10·2 per cent. in 1987. For 1988 it was forecast to be about 12 per cent. in the Autumn Statement, its highest level for 24 years.

Overseas Assets

37. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the stock of United Kingdom net overseas assets at the end of 1987; and what earnings were generated by these assets in 1987.

70. Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the stock of United Kingdom net overseas assets at the end of 1987; and what earnings were generated by these assets in 1987.

72. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the stock of United Kingdom net overseas assets at the end of 1987; and what earnings were generated by those assets in 1987.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the stock of United Kingdom net overseas assets at the end of 1987; and what earnings were generated by these assets in 1987.

Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the stock of United Kingdom net overseas assets at the end of 1987; and what earnings were generated by these assets in 1987.

Mr. Major: The stock of net overseas assets is estimated to have been £89·5 billion at the end of 1987. The net earnings on the United Kingdom's net assets in 1987 are estimated to have been £5,463 million.

Incomes

38. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of real personal disposable income over the latest 12-month period for which figures are available.

90. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of real personal disposable income over the latest 12-month period for which figures are available.

98. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of real personal disposable income over the latest 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of real disposable personal income over the latest 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack).

Pensioners (Medical Insurance)

39. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioners do not receive tax relief for private medical insurance.

85. Mr. Graham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioners do not receive tax relief for private medical insurance.

Mr. Norman Lamont: At present no pensioners receive tax relief for private medical insurance. From April 1990, anyone paying eligible premiums for a person over 60—including themselves—will benefit from basic rate tax relief given at source, and higher rate relief if appropriate.

83. Mr. Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the total cost to the Exchequer in a full year of tax relief for private medical insurance for pensioners.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 21 February at columns 542-43.

Exchange Rate

40. Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent outcome of the Government's policy of achieving a firm exchange rate.

74. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent outcome of the Government's policy of achieving a firm exchange rate.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to the Members for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) and for Torfaen (Mr. Murphy) on 26 January at column 677.

Interest Rates

42. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assumptions on future rises in interest rates he is making in drawing up his Budget proposals.

Mr. Lilley: The Government never publish assumptions about future levels of interest rates.

46. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect current interest rates are having on (a) business investment and (b) mortgage payers.

Mr. Lilley: Surveys from the CBI and from the Department of Trade and Industry show that strong investment growth is expected to continue. Higher mortgage interest rates mean that mortgage payers have, for a period, to curb expenditure on other things. This is one of the ways in which they reduce inflationary pressures. Both businesses and mortgage payers have far more to fear from a resurgence of inflation than from a period of higher interest rates.

47. Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the level of interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates are 13 per cent.

Productivity

43. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in tabular form the growth of productivity each year for the whole economy since 1980 in the United Kingdom and in each of the other major industrialised countries.

50. Sir David Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in tabular form the growth of productivity each year for the whole economy since 1980 in the United Kingdom and in each of the other major industrialised countries.

81. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of productivity each year for the whole economy since 1980 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each of the other major industrialised countries.

106. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in tabular form the growth of productivity each year for the whole economy since 1980 in the United Kingdom and in each of the other major industrialised countries.

Mr. Major: The information requested is as follows:

Child Care (Taxation)

44. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements he has made with regard to the tax liability of employees in his Department for the proposed child care provision.

Mr. Brooke: My Department is participating in one of two multi-departmental holiday play schemes being run in London during school holidays by the Westminster Play Association. The scheme will be treated in the same way as any other scheme would, where tax liability arises only on the net cost to the employer. Taking account of parental contributions, the scheme is broadly self-financing.

Tax and Prices Index

51. Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the increase in the tax and prices index in the 12 months to December 1988.

Mr. Lilley: In the 12 months to December 1988 the tax and prices index rose by 4·8 per cent.

Business Expansion and Share Option Schemes

52. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost in revenue of the business expansion and share option schemes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to table 21.1.25 of Cm. 621, "The Government's Expenditure Plans" chapter 21—supplementary analyses and index.

Privatisation

53. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the state-owned commercial sector in 1979 has now been transferred to the private sector.

68. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the state-owned commercial sector in 1979 has now been transferred to the private sector.

87. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the state owned commercial sector in 1979 has now been transferred to the private sector.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 20 February 1989, at column 478.

Personal Equity Plans

54. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the number of PEPs taken out in 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Over 100,000 PEPs were taken out in 1988.

Manufacturing Industry

55. Mr. Burt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the investment intention of British manufacturing industry.

108. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the investment intentions of British manufacturing industry.

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the investment intentions of British manufacturing industry.

Mr. Major: The latest survey of investment intentions carried out by the Department of Trade and Industry and published in December showed that manufacturing investment was expected to increase by 11 per cent. in real terms in 1989.

Mortgage Interest Rates

56. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact on first-time house buyers of the increase in mortgage interest rates since September 1988.

Mr. Lilley: Increases in mortgage rates mean that all mortgage payers, including first-time house buyers, will for a period need to cut back on other expenditure. But the resurgence of inflation which would have followed if the Government had failed to take action would have been far more damaging.

European Monetary System

59. Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on his policy towards membership of the European monetary system.

Mr. Lawson: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary gave on 17 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor), at column 402.

World Bank and IMF

69. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when next he will meet the directors of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend expects to see the managing director of the IMF and the president of the World Bank at the interim and development committee meetings in Washington in April, when a wide range of matters will be discussed.

Government Expenditure

71. Mr. Janman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the path of general Government expenditure over the period 1982-83 to the latest available date.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the path of general Government expenditure over the period 1982-83 to the latest available date.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot).

Labour Statistics

73. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total fall in long-term unemployment in the year to October 1988.

78. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total fall in long-term unemployment in the year to October 1988.

101. Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total fall in long-term unemployment in the year to October 1988.

105. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total fall in long-term unemployment in the year to October 1988.

Mr. Major: In the year to October 1988, long-term unemployment fell by 280,000.

CBI

77. Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the director general of the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters were discussed.

92. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the director general of the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters were discussed.

96. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the director general of the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters were discussed.

97. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the director general of the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend meets the director general of the CBI from time to time and a wide range of subjects are discussed.

Inflation and Unemployment

79. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total number of months in which inflation and unemployment fell simultaneously in the 117 months between May 1979 and January 1989.

Mr. Major: The annual rate of change in the retail prices index has fallen in about half of the months between May 1979 and January 1989 and has averaged less than 5 per cent. over the last five years, compared with an average of about 15 per cent. between 1974 and 1979. Unemployment has fallen for the last 30 months in succession to under 2 million. Inflation and unemployment have fallen simultaneously in five months.

Debt Repayment

86. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much debt repayment has been made in each of the past two years.

Mr. Major: The public sector debt repayment (PSDR) in 1987-88 was £3·5 billion. In 1988-89, the PSDR now looks likely to be somewhat higher than the £10 billion forecast in the Autumn Statement. This will be the first time that we have seen two successive years of public sector debt repayment since the beginning of the 1950s.

Banking Flows

91. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the amount of banking flows into the United Kingdom in 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Major: Banking flows into the United Kingdom are estimated to have been £54·7 billion in 1987 and £35·3 billion in the first three quarters of 1988.

Mortgage Interest (Tax Relief)

93. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals are currently receiving mortgage interest tax relief; what were the comparable figures five, 10, 15 and 30 years ago; what is the current cost to the Exchequer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates of the number of tax units—single persons and married couples—benefiting from mortgage interest tax relief are given in the table. Estimates for years prior to 1983-84 are derived from the survey of personal incomes and exclude option mortgagors and other non-taxpayers with mortgages. As there was no survey for 1958-59, a figure for 1959-60 has been given. Following the introduction of MIRAS in April 1983, option mortgages were subsumed within the MIRAS scheme and the estimates for 1983-84 onwards cover all tax units, including non-taxpayers, with mortgages.

Number of tax units benefiting from mortgage interest tax relief

	Thousands
1959-60	[1]1,000
1973-74	[1]4,400
1978-79	5,600
1983-84	7,500
1988-89	[2]9,100

[1] Building Society mortgage interest only.
[2] Provisional.

In 1988-89, the total cost of mortgage interest relief is estimated to be about £5,500 million.

Exports and Imports

94. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures on the growth in visible exports and imports for 1988 and provide his latest forecast for 1989.

Mr. Major: Between 1987 and 1988 the volume of visible exports grew by ½ per cent. and the volume of visible imports grew by 13 per cent. The latest forecast for 1989 was published in the Autumn Statement.

VAT

95. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current annual income from value added tax; and what was the comparable figure for the financial year 1978-79.

Mr. Lilley: The information at current prices, is as follows:

	£ million
1978-79	4,837·5
1987-88	24,129·0

Hospital Radio

107. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on zero rating value added tax on hospital radio broadcasting equipment.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) on 20 February at column 479.

Aviation Gasoline

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the rates of duty on aviation gasoline used by piston engined light aircraft in each of the EEC member states.

Mr. Lilley: The United Kingdom is the only member state to levy a lower rate of duty on aviation gasoline than on motor gasoline. The latest available figures for the rates of duty on aviation gasoline in the EEC are:—

State	Duty (excluding VAT) Pence per gallon	Total tax (including VAT) As a percentage of RSP
Belgium	79	66
Denmark	132	74
France	125	77

State	Duty (excluding VAT) Pence per gallon	Total tax (including VAT) As a percentage of RSP
Germany	79	65
Greece	85	70
Ireland	113	71
Italy	161	78
Luxembourg	66	58
Netherlands	106	70
Portugal	124	69
Spain	90	60
United Kingdom	46	33

Banking Services Law

Mr. Allan Stewart (Eastwood): To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the report of the review committee on banking services law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The report of the review committee on banking services law under the chairmanship of Professor Robert Jack is being published as a command paper today. I am very grateful to Professor Jack and his colleagues for taking on the challenging task of examining the law and practice relating to banking services. Their report is the result of two years of consultation and study covering the evolution of banking law over more than 100 years.

The terms of reference of the review committee were to examine the statute and common law relating to the provision of banking services within the United Kingdom to personal and business customers, including payment and remittance services; but excluding taxation, company law and parts of the law whose relevance is to trading or to the provision of services in general, rather than particularly to banking. The objectives of the review were to examine the law and its practical implications from the points of view of banker, customer and the general public interest in the availability, reliability, security and efficient and effective operation of payment, remittance and other banking services. The committe was to have regard to:

(a) current and prospective developments in banking and payment systems, including developments in electronic data processing and electronic funds transfer technology;

(b) areas of particular difficulty in, or confusion about, existing law and practice and the rights and obligations of banks and their customers respectively;

(c) differences in the law and practice of different parts of the United Kingdom and, where relevant, other studies and reviews of United Kingdom law;

(d) developments in the law of the European Community and in other relevant international laws and conventions;

(e) developments and trends in international payment systems and reviews by international bodies.

The committee has made a number of recommendations to banks and building societies providing banking services. These are mostly aimed at improving standards of banking practice. There are also numerous recommendations for changes in legislation addressed to the Government. Many of these are very technical in nature.

The Government welcome the committee's report. In considering their response to the recommendations, they will wish to take account of the views of those who will be affected by the proposals, and will consider carefully the implications for bankers, their customers and the general public interest. The Government will set out their detailed response in due course.

Blind People (Aids)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much value added tax is collected by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise off aids and adaptations for blind people.

Mr. Lilley: There are already extensive reliefs for aids and adaptations for blind people. Estimates for those that bear tax are unavailable.

Fuel Duty

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to how much was raised, in each of the last three financial years, by the duty payable on fuel used during research and testing of engines by motor manufacturers; and how much these amounts represent of the industry's total tax bill and turnover.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that official figures are unavailable.

Civil Service (Dispersal)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the number and location of Civil Service posts above executive officer level which have been dispersed from London and the south-east of England to other areas of the United Kingdom since 1979 and the percentage this represents of the total number of posts above executive officer level.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. The overall numbers for the grades above executive officer level in the home Civil Service at 1 January 1979 and 1 April 1988 were as follows:

	1979	Per cent. of total	1988	Per cent. of total
London and South East	54,304	52·5	53,585	46·8
Other regions	49,038	47·5	60,896	53·2
Total	103,342		114,481

The home Civil Service does not include Foreign and Commonwealth Office staff for whom equivalent information is not available.

HEALTH

Pharmacists Review Panel

109. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on when the pharmacists review panel last met; and what was discussed.

Mr. Freeman: The most recent matter considered by the pharmacists review panel was the way in which the profit payable to retail pharmacists for their NHS work should be determined, on which the panel reported in February 1988.

Food Poisoning

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the location of preparation of the eggs involved in the 49 cases of salmonella food poisoning this year; if he will state whether the eggs involved were cooked, eaten raw, or mixed with other foods; what evidence led the Chief Medical Officer to decide that the food poisoning in the 49 cases was due to eggs rather than inadequate kitchen hygiene; what was the source of the eggs in the 49 cases; what was the age of the eggs before they were eaten; and how long the eggs had been prepared before they were eaten.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Detailed information on the 46 outbreaks of salmonellosis associated with the consumption of eggs reported to the public health laboratory service to the end of October 1988 is given in the public health laboratory service's memorandum submitted to the Agriculture Select Committee. I will arrange to send a copy to my hon. Friend. Information suggests that while inadequate kitchen hygiene may have been a contributory factor in some outbreaks we have no reason to believe that hygiene practices have shown any significant deterioration in 1988. Inadequate hygiene cannot account for the very marked increase in the total outbreaks of egg-associated salmonellosis reported in 1988.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase expenditure on measures that would help to limit food poisoning.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The hon. Member will be aware of many measures to help reduce food poisoning which have recently been announced by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and my Department. We will continue to take any necessary action.

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of salmonellosis and of campylobacter have been recorded in each of the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Laboratory reports of cases of salmonellosis and campylobacter infection submitted to the Public Health Laboratory Service for the years 1983 to 1987 are given in the tables. The number of cases for 1988 are not yet available.

Year	Number
Cases of salmonellosis
1983	13,250
1984	13,093
1985	11,172
1986	14,177
1987	16,991
Cases of campylobacter infection
1983	17,001
1984	20,861
1985	23,463
1986	24,757
1987	27,229

In most instances there is no evidence which links individual reported cases of campylobacter infection with a food vehicle.

Basingstoke and North Hampshire Health Authority

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the real term increase or decrease in expenditure by the Basingstoke and North Hampshire health authority in each year since the formation of that health authority.

Mr. Mellor: Following is information derived from the annual accounts of the Basingstoke and North Hampshire health authority since its establishment on 1 April 1982.

	Per annual accounts	At 1987-88 prices	Percentage increase/(decrease) at 1987-88 prices
	£000	£000	On preceding year	On 1982-83
		Total revenue expenditure
1982-83	31,464	39,630	—	—
1983-84	33,587	40,464	2·1	2·1
1984-85	35,435	40,634	0·4	2·5
1985-86	37,284	40,564	(0·2)	2·4
1986-87	39,945	42,054	3·7	6·1
1987-88	43,301	43,301	3·0	9·3
		Total capital expenditure
1982-83	2,427	3,024	—	—
1983-84	2,356	2,805	(7·2)	(7·2)
1984-85	3,081	3,511	25·2	16·1
1985-86	3,314	3,564	1·5	17·9
1986-87	3,682	3,838	7·7	26·9
1987-88	2,476	2,476	(35·5)	(18·1)

Notes:

1. The figures for the earlier years have been expressed at 1987-88 prices by the use of the gross domestic product deflator.
2. The figures for capital expenditure include sums in respect of capital schemes within the district recorded in the annual accounts of the Wessex regional health authority (RHA) and they reflect changes in the pattern of investment at sub-regional levels over the period.
3. All expenditure incurred by the Wessex RHA for the region as a whole is excluded.

Royal Hallamshire Hospital

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds currently exist within the Royal Hallamshire hospital, Sheffield; how many have been withdrawn from service over the past five years as a result of a lack of funds; and what will be the estimated effect on the utilisation of beds were the hospital to be designated a National Health Service hospital trust.

Mr. Freeman: The total number of beds that currently exist within the Royal Hallamshire hospital, Sheffield is 728.

As regards the number of beds in use in the hospital, it is for local health authorities to determine the best use of resources to meet local needs.

It is too early to assess the effect of the Government's plans for National Health Service hospital trusts.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the incidence of infection of patients by surgeons infected with hepatitis B.

Mr. Mellor: The average annual risk of a patient developing acute hepatitis B as a result of infection by staff during surgical procedures has been estimated as one in a million operations (Polakoff, British Medical Journal 1986 volume 293 pages 33-36).

Waiting Lists

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each district health authority the waiting time for non-urgent ear, nose and throat consultations in November 1987 and November 1988.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect information centrally about out-patient waiting times.

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received a proposal for research into the sexual abuse of children from the Northhope Hall trust; and will he make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Department has received from the Northorpe Hall trust details of a proposal to establish a therapeutic centre for sexually abused children and their families which would also include an element of monitoring and research in relation to those treated. The proposal will be considered along with others of a similar nature which have been received.

Consultants (Trent RHA)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultants are employed by the Trent regional health authority; if he will give a breakdown by hospital and specialty; if he will show how many of the consultants by specialty are employed on a full-time or part-time basis; and if he will give comparable figures for five years and 10 years ago.

Mr. Mellor: The informatin for the Trent region is set out in the table. We do not have information centrally for individual hospitals.

Locum Doctors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley of 12 December 1988, Official Report, column 449, on locum doctors, if he is now able to give an answer.

Mr. Mellor: I replied to the hon. Member today.

AIDS

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the numbers of HIV/AIDS centres in Britain which he has visited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I have visited the Kobler centre, at St. Stephen's hospital, and London Lighthouse—the two facilities in London purpose-built for people with HIV disease. I have visited some and intend to visit other hospitals and voluntary organisations which are developing treatment and support facilities; not all of these will be dedicated to people with HIV.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people died as a result of AIDS, from 1980 to 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: There have been 1,059 known deaths from AIDS from 1980 up to the end of December 1988. Data on the numbers of deaths from AIDS and numbers of AIDS cases are published early each month by our Department.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's support for AIDS education campaigns organised by groups representing homosexual men and women.

Mr. Mellor: We provide financial support to the National AIDS Trust which gives funding to voluntary organisations, and to the Terrence Higgins Trust whose work includes the provision of information and advice to homosexuals. In addition the Health Education Authority has been provided with funds to develop campaigns aimed at the general public and at particular sections of the population, including homosexual and bisexual men. Planning guidelines issued to health authorities in July 1988 asked them to encourage preventive initiatives for people in selected target groups, including homosexuals, to encourage them to avoid behaviour that might place them at risk of HIV infection.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision within the National Health Service of aerosolised pentamidine and associated nebolisers for people with AIDS or who are HIV positive.

Mr. Mellor: Pentamidine is available under the NHS in aerosolised form for the treatment of pneumocystis carinii pneumonia—the opportunistic infection to which people with HIV disease are particularly susceptible. Nebulisers are available for the administration of the drug in hospital settings, but are not available under the NHS for use by patients at home.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of (a) current figures and (b) future figures for (i) people who are HIV anti-body positive and (ii) people who have developed AIDS in the United Kingdom for each year from 1989 to 1992; and on what basis such estimates have been made.

Mr. Mellor: There have been 2,049 reported AIDS cases up to the end of January 1989. The report of the working group on short-term prediction of HIV infection and AIDS in England and Wales, chaired by Sir David Cox (the Cox report), estimated that there were between 20,000 and 50,000 persons infected with HIV by the end of 1987.

The Cox report also contained estimates of future diagnoses of new AIDS cases up to 1992. The figures in the table are those recommended as a basis for planning, and accepted by the Government as such, for the years 1989 to 1992.

AIDS cases diagnosed (estimates)

	Number
1989	1,800
1990	2,350
1991	2,950
1992	3,600

The group did not make forecasts of the level of HIV infection because no satisfactory historical data exists upon which to base any, and because such forecasts would depend on individuals' behaviour patterns which cannot be predicted.

The basis on which the estimates were made, and the possible impact of underreporting, are set out in appendices to the Cox report, a copy of which is in the Library.

Sight Tests

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on whether the use of an auto-refractor and an auto-optitester provides a suitable and accurate sight test for people with less than perfect vision.

Mr. Mellor: Auto-refractors and auto-optitesters provide reasonably accurate information on the lenses patients may require to correct their sight. These instruments cannot, however, carry out examinations for injury or disease which form an important part of every sight test.

Manpower Supply Strategies

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if all regional health authorities have been asked to prepare manpower supply strategies and supply measures and training strategies.

Mr. Mellor: Regional health authorities have been asked through the issue of HC(88)43 "Health Services Development—Resource Assumptions and Planning Guidelines" issued July 1988, to prepare for all staff groups manpower supply strategies assessing demand and supply measures necessary to meet assessed demand together with proposed steps to deal with any shortfalls. Also where necessary that supply strategies be linked to training strategies.

A copy of HC(88)43 has been placed in the Library (refer to paragraphs 32-38).

Residential Homes

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he has any plans to review the scope of the Registered Homes Act 1984, so as to encompass homes caring for three occupants or fewer;

(2) when his Department last evaluated and reassessed the effectiveness of criteria for minimum statutory requirements for residential and nursing homes for the elderly.

Mr. Mellor: The Department's social services inspectorate reviewed the implementation of the Registered Homes Act 1984 in relation to residential care homes for elderly people and other dependent groups of people. The report on this review, "Certain Standards", was published last year. The Wagner report, "Residential Care: A Positive Choice", which was also published last year, contained recommendations on the regulation of these homes including those with fewer than four residents. Both reports are in the Library.

We are considering carefully the findings of these reports before deciding whether any change is desirable in the current arrangements. In January 1985 the National Association of Health Authorities issued guidance, endorsed by the Department, in its handbook on registration and inspection of nursing homes. A supplement giving advice on quality of life in nursing homes was issued in September 1988.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how district health authority and local authority inspectors are selected and trained for residential and nursing homes for the elderly; and who draws up the criteria by which these inspectors measure a home's standards.

Mr. Mellor: The statutory duty to register and inspect residential care homes and nursing homes is placed by the Registered Homes Act 1984 upon local social service authorities and district health authorities respectively. It is for each authority to recruit and train the necessary staff and to deaw up the criteria for the registration of homes in their area within the legislative requirements, the recommendations in the code of practice for residential care "Home Life", and the "Handbook for Health Authorities: Registration and Inspection of Nursing Homes", and the general guidance that has been issued by the Secretaries of State for Health and for Wales.

The Departments have commissioned distance-learning training material for registration and inspection staff of authorities from the centre for environmental and social studies in aging at the Polytechnic of North London. This material should be available later this year.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to ensure tighter public oversight and controls over public and private residential homes.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 17 February 1989]: The Registered Homes Act 1984 and associated regulations place the responsibility on local authorities as registering authorities to register private and voluntary residential care homes and inspect them at least twice a year. In addition general guidance on the running of these homes is available in "Home Life", a code of practice for residential care, and in circulars issued by the Department. Authorities are also responsible for ensuring adequate standards in their own homes. The Department's social services inspectorate monitors and advises authorities on the discharge of these duties.

Lady Wagner's report "Residential Care—A Positive Choice" included recommendations on the regulation of homes in all sectors. We are giving them careful consideration before deciding whether any change is desirable in the current arrangements.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which private residential and nursing homes have had their registrations cancelled since the Registered Homes Act came into force; who were the proprietors concerned; and what were the reasons for the cancellation.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 22 February 1989]: This information is held by the Department for the purpose of the Registered Homes Act 1984 and is received from and passed to registration authorities in confidence for that purpose only. It would not be right to make the information more widely available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the full cost ot public funds of action taken by local authorities or health authorities to protect the welfare of residents following the de-regulation of private residential or nursing homes since the Registered Homes Act came into force.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 22 February 1989]: We do not hold this information centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking following the publication of the National Consumer Council report proposing an independent national inspectorate for residential homes, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 22 February 1989]: The report of the committee chaired by Lady Wagner, "Residential Care—A Positive Choice", included recommendations on the regulation of homes. We are giving careful consideration to the recommendations in the report and to responses to it such as the National Consumer Council's report before deciding whether any change is desirable in the current arrangements.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action he is taking following the recent publication of the joint report from the social services inspectorate and the health advisory service in respect of the concern expressed about the number of social service staff employed by Northamptonshire county council who also own or manage private residential homes;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that local authority social services staff are not permitted also to own, manage, or have interests in private residential or nursing homes.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 22 February 1989]: The duty to register a person running a residential care home or nursing home is placed by the Registered Homes Act 1984 upon local social service authorities and district health authorities respectively. It is for them to decide, subject to appeal, whether a person is not fit to run a home. Similarly it is for authorities as employers to determine the terms and conditions of service of their staff. I look to authorities to ensure that potentially undesirable conflicts of interest do not arise.

In the case of the report by the National Health Services health advisory service and the Department's social services inspectorate on "Services for Elderly People provided by Kettering Health Authority and the Social Services Department of Northamptonshire County Council," the report states that the health authority and the social services department have asked staff to declare any interest they may have in private homes.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if registered homes tribunals have the right to impose conditions of registration.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 22 February 1989]: Yes.

Elderly People

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department is monitoring the growth of the private sector in relation to National Health Service facilities in the field of elderly care.

Mr. Mellor: It is for the individual health authorities to decide what level of service to provide for the elderly people in the populations they serve. The Government give guidance on the range of services which should be available to elderly people; but health authorities may take into account the level of private sector health care in determining the level of services that they will provide themselves.

The Government welcome the growth in the private health care sector, because it adds to the total resources available, offers greater choice to the patient and provides flexibility to health authorities in service delivery.

Touche Ross Inquiry

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conclusions were reached by the ToucheRoss inquiry into the supply of generic pharmaceuticals; if he will publish those parts of the evidence which are not commercially confidential, along with the consultants' recommendations; if he will place a copy of the report in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are considering the report prepared by Touche Ross. When announcing the study on 11 March 1988 the then Secretary of State for Social Services, made it clear that the contents of the report would contain commercially sensitive information and would remain confidential. To publish the report would breach this commitment to those who contributed to the study.

Organisations (Recognition)

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the organisations recognised by his Department under circular HM(54)32;

(2) what applications for recognition under circular HM(54)32 he has received from organisations seeking to offer indemnity to medical and dental practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The organisations listed in circular HM(54)32 (Legal Proceedings) are the Medical Defence Union, the Medical Protection Society, and the Medical and Dental Defence Union of Scotland. Any enquiries from other organisations seeking to offer indemnity to medical and dental practitioners would be treated in confidence. I am considering what arrangements should be made in future to provide indemnity cover for doctors and dentists employed in the Health Service.

Dental and Eye Health

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much he expects to receive from charges for (a) dental check-ups and (b) eye tests in 1989-90; and by how much he estimates expenditure on dental and eye health will change as a result of the introduction of such tests.

Mr. Mellor: The estimated income from dental examination charges in England in 1989-90 is £35 million. It is not anticipated that the introduction of dental examination charges will have any direct effect on the forecast level of gross NHS expenditure on the general dental services.

There are no charges for sight tests. The effect of the Health and Medicines Act, 1988, is that from 1 April 1989 the NHS sight test will no longer be universally available; it will be restricted to certain priority groups of people, including children, the registered blind and partially sighted, people on low incomes and diabetics. Savings on family practitioner service spending from the restriction of the NHS sight test to certain priority groups are expected to be £70 million in a full year in England. The new arrangements are not expected to affect demand for eye care.

Charges

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing prescription, dental and optical charges in April 1979 and the latest date available in current and constant prices showing both the cash and real increase for each charge.

Mr. Mellor: The table sets out the latest available information in relation to prescription and average dental charges. No comparable figures for optical charges are available because the supply of NHS spectacles ceased in July 1986. Information relates to financial years.

Prescription charges	£
1979-80	0·20
1988-89 (current prices)	2·60
1988-89 (1979-80 prices)	1·39

Prescription charges	£
Average dental charge
1979-80	6·83
1987-88 (current prices)	18·43
1987-88 (1979-80 prices)	10·50

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the criteria used when exercising the right of choice between different nominations from local authorities for a family practitioner committee.

Mr. Mellor: In appointing members of family practitioner committees our overriding aim is to find suitable candidates for the job. We also seek to achieve a balanced representation among members of age, sex, geographical spread, professional and other experience. In the case of the local authority vacancies arising on 1 April 1989, neither St. Helens metropolitan borough council nor Knowsley metropolitan borough council offered, at first, a choice of candidates. I am glad to say that St. Helens MBC has this week offered a choice and I hope to make an appointment very shortly.

Cook-chill Food

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue instructions that no further hospitals should switch to cooked-chilled food, and that no further hospital plans should make provisions for utilising it, until further research has been carried out to establish its safety or risk.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. In 1980 my Department issued guidelines on cook-chill catering in the NHS and elsewhere. We remain quite satisfied that, provided these guidelines are followed, food produced by this sytem is safe.

Mental Health Act Commission

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the 92 members of the Mental Health Act Commission are members of ethnic minority communities; what are their ethnic origins; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: At the moment the Mental Health Act Commission has 84 members of whom six are from ethnic minority communities, either Asian or Afro-Caribbean. It is Ministers' intention to increase ethnic minority representation on the commission and this is being actively pursued in the current round of appointments.

Child Sexual Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what co-ordination of research into child sexual abuse takes place between his Department and the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

Mr. Mellor: We have no specific arrangements for co-ordinating research into child sexual abuse with the NSPCC, but officials are in touch regularly to discuss subjects of mutual concern, including research.

Health Service Review

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he anticipates making available to hon. Members the working papers further to his Health Service review document.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Copies of the eight working papers were placed in the Vote Office on Monday 20 February, the date of publication.

Leicestershire DHA and CHC

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will seek from the Trent regional health authority, for publication in the Official Report, the names and addresses of the members of (a) the Leicestershire district health authority and (b) the Leicestershire community health council, indicating the date when each person commenced their service and when the expiry of their term is due.

Mr. Mellor: This is a local matter. The information is available on request from Trent regional health authority.

GP Maternity Units

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he will set out in tabular form, identifying the unit in each case (a) how many isolated general practitioner maternity units have been closed in each year sice 1979 and (b) how many integrated general practitioner maternity units have been closed over each period;

(2) whether he will set out in tabular form, identifying the unit in each case, the number of (a) isolated and (b) integrated general practitioner maternity units where a formal decision has been taken and published to close the unit, indicating where appropriate when the decision by Ministers is awaited following a formal objection by the community health council.

Mr. Freeman: The table lists GP maternity units which we are aware have been approved for partial or total closure following public consultation. The period covered is from 1979 to end 1987, the latest date for which details are available, although there were no cases in 1987.

Cases currently awaiting ministerial decision are lifted at the end.

"Isolated" is taken to mean not part of a district general hospital. All cases are isolated unless stated.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will set out in tabular form, identifying the unit in each case, the number of (a) isolated and (b) integrated general practitioner maternity units which are currently the subject of public consultation on closure.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list by name and date since 1979 (a) the isolated and (b) the integrated general practitioner rural maternity units where Ministers have rejected a closure proposal, following an adverse report from the community health council; and which of these units remain open.

Mr. Freeman: We are aware of two such cases.

In 1984 proposals to close GP maternity beds at Amersham general hospital (integrated unit) and Crowborough war memorial hospital (isolated unit) were rejected by Ministers. The beds at Amersham are currently closed for redecoration; those at Crowborough remain open.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has assessed the quality and adequacy of the installed communication links between local ambulance stations of the London ambulance service and local police, fire brigade and other emergency services.

Mr. Freeman: Questions relating to the detailed management of the London ambulance service are matters for the South West Thames regional health authority.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member of Newham, South, Official Report, 7 February, columns 635-7, what are the annual rental costs of the private wire circuits between the central control room of the London ambulance service and ambulance stations; and what is budgeted for the next financial year, for this purpose.

Mr. Freeman: I understand from South West Thames RHA, which is responsible for the management of the London ambulance service (LAS) that the annual rental cost of the private wire circuits between the LAS central control room and ambulance stations is £60,615 for the current financial year. When the circuits are integrated into the new computer system, the wires will be connected to equipment owned by the LAS rather than by British Telecom. This will reduce rental costs to an estimated £53,115 in 1989-90. The same number of lines will be available, but they will be of higher quality.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out in tabular form in the Official Report the principal items of income and expenditure of the London ambulance service for each of the financial years since he has been responsible for its direct funding, showing for each year the expenditure related to (a) administration, (b) communication, (c) equipment, (d) personnel, (e) premises, and (f) vehicles, etc., with an indication of the sums allocated or ascribable to emergency and non-emergency services, respectively, together with a statement of the method he uses to ensure that the resources available to the emergency services enable them to reach as near the national ORCON standards as are practicable in London traffic conditions.

Mr. Freeman: The table sets out, in the form held by the South West Thames RHA, London ambulance service (LAS) expenditure for the year 1987-88, the first year in which the allocation of funds was made direct to the managing authority. An estimate of expenditure for the current financial year is not yet available. It is not possible to separate out the personnel component of each of the items listed except at disproportionate cost. The revenue budgets available to the LAS for the years 1987-88 and 1988-89 were £43·099 million and £46·060 million respectively.

Management of the LAS, including questions of resource requirements and attainment of standards, is a matter for South West Thames RHA. Officials of the Department are in regular touch with officials of the RHA on these matters and a management review of the LAS is conducted annually.

Secure Units (Juveniles)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many juvenile offenders can be accommodated in secure units in the United Kingdom as a whole; and if there are any plans to increase the number of units.

Mr. Freeman: Secure accommodation in England is provided by local authorities and directly by the Department of Health in youth treatment centres. Such accommodation is available for children in care generally, some of whom will be juvenile offenders. Young people who have been convicted of grave crimes, and sentenced to be detained under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, may also be placed in such accommodation.

The number of places available in approved secure units in England on 31 December 1988 was 294. A number of secure units, providing a further 46 places, were temporarily closed on that date because of rebuilding/refurbishment work. In addition, there were 60 secure places in the youth treatment centres.

A number of local authorities have brought forward proposals to expand provision which are being actively considered.

Information relating to Wales and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland and for Scotland for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Artificial Limb Service

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the costs to his Department of the changes in the artificial limb service in 1986, 1987 and 1988; and what are the budgets for this service in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Mellor: The cost of supplying and maintaining artificial limbs for 1985-86 and 1986-87 was £36·068 million and £38·689 million respectively. The cost for the period April to June 1987 was £9·642 million. Expenditure on the artificial limbs in England from 1 July 1987 is a matter for the Disablement Services Authority, to which the hon. Member should address this part of the question.

Hospital Waste

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has estimated the cost to hospitals in England of ensuring that their incinerators meet the requirements of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act following the ending of Crown immunity later in the current year; and what major defects in hospital incinerators will need to be corrected.

Mr. Mellor: Regulations under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act which will bring large incinerators within the control of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will not affect most hospital incinerators. Controls on smaller incinerators, which will be introduced as soon as possible and from which it is not intended that the National Health service should have Crown immunity, will create the need for a major programe of upgrading and replacement. The main requirements are likely to be an increase in the height of chimneys, improved combustion and monitoring and sampling of emissions. If these improvements were made immediately we estimate the cost to the National Health Service would be in the region of £50 million, but it is anticipated that there will be a transitional period allowed for the replacement of existing installations. Many incinerators will therefore be upgraded or replaced at the end of their useful lives as part of the normal cycle of planned equipment renewal. Authorities will also be expected to review their waste disposal services taking account of the scope for rationalising and reducing the number of incinerator facilities and the contribution which the private sector can make to the disposal of "clinical waste".

London Teaching Hospitals

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the funds now held which are completely at their own disposal for each of the London teaching hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Details of the funds currently available to individual hospitals are not held centrally. Section 10 of the health services costing returns provides expenditure figures for all major acute and mainly acute hospitals in teaching districts in London and elsewhere. A copy is held in the Library.

Hospitals (Opting Out)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to enable a hospital which elects to opt out of National Health Service management under the recent proposals to charge patients for special or any other services needed for effective treatment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to self-governing hospitals. As they will remain within the NHS, they will continue to provide all necessary treatment to NHS patients without charge at point of delivery.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he will insist on the provision of emergency services in his core services in opted-out hospitals;

(2) why he has excluded gynaecology, maternity and preventive medicines for women from his core services for the opted-out hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to self-governing NHS hospitals. I have not excluded gynaecology, maternity and preventative medicines from being regarded as core services to be provided by such hospitals. Examples of core services are identified in broad terms in the White Paper "Working for Patients" but I have not prescribed and I have no intention of prescribing a definitive list. The first and second of the working papers published on 20 February make it clear that it will be for each district to consider in the light of local circumstances what its core services should be. The district will then decide whether these services can best be provided by a self-governing hospital, or by other NHS hospitals and make arrangements accordingly. fuller details are given in the working papers.

Hospitals

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospitals in each district health authority.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is contained in the "Hospitals and Health Services Year Book", a copy of which is held in the Library.

Patients (No Fixed Abode)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of patients of hospitals in Greater London who state they are of no fixed abode.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected centrally.

"Promoting Better Health"

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the discussions with the British Medical Association's General medical services committee about the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" are progressing.

Mr Kenneth Clarke: A Green Paper "Primary Health Care—an agenda for discussion" was published in April 1986. Following public consultation, the primary care White Paper "Promoting Better Health" was published in November 1987. Detailed proposals for implementing the reforms to the family doctor services as set out in the White Paper, were sent in March 1988 to the negotiators of the general medical services committee (GMSC), the GPs' representative body. Since then the reforms have been the subject of full consultation for almost a year with the GMSC negotiators.

Consultations are now nearing completion and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have decided to send to all general practitioners a report setting out in full the changes to the GPs' remuneration system and terms of service that the Government wish to introduce. This report will form the basis of final discussions with GMSC negotiators early in March. Copies of this report have been lodged in the Libraries of both Houses.

A number of themes run through our proposals. In the first place we want to make it much easier for the patient to find the GP that best suits that individual's needs. More information about the services that GPs provide will therefore be made available. The bureaucracy involved in changing doctors will be removed and the patients' complaints procedure simplified. Family practitioner committees will be conducting consumer surveys to ensure that patients' views are being taken into account in the development of health care services.

Secondly, health promotion and disease prevention will become a central feature of general practice in future. GPs will be expected to provide regular check-ups for their patients—this means giving good advice on keeping well and avoiding future health problems. There will be particular emphasis on the assessment of childhood development for the under-fives and on mobility and well-being of the over-75s. New target payments are to be introduced to encourage GPs to provide improved cover for childhood immunisation and screening for cancer of the cervix. Increasingly, GPs will be running clinics for a range of health promotion activities such as anti-smoking, alcohol control, well-person, dieting, exercise and stress management.

Thirdly, important changes are to be made to the GPs' terms of service and remuneration system. The terms of service will in future set out in more specific terms what is expected of a family doctor who is in contract with the National Health Service. Aspects such as health promotion and disease prevention—not previously stated in specific terms—will be made a clear requirement of the GPs contract.

Changes to the remuneration system are designed to make general practice more responsive to patient needs and to ensure that the taxpayer gets better value for money. As proposed in "Working for Patients", capitation fees will form a much greater proportion of the GPs' income from fees and allowances. This means that capitation fees for each patient will be much higher and, as a consequence, greater recognition will be given to the importance of the individual patient to the practice and to the importance of providing all of the services that that patient needs. New incentive payments will be introduced to encourage the health promotion and disease prevention measures already mentioned. In addition, the importance of medical education will be given greater prominence in the remuneration system. Continuing education—keeping up to date with the latest techniques, therapies and disease management methods—will be encouraged through a new postgraduate education allowance payable to GPs who regularly attend approved courses. GPs who teach medical students will receive a new allowance.

Lastly, we are preparing family practitioner committees (FPCs) to play a greater management role in the provision of local services. In particular they will manage service development budgets aimed at improving surgery premises and extending practice teams. The Government believe that GPs working with other health care professionals will provide a better service to patients. FPCs will have service development plans aimed at encouraging greater use of practice nurses, counsellors, chiropodists and other health professionals.

The package of changes that we plan to introduce will provide a better range and quality of services for patients. Many GPs already run first-class practices and under the new arrangements these GPs will be better rewarded. Others may need to consider extending their services to ensure that they too benefit from the reforms that the Government are planning.

Abortions

82. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of abortions so far performed under the Abortion Act 1967; and how many of these were performed on non-United Kingdom resident women.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 24 January 1989]: The total number of notifications of legal abortions, to resident and non-resident women, carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 from 27 April 1968 to 30 June 1988 in England and Wales, is 2,899,405[1]. Of these 921,608[1] (31·8 per cent.) were performed on non-United Kingdom resident women.

[1] The total number of abortions is based on notifications received (1968 to 1980) and on occurrences (1981 to 1988). Data for 1988 are provisional.

Listeria

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the possibility of monitoring for listeria in milk and cheese.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 20 February 1989]: Microbiological control of foods such as milk and cheese is primarily achieved by adherence to good manufacturing and retail practice based on the hazard analysis and critical control point approach. The Department's advice to manufacturers, retailers, and enforcement officers is to concentrate on these aspects rather than to undertake enhanced routine final product testing.

NHS (Expenditure)

32. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the spending on the National Health Service in 1979 and in the latest available year, in real terms.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 21 February 1989]: Gross spending on the NHS in England totalled £6·5 billion in 1978-79 and in the current financial year amounts to over £19·4 billion. This represents a real terms increase of some 37 per cent. Additional expenditure planned for next year is expected to bring this increase to over 41 per cent. which includes the additional £163 million announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 16 February. This is before taking account of the extra cash that will be released in 1989-90 by the reduction in employers' superannuation contributions and from health authorities' cost improvement and income generation schemes. Taken together with the cash increase these will amount to the equivalent of a 5·5 per cent. real terms increase in the resource available to the NHS in 1989-90 alone.

Retired People

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider creating a standing committee of representatives of the pensioners' movement together with the Minister and senior civil servants dealing with the areas mainly affecting the retired in health matters.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 21 February 1989]: I have not plans to do so. We do, of course, regularly meet groups representing elderly people to discuss health matters.

Zidovudine

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will receive copies of all reports given by the independent data and safety monitoring committee to the chairmen of the MRC/INSERM co-ordinating committee of the trial on the benefits of zidovudine for healthy people who are HIV positive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 22 February 1989]: The Medical Research Council will keep the Department of Health up to date with the trial's findings as appropriate. However, I do not expect to receive copies of reports given by the independent data and safety monitoring committee to the chairman of the MRC/INSERM co-ordinating committee; the conduct of the trial is strictly a matter for the MRC and INSERM.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Pupil Records

Mr. Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire of 17 March 1988, Official Report, column 635, (1) when he now intends to make regulations on the keeping and disclosure of pupil records;

(2) when he now intends to issue a consultation document on the keeping and disclosure of records concerning students in further education establishments.

Mr. Jackson: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent South (Mr. Ashley) on 9 February, at column 607, my right hon. Friend hopes within the next few months to make the regulations on pupil records and at the same time to issue the consultative paper on further education student records.

Contact Time

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will specify the assumptions about the amount of non-class contact time for (a) primary teachers and (b) secondary teachers that are made for the purpose of the Department's desired number of teachers referred to in annex E(v) of the evidence submitted to the Select Committee on Education, Science and the Arts.

Mrs. Rumbold: The highly tentative demand projection set out in the Department's memorandum to the Education, Science and Arts Committee is based on the illustrative assumption that the overall pupil to teacher ratio will remain at its recent level of 17:1. This would be consistent with the contact ratios of about their present levels of 0·76 in secondary schools and 0·89 in primary schools.

Hendon School

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to determine the application by Hendon school to opt out.

Mrs. Rumbold: Hendon school published proposals for grant-maintained status on 12 January 1989. Following the statutory two-month period for objections, my right hon. Friend will determine the proposals as quickly as his consideration of all the relevant factors permits.

Open University

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total Government grant to the Open university in each of the last 10 years; and if he will express each annual increase and the total increase since 1979, in real terms.

Mr. Jackson: The table specifies the recurrent grant in the financial years 1979-80—1989-90.

Financial year	Recurrent grant in cash terms £ million	Recurrent indexed terms 100
1979-80	36·71	100
1980-81	47·13	108
1981-82	51·27	107
1982-83	55·21	108
1983-84	56·42	105
1984-85	59·05	105

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Oxford, East, 10 February, Official Report, column 844, if he will express the annual cash increases in recurrent and capital grants made to universities in real terms; if he will give the same figures for grants to polytechnics; and what was the total increase in recurrent and capital grants between 1979-80 and 1988-89 for (a) universities and (b) polytechnics.

Mr. Jackson: Total grants made to the universities on the advice of the University Grants Committee are set out and show a 13·3 per cent. increase over the period in question. For polytechnics, information on allocations from the advanced further education pool plus capital expenditure by local authorities is available for only the years shown. All figures are in 1987-88 real terms.

Financial years	Universities (Great Britain) (£ million)	Polytechnics (England) (£ million)
1979-80	1,433·2	n.a.
1980-81	1,542·8	n.a.
1981-82	1,445·4	n.a.
1982-83	1,615·9	517·8
1983-84	1,596·5	500·8
1984-85	1,559·3	488·2
1985-86	1,523·9	481·1
1986-87	1,526·8	514·6
1987-88	1,592·8	n.a.
1988-89	1,623·5	n.a.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Oxford, East, 10 February, Official Report, columns 843-44, if he will publish the net institutional expenditure per student table, expressing each annual increase in real terms; and what was the real increase between 1978-79 and 1986-87 in net institutional expenditure per student for (i) universities, (ii) polytechnics, (iii) OMEs (FE) and (iv) OMEs (HE).

Mr. Jackson: The data requested are listed. The real terms figures are compared between 1979-80 and 1986-87 as comparable figures are not available for 1978-79 in polytechnics and other maintained establishments (OMEs) in either further education (FE) or higher education (HE).

I regret that in my earlier reply the figures for universities were in real terms while those for polytechnics and OMEs were in cash terms.

Expenditure (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the average net institutional expenditure in Liverpool education authority per pupil in secondary schools for the year 1987-88.

Mrs. Rumbold: According to the latest returns received from Liverpool, the average net institutional expenditure per pupil in maintained secondary schools in 1987-88 was £1,730.

Science Teachers

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimates he has made of the number of science teachers (a) which would have been required to implement the recommendations in full of the science working party, and (b) which will be required to implement the proposal on science of the National Curriculum Council, for each year between 1990 and 1995.

Mrs. Rumbold: My Department's recent memorandum to the Education, Science and Arts Committee includes tentative projections of the numbers of science teachers who will be needed in schools in 1995 when statutory requirements relating to science will be implemented in full. These are broadly in line with numbers needed to implement the science working group's recommendation that all pupils should spend one sixth of their curriculum time in secondary years 1 to 5 on science.

Teacher Conversion Courses

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in cash terms the amount of his Department's money allocated to teacher conversion courses in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1989-90.

Mrs. Rumbold: I assume that the hon. Member refers to courses designed for teachers converting to teach in shortage subject areas. The local education training grants scheme has supported some £200 million per year of expenditure on in-service training since it was introduced on 1 April 1987. A proportion of these funds will have been directed by LEAs at training involving the conversion, updating and development of teachers' skills in these areas. More specifically, the Government are making available in 1988-89, under the scheme, an earmarked total of £4 million to LEAs to send teachers on one-year retraining courses in mathematics, science and craft, design and technology. The courses in question were set up in response to new teacher supply initiatives by the University Grants Committee and the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Education which were introduced in 1987-88 and which have been supported by the Government at a cost of £4·16 million.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Access to the House

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the implementation of the recommendations of the House of Commons Services Committee report approved by the House on 30 January.

Mr. Wakeham: The second report from the Services Committee of Session 1987-88, on access to the precincts of the House (HC 580), was approved by the House on Monday 30 January 1989 by a majority of 168. An amendment to permit the issue of photo-identity passes for the Palace of Westminster to United Kingdom Members of the European Parliament was also approved, by a majority of 106.

Many of the recommendations in the Committee's report relate to the procedures for controlling access and the checking of passholders and are of a mainly advisory character. I expect the appropriate authorities to give careful and early consideration to these recommendations and to take action as they think appropriate.

As recommended in the Committee's report, the restriction on the number of Members' personal staff who may hold photo-identity passes for the Palace of Westminster will come into effect at the beginning of the 1989-90 financial year. I understand that the restriction on access to the Table Office by Members' staff has been in effect since 6 February; and the restriction on access by Members' temporary secretaries to the Members' Library and the Library research division will be enforced with the House returns after the Easter adjournment. In accordance with paragraphs 57 to 59 of the Committee's report, the Serjeant at Arms will be carrying out a detailed examination of the number of passes held by officials of the political parties, Government Departments, the BBC and other agencies, and will report to the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee as soon as possible. The remaining recommendations of the Committee, and the decision of the House concerning the provision of photo-identity passes for Members of the European Parliament, are already in force.

Passes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will publish both the criteria and procedures to be followed by hon. Members who want to apply for House of Commons passes for more than three members of staff.

Mr. Wakeham: In accordance with paragraph 54 of the report from the Select Committee on House of Commons (Services) on access to the precincts of the House (HC 580, Session 1987-88), which was approved by the House on Monday 30 January 1989, the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee is empowered to recommend to the Services Committee an increase in the limit on the number of staff passes for which an individual Member may apply "where they are satisfied that exceptional circumstances apply".

The Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee recently agreed that right hon. or hon. Members who wish to retain more than three passes for members of their personal staff should, in the first instance, apply in writing to the Serjeant at Arms. The Serjeant at Arms will refer individual cases to the Chairman of the Sub-Committee, who will seek the advice of the full Sub-Committee where necessary.

No formal criteria have been laid down by the Sub-Committee, and I expect it to consider each case on its merits. As I indicated in the debate, however at column 110, I envisage that the right hon. Member for Salford, East (Mr. Orme) and his Sub-Committee will look sympathetically at the claims of Members with particular responsibilities, including Front Bench spokesmen, some senior Members, and minority party leaders.

I understand that the Serjeant at Arms will be writing next week to all Members with passes in excess of three to draw their attention to the new limit to be introduced at the beginning of the new financial year, and to the procedure to be followed.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he has any information showing the issue of House passes to overseas students by hon. Members of the respective political parties represented in the House.

Mr. Wakeham: The latest Pass Office figures show a total of 41 students from overseas attached to or employed by Members. The detailed breakdown by party is as follows:

	Numbers
Labour	22
Conservative	13
Social and Liberal Democrats	4
Social Democrats	2

Table Office

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether any exceptions are made to the provision that access to the Table Office be restricted to hon. Members after 2 pm.

Mr. Wakeham: In paragraph 33 of its report on access to the precincts of the House (Session 1987-88, HC 580) the Select Committee on House of Commons (Services) recommended that Members' research assistants should in future not be permitted to use the Table Office after 2 pm on Mondays to Thursdays. I understand that Mr. Speaker subsequently accepted the view of the Table Office that it would be impracticable to distinguish between Members' research assistants and their other staff, and accordingly ruled that the restriction should apply to all Members' personal staff.

The restriction on access to the Table Office came into effect on Monday 6 February. It does not apply to the permanent staff of the House or to civil servants who possess photo-identity passes for the Palace of Westminster, which in practice means those civil servants employed in the Whips' Offices of the Government and the Official Opposition. I understand that Mr. Speaker has agreed that an exception should be made in respect of a strictly limited number of persons nominated by each of the minority parties, for the purpose of transacting party business in the Table Office during the restricted hours, even though such persons may hold photo-identity passes as Members' secretaries or research assistants.

PRIME MINISTER

Falkland Islands

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give her current assessment of the Falkland Islands' position, in view of the continued instability of the Argentinian Administration; and if she will reiterate Her Majesty's Government's commitment to preserving the integrity of the islands and the freedom of their population.

The Prime Minister: The outlook for the Falkland Islands continues to be stable and secure and is increasingly prosperous. Our determination to defend the islanders' right to decide their own future, and live their own lives in peace, remains as firm as ever. I have no hesitation in reiterating the Government's commitment to the integrity and freedom of the Islands. We shall not negotiate on sovereignty.

Consultative Committee on Food Safety (Co-ordinator)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister when she will announce the name of the co-ordinator of the Consultative Committee on Food Safety; and what members she has appointed to date.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 21 February that Professor Sir Mark Richmond has agreed to take the chairmanship of the committee. The appointment of further members and of the secretariat is under consideration.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many statutory instruments have been issued in total by all Government Departments since May 1979;

(2) how many statutory instruments subject to affirmative resolution have been issued by all Government Departments since May 1979;

(3) how many statutory instruments subject to negative resolution have been issued by all Government Departments since May 1979;

(4) how many statutory instruments have been issued under powers contained in existing instruments by all Government Departments since May 1979.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Africa (Visit)

Mr. Mullin To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the allocation of seats to the media on her aeroplane for her forthcoming trip to Africa.

The Prime Minister: No.

TRANSPORT

Lake Lothing (Crossing)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what role he expects Waveney district council and Suffolk county council to adopt in respect of (a) the line of route for the new crossing of Lake Lothing at Lowestoft following his decision to engage more consultants and (b) planning applications arising in the envelope of potential development over the next six months.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend will decide the line of the route for a second trunk road crossing of the harbour at Lowestoft when the necessary statutory procedures have been completed. Both Waveney district council and Suffolk county council will be consulted when we have identified specific options. The district council and the county council, as the local planning authorities for the area, will continue to carry out their proper functions of deciding whether or not to grant permission for any planning applications they receive.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why he is ordering a further consultants' report to recommend a route for the new crossing of Lake Lothing at Lowestoft.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The consultants are being asked to extend their current study to the identification of specific options for the second trunk road crossing of the harbour at Lowestoft. Proposals will be presented for public consultation at the earliest opportunity. The preferred route will be selected in the light of the results of that consultation.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why, at a meeting with representatives of Waveney district council and Suffolk county council on 20 February, officials from his Department gave no hint as to the likely recommendations of the line of route for the new crossing of Lake Lothing at Lowestoft contained in the Maunsell 2 report; and if he will make a statement as to why he commissioned the report.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The second study by consulting engineers G. Maunsell and Partners was necessary to update their original report which was carried out in 1986. A preferred route for a second trunk road crossing of the harbour at Lowestoft has not yet been identified. Any indication of the likely line of that route would be premature until specific options have been put to public consultations and a preferred route selected by my right hon. Friend in the light of the results of that consultation.

Clapham Rail Accident

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the report just completed by Mr. Maurice Holmes, British Rail's director of safety, into the work of signalling and telecommunications technicians prior to the Clapham accident.

Mr. Portillo: The report of British Rail's internal inquiry has been made available to Mr. Anthony Hidden QC and to all represented parties at the formal investigation into Clapham junction accident. When the report is presented in evidence to the court, I understand that it will be made public.

Air Miss

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the report of the Department of Transport's air accidents investigation branch on the air miss between a British Airways Tristar and a Balkan Bulgarian Airlines Tupolev 154 near Lydd on 6 February 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The inspector's report was pubished earlier today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The report makes 13 safety recommendations. Six concern operational matters, five recommend equipment changes, and two deal with the investigation of air misses and losses of separation, and the collection and use of statistics. I have discussed the report with the chairman of the CAA. I understand from him that eight of the recommendations have either been implemented or are in the process of implementation as far as practicable, two have been investigated but no changes have been made to the present arrangements, and three are receiving further study.

As with every report by the air accidents investigation branch, the purpose is to determine the circumstances and causes of the incident with a view to the preservation of life and avoidance of similar occurrences in the future. I welcome the prompt action which the Civil Aviation Authority and the National Air Traffic Services have taken on most of the report's recommendations. I look to the chairman of the authority to follow up the remaining recommendations vigorously and to implement further changes as necessary.

Western Environmental Improvement Route

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the cost of WEIR is justified on economic grounds.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The data available so far indicates that the quantifiable benefits would cover its cost. In addition, there would be significant environmental benefits in the Earls Court corridor.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles use the Earls Court one-way system; how many use other parallel routes in the area; and what estimates he has prepared of what these figures would be if the western environmental improvement route were complete.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Some 45,000 vehicles use the Earls Court one-way system in an average 18-hour day, and 60,000 use parallel routes. If WEIR is completed, it is estimated that these figures would be reduced to 20,000 and 45,000 respectively.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether WEIR is designed to cater for additional traffic in the Earls Court corridor and its surroundings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The forecasts shown at the recent exhibition held in conjunction with the public consultation exercise show how traffic flows would change if WEIR were completed now. They assume there would be no overall increase in traffic. There are increases on some roads and decreases in others, some of which are outside the study area. The increases occur in the main on roads better able to carry extra traffic including WEIR itself.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many personal injury accidents occurred in the Earls Court corridor on average, over the last three years; and what estimates he has prepared of how many would be expected to occur if WEIR were completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is estimated that construction of WEIR should reduce the annual average number of accidents in the corridor from 350 to 300.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many properties would be expected to experience a noise increase of more than five decibels if WEIR were built; and how many would experience an equivalent reduction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures: increase about 1,000; decrease about 3,000.

Motorways (Private Vehicular Access)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a list of all sites of private vehicular access to each motorway not being motorway junctions; and if he will provide a map to make such sites easily identifiable.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 17 January 1989, c. 121]: I have today placed in the Library the details and map requested.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Companies

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to referring the activities and pricing policies and charges of existing private sector water companies to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Moynihan: My hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning is currently discussing the proposed increases in water charges with the companies. Further action, including the option of a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, will be considered in the light of the outcome of these discussions.

Planning

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has done on the relative merits and de-merits of plan-making, development control and implementation of plans in the United Kingdom and other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Chope: A comparative study of the development control systems in Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and England and Wales has been commissioned from the university of Reading, and Her Majesty's Stationery Office will publish the report shortly. Contributions are made to comparative work on this subject undertaken by intergovernmental organisations, notably the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe under whose auspices a seminar will be held in London, later this year, on the effectiveness of land use planning.

Rating Reference

Mr. Simon Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money is being made available by him to Chelmsford borough council for the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 23 February 1989]: The Government are providing £110 million in 1989-90 for the current costs of preparing for the community charge. Half of this provision is being distributed through specific grants to charging authorities, and the remainder through rate support grant. Chelmsford borough council's specific grant is £157,000.

In addition, we have made available specific allocations of £25 million for 1988-89 and £135 million for 1989-90 for the capital costs of preparing for the community charge. Chelmsford borough council's share of these allocations is £498,012.

HAT (Leeds)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce a decision on the proposed housing action trust for Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 February 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 15 February to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) at column 280.

Salmonella

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many investigations of reported cases of salmonella have been carried out by environmental health officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 13 February 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

We do not hold this information centrally because this is not a central Government responsibility.

Environmental Health Officers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the need for increased food inspection work by environmental health officers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 13 February 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

It is for local authorities to decide on the level of inspection work by environmental health officers, having regard to local circumstances.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the staffing implications for environmental health officers of a change to the temperature control requirements for food regulations.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 13 February 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

Consultation on proposed changes in the temperature control regulations will take place shortly and will include the question of resource implications, if any, for local authorities.

WALES

Welsh Water Authority (Grants)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what grants were authorised to be paid by his Department to the Welsh water authority for capital works carried out under the Civil Defence (Water Supplies) Regulations 1949 in each of the financial years 1985-86 to 1987-88 inclusive and for what purposes they were paid;

(2) what grants were authorised to be paid by his Department to the Welsh water authority for capital works carried out under the Civil Defence (Sewerage) Regulations 1949 in each of the financial years 1985-86 to 1987-88 inclusive; and for what purposes they were paid.

Mr. Grist: Payments made by the Department to the Welsh water authority between 1985-86 and 1987-88 inclusive are tabulated in the following table:—

Amount of Grant paid

Financial Year	£
1985-86	74,457
1986-87	148,611
1987-88	335,022

The grant payments comprise contributions towards the costs of providing buildings, emergency plant, communications equipment and staff costs associated with civil defence work.

Local Authority Building

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on building by Welsh local authorities for building for the non-specialist sector.

Mr. Grist: General guidance to local authorities on their capital programmes is contained in Welsh Office circulars 14/87 and 39/87.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registry

Ms. Walley: To ask the Attorney-General what is the ratio of staff to applications for the Land Registry by districts.

The Attorney-General: The following table indicates the ratio of staff in post at 1 February 1989 to the average daily number of applications of all kinds, received at each district registry.

It should be noted that some offices, particularly those in the south-east, have assistance from other offices. This is not reflected in the figures given as the level of assistance varies regularly to meet changing circumstances.

Office	Ratio of staff to applications
Croydon	1:4·8
Harrow	1:4·0
Tunbridge Wells	1:4·6
Lytham	1:4·2
Nottingham	1:5·0
Gloucester	1:3·1
Stevenage	1:4·8
Durham	1:3·6
Plymouth	1:4·0
Swansea	1:3·9
Birkenhead	1:4·1
Weymouth	1:4·8
Peterborough	1:4·3
Telford	1:3·8
Coventry	1:5·7
Hull	1:2·4

Ms. Walley: To ask the Attorney-General what extra resources have been made available for the Land Registry, to meet the increased activity in the property market and the backlog of applications.

The Attorney-General: An additional 1,245 posts were approved at the beginning of the current financial year. A further 900 posts were approved in August.

1,400 additional posts have been approved in the public expenditure survey White Paper for the next financial year.

Letter ("The Independent")

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall North): To ask the Attorney-General if the Director of Public Prosecution's attention has been drawn to the letter published in The Independent on 17 February from one Inayullah Zaighan.

The Attorney-General: Yes.

ENERGY

Reactor Fuel Elements

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the average annual failure rate for fuel elements used in (a) Magnox reactors, and (b) advanced gas-cooled reactors for each year since these fuels have been used; and what are the comparable fuel failure rates in pressurised water reactor fuel used in France and the United States of America, respectively.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In recent years, the average annual failure rates of fuel elements used in Magnox reactors and fuel pins used in advanced gas cooled reactors (AGRs), for the United Kingdom as a whole, were as follows:

Magnox: 0·002—0·004 per cent.
AGR: 0·0001 per cent.

Comparable statistics relating to the fuel element failure rates for PWRs in France and the United States of America are not available.

The term failure in this context means a very minor leak of fission products into the coolant. There have been no significant safety or environmental implications.

Renewable Energy Research Projects

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all renewable energy research projects sponsored by his Department that have resulted in successful exports; and if he will make a statement on prospects for future exports of renewable energy technologies.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The development of commercially viable and environmentally acceptable renewable technologies is still at an early stage. One of the main aims of our programme is to reduce the uncertainty about the economies and potential contribution of those technologies currently classed as promising but uncertain. This is done by obtaining better market data and by improving technical performance and reducing capital costs. United Kingdom industry is playing a leading role in this work and a number of companies involved in our programme have been very successful in developing overseas markets. Notable examples are James Howden and Company and the Wind Energy Group, which have successfully exported their wind turbines.

If our research and development are successful many of the technologies being examined as part of our programme should offer considerable export potential for United Kingdom industry. Expertise derived from our programme is playing an important part in the collaborative programmes established by the European Commission and the International Energy Agency.

No list of research projects has been kept in the form requested.

Wood-based Fuel

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many projects exist to produce electricity from a wood-based fuel stock in the United Kingdom; what is the total product; and what is the kilowatt hour cost.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I know of no projects to produce electricity from a wood-based fuel stock in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what statistics he has on the production of electricity in indivdual European Community countries from short rotation forestry of arable wood crops; and what is the estimated cost per kilowatt hour.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has no statistics on the production of electricity in individual European countries from short rotation forestry of arable wood crops, nor is it aware of any actual projects.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many sites of special scientific interest are owned by each electricity board in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Questions about landholdings are operational matters for the individual boards. I am therefore asking the chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Shipbuilders (Privatisation)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has anything further to report on progress with privatisation of British Shipbuilders' facilities.

Mr. Newton: British Shipbuilders successfully completed the sale of its Clark Kincaid facility on 23 December and its Appledore yard on 26 January. Discussions with the preferred bidder for Marine Design Consultants are continuing. BS has invited bids for Sunderland Forge Services by 24 February.

In the case of the Ferguson yard at Port Glasgow, for which the firm of Ailsa Perth Ltd. was named as preferred bidder on 14 November 1988, I regret that detailed negotiations have not resulted in agreement on a satisfactory basis for the sale to proceed. In these circumstances, I have accepted the advice of the BS chairman that BS should invite new bids for Ferguson to be in place by 31 March 1989. Ailsa Perth Ltd. may offer a further bid if it wishes.

Wood-processing

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what current developments there are for promoting wood-processing industries in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: The Government continue to promote enterprise and prosperity among businesses through the encouragement of open competitive markets. Within this economic framework, we believe that the wood-processing industries themselves are best placed to judge and profit from future market developments, with companies able to draw upon the range of advice available under the enterprise initiative.

Produce Liability

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the European Commission has approached the Government under article 169 of the Rome treaty regarding the implementation of the European Community directive on product liability.

Mr. Forth: There have been regular discussions with the European Commission at official level about the implementation of the EC directive on produce liability.

The Commission also issued a press release in December 1988 announcing that a decision had been taken to start proceedings against 11 member states under article 169 of the treaty of Rome but as yet there has been no formal approach from the Commission.

Consumers (Assistance)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the Government contribution to (a) the National Consumer Council, (b) the National and Scottish Associations of Citizens' Advice Bureaux and (c) the nationalised industries consumer councils for each year from 1978 to date at cash and constant prices.

Mr. Forth: The information is as follows:

£ million

Year	NCC		NACAB and SACAB		NICCs[1]
	Cash	1987-88 prices	Cash	1987-88 prices	Cash	1987-88 prices

1987-88	1·752	1·752	9·004	9·004	[2]2·850	[2]2·850

[1] The figures for Government grant in respect of the accommodation of the national industry consumer councils is not available and is not included here.

[2] Under the Gas Act 1986, the expenditure of the Gas Consumers Council has been met through the gas licence fee by grant-in-aid, so it is not a charge to the Exchequer. The expenditure of the GCC is therefore excluded from 1 August 1986, but the cash amounts were: 1.8.86 —31.3.87 £1·401 million, 1987-88 £2·620 million.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the number of (a) citizens' advice bureaux and (b) consumer advice centres in 1978 and the latest available year.

Mr. Forth: No record is held centrally of the number of consumer advice centres. The number of citizens' advice bureaux in Great Britain in each of the financial years shown was as follows:

Year	Number
1978-79	828
1979-80	818
1980-81	852
1981-82	880
1982-83	907
1983-84	939
1984-85	975
1985-86	952
1986-87	1,123
1987-88	1,210

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many people sought the assistance of citizens' advice bureaux in each year since 1978.

Mr. Forth: No record is held of the number of people who sought the assistance of citizens' advice bureaux. However, the number of inquiries made to bureaux in Great Britain in each of the financial years shown was as follows:

Year	Number millions
1978-79	3·536
1979-80	3·796
1980-81	4·284
1981-82	4·738
1982-83	5·268
1983-84	5·735
1984-85	6·100
1985-86	6·604
1986-87	7·144
1987-88	7·554

Office of Fair Trading (Complaints)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what was the number of complaints to the Office of Fair Trading concerning (a) holidays and (b) entertainment and accommodation in 1978 and the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what was the number of complaints to the Office of Fair Trading concerning the used car trade for 1978 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. I will ask him to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Radio Spectrum

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he plans to introduce legislation to privatise the nation's air waves; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make an announcement on measures to introduce market forces into the radio spectrum.

Mr. Maude: The Government are anxious to ensure that the most effective use is made of the radio spectrum. No decisions have yet been taken on which of the wide range of options will best meet that objective, within the framework of our international obligations and the aim of our policies in related areas.

Debt Collectors

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the number of applicants refused licences as debt collectors under the Consumer Credit Act in each year since 1978.

Mr. Maude: The administration of the consumer credit licensing system is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading. I will ask him to write to the hon. Member.

Pesticides

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the balance of trade in agricultural pesticides and associated chemicals with (a) the EEC and (b) the rest of the world.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 23 February 1989]: The balance of trade in agricultural pesticides and associated chemicals (defined by Standard International Trade Classification Revision 3, group 591 less sub-group 591.4) for the 12 months to December 1988 shows surpluses of £101·8 million with the EEC and of £153·5 million with the rest of the world.

THE ARTS

Elton John Exhibition

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on whether curatorial staff at the Victoria and Albert museum were involved in (a) the selection of objects, (b) the writing of catalogues and (c) the labelling of exhibits for the Elton John exhibition last year at the museum.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: This is a matter for the museum's director and trustees. I will ask the director to write to the hon. Member.

Victoria and Albert Museum

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on how many curatorial staff days were involved in putting on the (a) Elton John and (b) Sock Shop exhibition at the Victoria and Albert museum.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: This is a matter for the museum's director and trustees. I will ask the director to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the costs of mounting the (a) Elton John, (b) Sock Shop, (c) Burberrys and (d) Month in the Country at Harrods exhibitions by the Victoria and Albert museum.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: This is a matter for the museum's director and trustees. I will ask the director to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the level of financial support that has been received by the Victoria and Albert museum from (a) Sotheby's, (b) the Sock Shop, (c) Burberrys and (d) Harrods for exhibitions organised by the museum.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: This is a matter for the museum's director and trustees. I will ask the director to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many staff are to be made redundant at the Victoria and Albert museum following the proposed restructuring of staff.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: The management of the museum's staff is a matter for the director and trustees. I will ask the director to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what financial savings will result from the proposed restructuring of staff at the Victoria and Albert museum.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: The management of the museum's resources is a matter for the director and trustees. I will ask the director to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what discussions he has had in the past year about the restructuring of staff at the Victoria and Albert museum with (a) the director and (b) the chairman of the trustees.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: I have made it my practice to discuss the corporate plans of national museums and galleries with their directors and trustees. In this context, I was aware that the Victoria and Albert museum intended to review its organisational structure. The precise details of the review are a matter for the director and trustees.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what will be the cost of the Victoria and Albert museum's proposed redundancy programme (a) in the current year and (b) in each of the next 10 years.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: The management of the museum's resources is a matter for the director and trustees. I will ask the director to write to the hon. Member.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Incomes

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the average income per head in pounds sterling in 1978 and for the latest available year in (a) New Zealand, (b) Australia, (c) Korea and (d) the United States of America and each of the countries of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Lilley: Figures for gross domestic product per head in 1978 and 1987 coverted to United States dollars using purchasing power parities are given in the OECD publication "National Accounts Main Aggregates Volume 1 1960-1987" for all the countries in question except South Korea. The United States dollar/pound sterling exchange rate needed to convert the figures into pounds sterling are given in the same publication. Comparable figures for South Korea are not available.

HEALTH

Cook-Chill Food

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why the Department of Health's 1980 review of guidelines on pre-cooked chilled foods has not yet been published; when it is due to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department has obtained further expert advice to ensure that the revised guidelines, when issued, will be as up to date and effective as possible. We intend publishing the guidelines as soon as this advice has been fully considered.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether guidelines have been issued to environmental health officers as to whether the refrigerated cabinets in which cooked-chilled foods are stored, when displayed for sale, should be kept at a specified temperature and as to the frequency of inspection of such cabinets.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I expect to announce proposals for new temperature control requirements in the Food Hygiene Regulations very shortly. Environmental health officers will be responsible for enforcing any revised regulations in the same way as they are responsible for enforcing the current regulations, and no special advice has been issued.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that cooked-chilled food offered for sale is only in cabinets which have a visible thermometer reading not more than 3 deg. celsius.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I expect to announce proposals for new temperature control requirements in the Food Hygiene Regulations very shortly.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to specify a permitted shelf life for cooked-chilled foods.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 17 February to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) at column 423.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce new regulations governing storage temperatures for cook-chilled food in shops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 21 February 1989]: I expect to be able to announce proposals for new regulations very shortly.

Salmonella

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of the last five years the number of cases of salmonella infection in its various forms that have been reported and treated in (a) Trent regional health authority and (b) Yorkshire regional health authority by district health authority; and how many cases resulted in the death of the patient.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The figures on laboratory reports of salmonellosis (cases and excreters) that have been reported to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre from public health and hospital laboratories in the Trent and Yorkshire regional health authorities are as follows:

Year	Total Reports
	Yorkshire RHA		Trent RHA
1983	1,745	(6)	1,264	(4)
1984	1,826	(20)	1,374	(2)
1985	1,138	(4)	1,069	(5)
1986	1,539	(5)	1,311	(2)
1987	1,694	(6)	1,534	(4)

Notes:

The bracketed figures indicate the number of deaths where salmonella was registered as the underlying cause of death.

Reports of salmonellosis are not collected on a district health authority basis.

Child Sexual Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children on the priority which is given to research into child sexual abuse.

Mr. Mellor: Officials and the NSPCC meet regularly to discuss subjects of mutual concern, including research. In addition an official from the social services inspectorate attends the NSPCC's professional advisory committee which discusses research issues.

The Department is currently funding a feasibility study being conducted at the National Institute of Social Work in collaboration with the NSPCC to follow up of children who were placed on NSPCC child protection registers in 1981. An outline proposal concerning the evaluation of child protection registers is being considered by the Department. The Department and the NSPCC have also discussed how the NSPCC's register research programme, which has been a major source of information on the incidence of child abuse registrations and the characteristics of abusing families, can best complement the annual statistical survey which the Department now undertakes of children on local authority child protection registers.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times his Department has given evidence to inquiries involving child sexual abuse since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: Once, at the inquiry into child abuse in Cleveland, 1987.

Tamoxifen

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he intends to implement to encourage those consultants who do not use the drug Tamoxifen in the treatment of breast cancer to change their management of such cases in the light of the recent results from the Cancer Research Fund's cancer study unit.

Mr. Freeman: An individual patient's suitability for a particular drug treatment is a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctor concerned.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private residential homes and private nursing homes have been closed in England and Wales because they have failed to comply with local authority and Health Services registration requirements.

Mr. Mellor: Information about cancelled registrations has been notified to the Department only since 1 January 1985. Up to 31 December 1988, 75 residential care homes, 17 nursing homes and one home dually registered as a nursing home and residential care home have been notified.

Hospital Waste

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the disposal by Arrowe Park hospital of waste due for incineration by dumping in landfill sites.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the Wirral health authority that it has no knowledge of any clinical waste from Arrowe Park hospital, or clinical waste from elsewhere transported to the Arrowe Park incineration plant for incineration, which has subsequently been dumped on a landfill site. I hope that the hon. Member will pass any evidence that he has to the district health authority.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Dementia

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has concerning the incidence of Creutzfeldt-Jakob dementia.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally.

Hospital Referrals

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in each of the last five years have been refused referral to a hospital on the grounds that they do not live in the district in which the hospital is situated.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this information centrally. GPs are free to refer patients to the consultant they consider most appropriate; equally, the consultant is free to accept or refuse the referral. Under the arrangements set out in "Working for Patients", where money will follow patients across district boundaries, hospitals and their consultants should increasingly be willing to accept patients from other districts if they consider that the patient will benefit from their particular skills and services.

SCOTLAND

Arrestment of Earnings

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what circumstances the Lord Advocate acts for and on behalf of employers to assist the arrestment of earnings of people who have refused to pay fines for not registering for the poll tax.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In terms of the Crown Suits (Scotland) Act 1857 legal proceedings against any public department may be directed against the Lord Advocate. Accordingly, an arrestment seeking to arrest sums owing to an employee of a public department may be served on the Lord Advocate for and on behalf of such a department.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what approaches the Lord Advocate has had from sheriff officers to assist the arrestment of earnings of people who have refused to pay fines for not registering for the poll tax; and what action he intends taking.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Any arrestment served on the Lord Advocate in respect of any sums owing by a public department to an employee is a matter between the department, its employee and the person who has instructed the arrestment. Any arrestment so served would be considered to determine its validity. If valid, effect would be given to the arrestment by the public department concerned.

Community Service Orders

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many community service orders were issued by Scottish courts in each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of community service disposals made by courts in Scotland in the most recent five year period for which information is available is as follows:

	Number
1983	2,077
1984	2,553
1985	2,889
1986	3,453
1987	3,478

These figures cover both community service orders (section 1 of the Community Service by Offenders (Scotland) Act 1978) and community service as a condition of a probation order (section 7). The figure quoted for 1987 is provisional and subject to revision.

Kidney Dialysis

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients in Scotland not in receipt of dialysis are estimated to be in need of kidney dialysis; and what is the average waiting time for receiving dialysis.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All patients referred for treatment for end stage renal failure who, following clinical assessment, are considered likely to benefit from renal dialysis receive appropriate treatment when it is required.

Scottish Film Council

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish the policy review of the Scottish Film Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Copies of this review, along with the implementation plan authorised by the Secretary of State, are being placed in the Library. We have accepted the major recommendation of the review that the Scottish Film Council should be established as a fully independent non-departmental public body. The separate status of the Scottish Film Council will enable it better to secure private sector support and sponsorship for film in Scotland to supplement the substantial resources already made available by the Government. We are consulting those directly interested about the arrangements for achieving this with full effect from April 1990. I am confident that the new arrangements will provide a secure foundation for the maintenance and development of the distinctive Scottish contribution to film.

Public Sector Employees

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new (a) full-time and (b) part-time (i) teachers, (ii) policemen/policewomen, (iii) higher education lecturers, (iii) higher education researchers, (v) doctors, (vi) nurses and (vii) firemen and firewomen there were for each year since 1976.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The available information is given in the table. Comparable information for lecturers and researchers in higher education, or for part-time recruits is not available centrally.

[1] New entrants to teaching (excluding returners) in year ending 30 September.
[2] First appointments to the regular police service in Scotland.
[3] Recruitment to operational and control room staff, year ending 31 December. Peaks in 1978 and 1979 are a result of the introduction of a 42-hour week.
[4] Numbers successfully completing clinical training in year ending 31 July.
[5] Numbers of nurses completing registration following training. Figures for 1976-82 are for calendar years, those for 1983 are for January 1983 to March 1984, while those for 1984 onwards are for the financial years 1984-85 etc. No separate figures are available for the period January to March 1983. Figures from 1976 to 1983-84 include in-service nurses taking additional qualifications. Figures for 1984-85 onwards are for nurses qualifying for the first time. A significant proportion do not pursue nursing careers.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment using labour force survey data what has been the size of the total civilian labour force each year since 1979, what have been the numbers employed and the numbers unemployed each year and what has been the change each year both in numbers and in percentage terms.

Mr. Lee: Estimates of the civilian labour force are not directly available from the labour force survey (LFS).

Available estimates from the LFS of the economically active (that is, those in employment plus the unemployed) aged 16 and over in Great Britain, for LFS years since 1979, are as shown in the table.

Vacancies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the number of vacancies each year since 1979, both nationally and by region; and what has been the change each year in numbers and in percentage terms.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information which is also in the Library. The table shows the annual average number of unfilled vacancies notified to jobcentres nationally and by region for each year from 1980 to 1988, together with the change in numbers and percentage terms on the previous year. Figures on exactly the same basis are not available for 1979.

Claimants

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the destinations of those who left the unemployment claimants count.

Mr. Lee: Information on the destinations of those leaving the count is not available.

Civil Service Appeal Board

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions in 1986, 1987, and 1988 his Department has (a) accepted and acted upon or (b) not accepted or acted upon Civil Service appeal board's recommendations concerning his Department's unfair conduct in disciplinary matters.

Mr. Lee: The figures requested are as follows:

	Recommendation accepted and acted upon	Recomendation not accepted or acted upon
1986	1	nil
1987	no cases	no cases
1988	nil	3

Mr. Nellist (Coventry South East): To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Coventry South-East, 6 February, Official Report, column 510, what policy guidance his Department's headquarters management have on whether to accept or reject a unanimous recommendation of a Civil Service appeal board.

Mr. Lee: There is no formal policy guidance on this issue. A decision to reject a unanimous recommendation of a Civil Service appeal board can be taken only by the permanent head of the Department and each case is considered on its merits.

Tourism

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what value of section 4 grants have been made for each of the past five years in the west midlands.

Mr. Lee: Information on section 4 offers of assistance is not held on a district, metropolitan district or county basis. However, figures for the area covered by the heart of England, including the west midlands are as follows:

Retail Prices Index

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has yet received a report from the retail prices index advisory committee on the effect of the abolition of domestic rates on the construction of the index.

Mr. Fowler: I have today received a report from the committee recommending that the community charge should be included in the retail prices index when domestic rates are abolished. I will shortly be publishing the report and announcing the Government's decision on the recommendations.

Disabled People (Training)

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the progress of disabled people in employment training.

Mr. Fowler [holding answer 14 February 1989]: Twelve per cent. of new entrants to employment training are people with a long-term health problem or disability.

This is a significantly higher proportion than for any previous adult training programme, including the community programme. It shows that people with disabilities are just as able as others to benefit from training when it is geared flexibly to their individual needs.

Employers can now look very seriously at recruiting and training people with disabilities through ET. As the growth in the work force slows down, opportunities for people with disabilities to get and keep jobs will increase and they will be better able to realise their full potential. Employment training is helping people with disabilities to make the most of these opportunities.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners (Housing Benefit)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many retirement pensioners in the county of South Yorkshire (a) aged 60 to 79 years and (b) aged 80 years and over receive housing benefit showing this as a percentage figure in relation to all retired pensioners in the county of South Yorkshire; and what are the comparable national figures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received in the month of February, concerning his plans to replace the present system of board-and-lodging allowances for residents of hostels with housing benefit and income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A number of hon. Members, organisations and members of the public have made representations echoing those already made by the 346 organisations mentioned in my reply to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs Mahon) on 23 January at columns 417-18.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Deaths)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all deaths during 1987 and 1988 of persons detained in prison department establishments, stating in each case the age and sex of the inmate, the cause of death, the inquest verdict, whether the inmate was sentenced or on remand, the establishment where the inmate was detained, and whether the death occurred there or in an outside hospital.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information, together with the dates of the deaths, is as follows (all deaths took place at the establishment where the inmate was detained unless otherwise stated):

Prison Officers (Disputes)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many industrial disputes involving the withdrawal of prison officers' labour have been recorded by his Department since the introduction of fresh start in July 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Five.

Prison Services

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list services in adult prisons already wholly or partly contracted out to private operators.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following services in adult prisons are wholly or partly contracted out to private operators, but not necessarily at every prison.

Domestic services
Hair cutting
Laundry—dry cleaning
Maintenance and cleaning of specialist kitchen equipment
Office cleaning
Pest control
Refuse collection
Window and chimney cleaning

Catering services
Catering for inmates
Catering for staff
Inmates canteen

Medical services
Agency nurses
Consultant specialists, eg psychiatrists
Dental, chiropody and optical services
Doctors—locums

Administration
Disposal of confidential waste
Security services—collection of cash
Telephone operators

Transport
Conveyance of goods and farm produce
Conveyance of prisoners
Maintenance of vehicles

Prison estate
Maintenance and improvement to prison buildings and quarters
Maintenance of plant and equipment
New construction

Risley Remand Centre

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of apparent suicide, self injury, and self injury with apparent suicidal intent, have been recorded at Risley remand centre since 1 June 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There have been two apparent suicides at Risley since 1 June 1988 (one was subsequently confirmed as such at the inquest, and the other inquest has yet to be held). During the same period seven apparent attempts at suicide and one incident of self-injury which was not thought to be a suicide attempt have been reported.

Women Prisoners (Injuries)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide the latest figures on the number of self injuries inflicted by prisoners in each of the women's prisons in the most recent period for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following table gives the reported number of incidents of self-injury inflicted by female prisoners in the establishments concerned between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988, the most recent period for which figures are available:

	Number
Adults
Askham Grange	65
Bullwood Hall	33
Cookham Wood	5
Drake Hall	Nil
Durham	5
East Sutton Park	Nil
Exeter	Nil
Holloway	209
Low Newton	1
New Hall	19
Pucklechurch	43
Risley	3
Styal	46
Young Offenders
Bullwood Hall	67
Drake Hall	Nil
East Sutton Park	Nil
New Hall	6
Styal	34

Women's Prisons (Sanitation)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the women's prisons which do not have integral sanitation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The majority of women's establishments have access to night sanitation, but the following have neither integral sanitation nor access to night sanitation:

Bullwood Hall
New Hall
Pucklechurch
Risley (one unit)
Durham (one unit)
Low Newton (one cell block only)

As stated in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davis) on 20 February at columns 506-8, plans are in hand to introduce integral sanitation at Durham and Pucklechurch and to provide access to night sanitation by electronic unlocking at Bullwood Hall and New Hall. The possibility of providing access to night sanitation at the two remaining establishments is under consideration.

Prison Building

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken for building a prison from initial plans to completion.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The time between initial plans and completion varies so greatly that an average would be meaningless. The greatest variable is the time taken to obtain the necessary planning clearance, which can be anything from three months to two or three years. In the past, design has also taken up to three years and preparing the prison for use on completion, that is, commissioning, has taken up to one year. Taken with the average period of construction, which has been at least three years, this has meant that the minimum period between initial plans and completion has been about seven years.

We have made substantial improvements. The use of repeat designs at six prisons has reduced the design period by at least two years and should reduce the construction period by at least six months. The commissioning period has also been reduced to three months, so that, subject to planning clearance and the ability of the construction industry to keep to agreed contract times, a new prison can now be provided in about three and a half years from initial planning to completion. In addition, a new design brief for prisons will shortly be published which will form the basis for all future new prisons, greatly reducing both the time and cost of design in each case.

Naturalisation Applications

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many naturalisation applications made (a) two or more years ago and (b) three or more years ago are still outstanding.

Mr. Renton: On 16 February 1989, 3,447 applications for naturalisation made two or more years ago were still outstanding, of which 801 were made three or more years ago.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will increase the number of staff employed to handle naturalisation applications.

Mr. Renton: This has already been done, and will continue. The Liverpool nationality office (LNO) which opened last August now has 111 caseworking staff processing registrations. This has allowed nationality division staff in Croydon to concentrate almost exclusively on naturalisations. When the LNO has completed the registrations, it too will work on naturalisations, representing an additional increase of almost 65 per cent. in naturalisation caseworking capacity.

New Prison Facility, Everthorpe

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) who (a) designed, (b) will carry out the construction and (c) are the civil engineers for the new prison facility to be built alongside Her Majesty's youth custody centre, Everthorpe;

(2) who will staff the new prison facility to be built alongside Her Majesty's youth custody centre, Everthorpe;

(3) what will be the completed size, function and predicted cost of the new prison facility to be built alongside Her Majesty's youth custody centre, Everthorpe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Tenders have recently been received for the design and construction of a remand centre for 300 inmates next to Her Majesty's young offenders institution Everthorpe, and are being considered. Pending decisions on these tenders it is not possible to say what might be the cost of the centre, or who might design and build it. The scheme has been developed so that the centre could form an addition to the prison estate, and as such it would be staffed by members of the prison service.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied that full and adequate police protection is being given to Mr. Salman Rushdie; and whether such protection will continue so long as Mr. Rushdie considers it necessary to safeguard his life.

Mr. Hurd: Mr. Rushdie is receiving police protection, but it would not be sensible to give further details. The protection will continue for as long as it is considered necessary, having regard to all the circumstances.

Incitement to Murder

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the maximum penalties in United Kingdom law for those convicted of incitement to murder.

Mr. Hurd: The maximum penalty is life imprisonment.

Private Security Firms

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will seek to introduce legislation to control the activities of private security firms; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to improve the vetting and training procedures of private security firms.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 23 February 1989]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to questions by the hon. Members for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) and for Walsall, South (Mr. George) on 15 December at column 716.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list those companies who have tendered to monitor the pilot electronic surveillance system to be introduced for persons remanded on bail this summer; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the estimated cost per week of supervising a person remanded on bail but subject to electronic surveillance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 23 February 1989]: Tenders have not yet been received, and are not expected until April. It will not be possible before then to estimate the weekly costs involved.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to expand the use of electronic surveillance to sentenced prisoners, or as a condition of a probation or community service order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 23 February 1989]: We shall consider the case for changes in the law to provide for the use of electronic monitoring in the case of convicted offenders in the light of the outcome of the forthcoming trials and in the light of comments on the Green Paper, "Punishment, Custody and the Community".

Bail Hostels

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received since April 1988 about the need for more secure conditions in bail hostels in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 23 February 1989]: Probation service organisations have made representations that staffing levels at approved probation bail hostels should be increased to ensure the safety of hostel staff. A working party, set up to look into this matter, is due to report shortly. We look forward to receiving the report.

A consultation paper, "Bail Accommodation and Secure Bail Hostels", was issued on 13 February 1989. The paper discusses the purpose and use of existing accommodation for bailees and possible changes in hostel admission policies, rules and regimes. It also examines the concept of secure bail hostels for defendants who may be remanded in custody because of lack of suitable bail places. The closing date for responses is 9 May 1989.

Bolton Magistrates Court

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the revenue collected from fines imposed by the magistrates court in Bolton during each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 23 February 1989]: The available information relates to fines and fees collected by the magistrates court in Bolton for the last five years as follows:

1983-84	478,070·66
1984-85	447,050·88
1985-86	474,813·25
1986-87	528,324·77
1987-88	665,860·03

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of re-offences committed by juveniles since the introduction of the intermediate treatment projects as an alternative to custodial sentences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 23 February 1989]: Reliable information is not available. On behalf of the Government, the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders has been monitoring the Department of Health's intensive intermediate treatment initiative. Its final report, which should contain information about reconvictions, is expected later this year.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Explosions

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if his Department has made any estimates of the ionisation effects of a nuclear explosion on (a) the Backbone and (b) the Boxer microwave communication system;

(2) if (a) the Backbone and (b) the Boxer microwave communication system has been hardened against the ionisation effects of a nuclear explosion;

(3) if his Department has made any estimates of the electromagnetic pulse effect of a high-altitude nuclear explosion on the land-line elements of project UNITER;

(4) if his Department has made any estimates of the electromagnetic pulse effect of a high-altitude nuclear explosion on the defence communication network telephone circuits;

(5) if his Department has made any estimates of the electromagnetic pulse effect of a high-altitude nuclear explosion on the missile impact prediction computer system at Fylingdales BMEWS site;

(6) if his Department has made any estimates of the electromagnetic pulse effects of a high-altitude nuclear explosion on the VAX computers installed as part of the UKADGE air defence system;

(7) if the defence communication network, telephone circuits have been hardened against the electromagnetic pulse effects of a high-altitude nuclear explosion;

(8) if the VAX computers installed as part of the UKADGE air defence system are hardened against the electromagnetic pulse effects of a high-altitude nuclear explosion;

(9) if the land-line elements of project UNITER have been hardened against the electromagnetic pulse effects of a high-altitude nuclear explosion;

(10) if the missile impact prediction computer system at the Fylingdales BMEWS site is hardened against the electromagnetic pulse effects of a high-altitude nuclear explosion.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to comment on operational matters of this kind.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any studies have been carried out by his Department regarding the hardening of (a) the BBC low frequency transmitter at Droitwich, (b) the Inskip low frequency transmitter, (c) the Rugby very low frequency transmitter, (d) the Criggon very low frequency transmitter, (e) the Crimond low frequency transmitter and (f) the Anthorn very low frequency transmitter to resist the electromagnetic pulse effects of a high-altitude nuclear explosion.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: So far as the transmitters referred to in (b) to (f) are concerned, I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave the hon. Member on 10 February at columns 859-60. The transmitter at Droitwich is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Home Affairs.

US Communications Facilities

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton on 20 June 1985, Official Report, columns 431-32, if the United States communications facilities listed at Fort Murkle and RAF Thurso are two separate installations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The United States communications facility at Thurso is a high frequency transmitter station. That at Fort Murkle is an associated high frequency receiver and satellite communications station, which has to be sited separately for technical reasons.

US Forces

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the royal aircraft establishment Oakhanger was first made available for use by United States forces.

Mr. Neubert: The telemetry and command station at Oakhanger, which is controlled and managed by the Royal aircraft establishment at Farnborough, has been part of the continuing co-operation between the United Kingdom and the United States in the field of satellite communications since operations there began in 1969. I also refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my predecessor on 28 June 1984 at column 488 and on 9 December 1985 at column 544.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the microwave communications relay at Leafield was first made available for use by United States forces.

Mr. Neubert: June 1987.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the microwave communications relay at RAF Uxbridge was first made available for use by United States forces.

Mr. Neubert: In 1962.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date warehousing at Dunstable was made available for use by the United States Navy exchange.

Mr. Neubert: April 1980.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date planning permission for the proposed second echelon medical storage facility for United States forces to be constructed at Ridgewell was refused; and what information he has about the reasons for refusal.

Mr. Neubert: The Ministry of Defence was notified that planning clearance for the proposed second echelon medical facility at Ridgewell had not been given in June 1986. I understand that clearance was given on the grounds that the proposed development was contrary to the Essex structure plan, was an inappropriate development in a special landscape area and that road access was inadequate.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date (i) the Royal Aircraft Establishment airfield at Bedford, (ii) RAE Brawdy, (iii) RAF Cottesmore and (iv) RAF Scampton were allocated for use as collocated operating bases in support of United States forces.

Mr. Neubert: Formal agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States for the designation of RAF Bedford as a collocated operating base was reached in February 1982 and for the designation of RAF Brawdy, RAF Cottesmore and RAF Scampton in May 1987.

Luftwaffe

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any recent agreement has been reached concerning flying over Britain by the Luftwaffe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Services (Statutory Provisions)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 766, if he will give the reasons why it is necessary to preserve differences in the statutory provisions for the different services; and what consideration he has given as to whether joint service headquarters and organisations will make a policy of separate disciplinary acts for each service difficult to administer.

Mr. Neubert: While there are considerable areas of similarity in the service discipline Acts, the differences in the provisions are in the main a reflection of operational requirements. These requirements need to be taken into account in the interests of the timely administration of justice and the resolution of disciplinary problems. Where necessary, suitable arrangements can be made for joint service headquarters and organisations within the framework of the current legislation.

Nuclear Missiles

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, at the next North Atlantic Treaty Organisation summit in May, when the modernisation and replacement of the Lance short-range nuclear weapons capable missiles is discussed, he intends to raise the matter of the lack of fully interoperable communications systems between the British Army units providing these delivery systems and the United States units with custody of nuclear warheads for these missiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, at the next North Atlantic Treaty

Organisation summit in May, when the modernisation of short-range nuclear forces is discussed, he intends to raise the matter of the absence of fully interoperable communications systems between the British Army units providing 155 mm and 203 mm artillery systems and the United States' units with custody of nuclear shells for these systems.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what percentage of candidates for recruitment to the armed forces during the past 12 months have come from minority ethnic groups; and what number and what percentage of successful recruits came from those groups;

(2) whether he has any proposals to increase the number and percentage of ethnic minorities in armed forces.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the results of the first year of the ethnic monitoring of applicants and recruits to the armed forces which my predecessor reported to the House on 15 November 1988 at columns 621-22. It is our aim to increase the number of recruits from the ethnic minorities. We already try to direct our recruiting effort to all ethnic groups and we are considering what more can be done. To that end discussions have taken place with the Commission for Racial Equality and in the Home Secretary's advisory council on race relations and a contract has been placed with independent consultants to survey the attitudes of young people from the ethnic minorities towards the services, to examine the services' recruitment criteria and practices and to consider the effectiveness and value for money of a range of measures designed to increase recruiting from the ethnic minorities.

Recruitment

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will place in the Library a copy of the report concerning the enlistment of recruits, codenamed Marilyn. "Management and Recruitment in the Lean Years of the 90s".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The handling of the internal, classified report on "Manning and Recruiting in the Lean Years of the 90s," which has been given the acronym Marilyn, is still under discussion. But in due course we should be in a position to publish a document summarising the steps that we shall be taking to improve recruitment and retention. A copy of that document will be placed in the Library of this House.

Seismology

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts and agreements currently exist between his Department and universities and other institutions of higher education for research related to the verification of arms control treaties by seismology.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD has no contracts or agreements for seismology research. There are arrangements for the acquisition of seismological data for research purposes.

Naval Visits

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the details which are available of specific visits by ships and submarines of other countries' navies since 1 January 1988 giving the date of arrival, date of departure, details of moorings and country of origin.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information that the hon. Member requires is not readily available. I will write to her in due course.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report a list of Royal Navy vessels which have visited the port of London since 1 January 1988, giving the date of arrival, date of departure and details of moorings.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Sandpiper	17-21 March 1988	Tower Pier
Peterel	17-21 March	Tower Pier
Jersey	26-28 March	HMS Belfast
Ariadne	20-25 April	HMS Belfast
London	28 April-4 May	HMS Belfast
Hunter	20-27 May	Tower Pier
Sheffield	25-30 May	HMS Belfast
Onslaught	1-6 June	HMS Belfast
Brocklesbury	10-15 June	HMS Belfast
Bronington	23-27 June	HMS Belfast
Brocklesbury	1-7 July	Tower Stairs Pier
Apollo	8-12 July	HMS Belfast
Redpole	16-22 September	HMS Belfast
Mentor	17-22 September	HMS Belfast
Wilton	2-7 December	HMS Belfast
Cornwall	18-24 January 1989	HMS Belfast

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report, the details of planned visits in 1989 to the port of London by military vessels of the royal and other navies giving date of arrival, date of departure, details of moorings and country of origin.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our policy to comment on future movements of Royal Navy vessels, nor would it be appropriate to comment on the movements of vessels of other navies.

Courts Martial

Mr. Ashley (Stoke on Trent South): To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, how many courts martial took place during 1988; in how many cases there was an acquittal; and in how many of these the member of the forces was told that there was no case to answer.

Mr. Neubert: There were 976 courts martial held in 1988, of which 101 resulted in a acquittal. As it can take up to 12 weeks to confirm sentence, those figures may not represent the final total for the year. It is not possible to provide the additional information requested by the right hon. Member without disproportionate cost.

Low Flying

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the speed, height and purpose of eight low-level flights by jet aircraft over East Linton, East Lothian, between 11.15 am and 11.50 am on Friday 10 February;

(2) if he will make a statement on the speed, height and purpose of the low-level flight by two jet aircraft over Roadlands hospital, Haddington, at 10.5 am on Tuesday 21 February.

Mr. Neubert: Military aircraft are authorised as a matter of routine to carry our low-level flying training in the areas mentioned at heights no lower than 250 ft and at speeds normally not exceeding 450 knots.

Challenger 2

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence further to the reply by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 13 January, Official Report, column 783, whether a contract has now been signed with Vickers Defence Systems to allow it to demonstrate that the Challenger 2 mk 2 main battle tank can meet the required specification, delivery time and cost.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Conway) on 23 January 1989 at column 453.

Tern hill Barracks

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what civilian activities take place at Tern hill barracks; when those activities take place; whether any facilities are provided for a gliding club; and what security arrangements are made for the civilian activities.

Mr. Neubert: No civilian activities take place on a regular basis at Clive barracks, Tern hill. Civilian sports clubs have been invited to compete against the resident battalion infrequently. On such occasions, members of the latter have escorted members of the former throughout such visits.

RAF Tern hill, a totally separate organisation whose buildings and real estate abut onto Clive barracks, is the venue for weekend gliding activities. These sessions come under the umbrella of No. 632 volunteer gliding school. All instructors and students are reserve/cadets members of the RAF, the only civilian element in these activities being some civilian instructors who accompany cadets who visit RAF Tern hill at weekends. All RAF Tern hill personnel and visiting glider students reach the airfield through Clive barracks. Their identities are checked on arrival before they are escorted through Clive barracks to the point of entry on to the airfield, a crash gate in the southern perimeter fence which is the dividing line between the barracks and the airfield.

The only other civilians who enter Clive barracks on a regular basis are those who work in the camp and those who deliver goods or provide services. The former categories are subject to normal civil service vetting procedures and the latter group are escorted throughout the period they are within the camp.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Consumer Consultation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what institutional arrangements his Department has for consulting consumers.

Mr. Ryder: Consumer committees for Great Britain and for England and Wales are established under the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958. Their role is to consider and report to Ministers on the effect on consumers of the operation of marketing schemes approved under the Act. Schemes currently apply to milk, potatoes and wool and are operated by the marketing boards.

In addition, there are Acts such as the Food Act 1984 which require Ministers to consult organisations representative of interests which might be substantially affected by proposed secondary legislation. Consumers are consulted in all appropriate cases.

Consumer organisations have, in addition, been fully involved in the extensive consultations on the review of Food Act 1984. Twenty-eight consumer organisations and 14 health organisations have been consulted.

Nitrates

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow 16 February, Official Report, column 474, if he will set out the various sources of his research advice on nitrates in water.

Mr. MacGregor: I receive research advice from a wide variety of sources including ADAS, Agricultural Food and Research Council centres such as Rothamsted, and the Water Research Centre.

Food Research Institute, Langford

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received to retain funding for the food research institute at Langford, near Bristol since the recent concern regarding salmonella and listeria in food; what his present intentions are for this institute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: We have received a number of representations from interested individuals concerning the funding of the research work on the manipulation of microbial flora of the gut of young chickens at the Agricultural and Food Research Council's food research institute at Langford. After an extensive review of all food microbiology research being funded by the Ministry, it was decided that this particular research was clearly at the stage of take-up and development by the poultry industry. The technique is already being applied on a trial basis by at least two British companies. In addition, an overseas company has applied for an import licence. The funds released are to be diverted to other important areas of the Ministry's extensive programme of research into microbiological food safety.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science is responsible for research councils but I understand that directors of the AFRC's eight institutes have been asked to produce long-term plans for reorganising their activities on to a smaller number of sites. The institute of food research will present to the AFRC options for the restructuring of its three laboratories on to two sites. The council will then make a decision based on a detailed analysis and appraisal of these options and taking full account of the scientific programme of the institute.

Cheese

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he will make a statement on the proposed banning of the sale of cheeses made with unpasteurised milk.

Mr. Ryder: There is no proposal to ban the sale of cheeses made with unpasteurised milk. However, as part of the consultation process on the proposal to ban the sale of untreated milk, I shall be seeking comments as to whether cheeses made from such milk should be labelled to make this clear.

Potatoes

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the total United Kingdom consumption of potatoes for the latest available period;

(2) what is the total United Kingdom consumption of imported potatoes for the latest available period;

(3) what is the total United Kingdom consumption of home-grown potatoes for the latest available period.

Mr. MacGregor: United Kingdom consumption of potatoes for 1987-88 (June-May) was as follows:

	Thousand tonnes
Home grown[1]	5,684
Imported	1,047
Total consumption[2]	6,731

[1] Supplies recorded as moving into human consumption.
[2] Including potato products.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what date his action to ban the use of animal by-products in cattle food became operative; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action his Department has taken to enforce his ban on the use of animal by-products in the manufacture of cattle feed;

(3) whether he will introduce regulations permanently banning the use of animal by-products in the manufacture of feed for cattle and other ruminants.

Mr. MacGregor: The use of ruminant-derived protein material in ruminant feedstuffs has been prohibited since 18 July last year. The ban will continue unless processing methods sufficient to destroy the agent which causes BSE are developed and widely available. Ministry officials are empowered to take and test samples of feedstuffs if they have reason to believe that the law is being broken, but there is no evidence to suggest that this is so.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has made any estimate of the incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy which goes unreported.

Mr. MacGregor: There is no evidence available to suggest to me that farmers are failing to report suspected cases of BSE; indeed, the number of cases being notified to the Ministry indicates a high level of co-operation from the farming industry.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list those intiatives he has taken to date to research into the epidemiology of bovine spongiform encephalopathy;

(2) whether his Department possesses any information on the vertical transmission of bovine spongiform encephalopathy;

(3) whether his Department has taken any steps to trace the progeny of dairy or beef cattle subsequently found to be suffering from bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. MacGregor: The Ministry has initiated research to obtain descriptive epidemiological information about BSE, to examine the role of meat and bone meal as the source of BSE, and to determine whether cattle-to-cattle transmission can take place. Progeny of affected animals are being monitored as part of this study.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information he has about the total volume of milk from bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected cattle, banned from sale for human consumption;

(2) whether he has any plans to introduce a compensation scheme for milk from bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected cows.

Mr. MacGregor: Animals affected by BSE produce little or no milk. Information about the total volume is not available. There are no plans to introduce a compensation scheme for milk.

Forestry Commission (Sporting Rights)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is his practice to require the Forestry Commission to secure income from the letting of all sporting rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: It is the practice of the Forestry Commission to let the sporting rights over land under its management where this is compatible with forestry operations and public access, and to secure a market rental for such rights.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what revenues accrue to the Forestry Commission in England from the issuing of (a) licences for fox hunting and (b) letting of other sporting rights.

Mr. Ryder: The Forestry Commission receives no income from licences for fox hunting. In the year ended 31 March 1988 it received almost £160,000 from letting other sporting rights. In addition, about £48,000 was realised from day permits for shooting and fishing.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will issue instructions to the Forestry Commission to amend its earth stoppers code, so that badger setts shall not be subject to any interference by fox hunters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I see no reason to issue such instructions to the Forestry Commission. Its earth stoppers code is designed so as to prevent undue interference with badger setts.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place a copy of the Forestry Commission's "Authority to Hunt" document in the Library.

Mr. Ryder: It is the Forestry Commission's policy to allow fox hunting over land where it has been traditionally carried out. Where it is considered appropriate, written permission is given and a copy of the form of permission used in the Forestry Commission's east England conservancy is being placed in the Library.

Food Additives

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many additives appear on his Department's list of food additives including flavourings and colours at present in use in Britain; and whether he has any plans to add to this list.

Mr. Ryder: There are about 300 additives, including colours listed in United Kingdom regulations and about 3,000 flavourings in use which are subject to the provisions of the 1984 Food Act. I have recently circulated proposals on preservatives and emulsifiers and stabilisers which would add three new substances and delete four substances from the permitted list. New regulations will also be required to implement the EC directive on extraction solvents. In addition, I have announced our intention to ban the use of mineral hydrocarbons in food as soon as possible. Applications to use new food additives may be reserved from time to time and would be subject to careful evaluation by two independent expert advisory committees, the food advisory committee and the Department of Health's committee on toxicity.

Official Secrets

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the advisory committees coming under his Department and concerned in some way with public health which are covered by the Official Secrets Act whose members are required to sign the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Ryder: It is our normal practice to require members of the steering group on food surveillance to sign the Official Secrets Acts declaration.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Fisheries Council in Brussels on 23 February.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I attended the Council of Fisheries Ministers in Brussels on 23 February 1989.

The Council agreed reduced tariff import quotas for 1989. These come into operation on 1 April. The total quantities are below last year's levels and some tariffs are at a rather higher level, reflecting changes in supplies and prices. I am satisfied that the final agreement maintains a good balance between the interests of consumers, processors and catchers.

The Council had a useful first discussion of a proposal to provide Community financing to improve member states' control and enforcement arrangements.

The Council agreed to accept an offer to fish an extra 4,000 tonnes of cod from Greenland, but on the understanding that this was in accordance with and not outside the EC-Greenland agreement so as not to prejudice EC claims for fishing rights at Greenland.

The Council also agreed the approach to a possible EC-USSR framework agreement. The Commission will be undertaking discussions with the USSR and any exchange of fishing rights is likely to be confined initially to the Baltic sea.

White Mineral Oil

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he received a report from Shell outlining the dangers of white mineral oil in food.

Mr. Ryder [holding reply 22 February 1989]: This issue has been the subject of extensive investigations by the joint expert committee of the WHO/FAO on food additives, the committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment and the food advisory committee. Ministers received the advice of the food advisory committee on 2 February this year and announced their intentions to Parliament on 9 February.

Wood Crops

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the European Community sources of grant or loan or technical assistance for the conversion of low-grade agricultural land into the production of arable wood crops;

(2) what European Community assistance is available for farmers or landowners who seek to plant arable wood crops for cropping as a fuel feedstock and for conversion to electricity.

Mr. Ryder: As part of the set-aside scheme, which is a national scheme implementing European Community legislation, farmers and landowners may plant trees for short rotation energy coppice under the non-agricultural use option. The rate of premium is £150 per hectare (£130 per hectare in less-favoured areas).

There are also provisions in Council regulations (EC) 797/85 as amended for a Community contribution towards member states' expenditure on afforestation of agricultural land subject to various conditions. There are no specific provisions for Community aid towards production specifically of crops for fuel.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what help he will give to farmers or landowners who seek to plant arable wood crops for cropping as a fuel feedstock and for conversion to electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 22 February 1989]: Assessment of the technical and economic feasibility of using such arable crops for fuel feedstocks or for conversion to electricity is primarily a matter for the Secretary of State for Energy. However, under the set-aside scheme introduced by my Department last year, aid is available for the planting of trees as short rotation energy coppice on land taken out of arable use.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Paraguay

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will make representations to the new President of Paraguay about the need for the forthcoming elections to (i) permit all political parties to participate, and (ii) provide sufficient time for parties other than the Government to organise and campaign.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 10 February, the Spanish ambassador in Asuncion expressed on behalf of the Twelve to the new Paraguayan Foreign Minister our hope that the necessary conditions would be created to permit a genuinely democratic process, and that the promised elections would include all the political forces in the country. We shall continue to encourage the Paraguayan authorities to facilitate conditions necessary for free and fair elections.

Fiji

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government have received a request from the present Government of Fiji for assistance in drafting a constitution for that country.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government of Fiji have made such a request. We have agreed to recruit a constitutional expert to provide independent advice to the Government of Fiji.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government have made any representations to the Government of Fiji, regarding the drafting of the constitution.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have kept in touch with the Government of Fiji and constantly encouraged them to return Fiji to parliamentary government on the basis of a constitution acceptable to a majority of all sections of the community.

Libya (Weapons)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his NATO colleagues about common measures among all members of the Alliance to prevent Semtex explosives and shoulder-launched anti-aircraft missiles being supplied from Libya to the Irish Republican Army.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to institute common action by all member countries of the European Economic Community to prevent European companies from supplying to Libya Semtex explosives, anti-aircraft missiles and equipment or technology that can be used to build chemical weapons; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1986 EC member states agreed a series of measures against Libya including a ban on the export of arms and other military equipment; these are still in force. On 20 February 1989 the EC adopted a regulation controlling the export of eight chemical weapon precursors. Discussion continues among the Twelve about possible further measures to counter chemical weapon proliferation in Libya and elsewhere.

Background Briefs

2. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to whom in the United Kingdom he makes available his Department's background briefs.

Mr. Waldegrave: FCO background briefs are produced for use overseas. However, a small number are distributed in the United Kingdom, principally to members of both Houses of Parliament, journalists, academics, specialists in certain areas, certain institutions and libraries.

Members of the general public may obtain copies through their local public library from the British library lending division.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 147

SESSION 1988–89

13th February–24th February 1989

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
